The Citizen, a right wing daily that was started with government funds, observed in an editorial that Mr. Crocker's comment on the insurgent movement "may explain why his nomination as Assistant Secretray of State is being opposed by a group of conservative Congressmen."

Told at the airport of Prime Minister Botha's reservations, Mr. Crocker did not respond directly but said he was satisfied with his reception. "It is hard to be disappointed when one has five-and-one half hours of conversation with your Foreign Minister and Minister of Defense, he said.

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST OUR OWN WEAKNESSES

structure to get more funding for themselves. Projects of all kinds mushroomed, until today there may be as many as 10,000 former militants whose livelihood depends on such projects. These careerists are constantly harping on the theme that crime by blacks against blacks is caused by external factors, such as poor housing, lack of jobs, lack or recreation, police brutality, etc. Because their own livelihood depends upon exploiting the real grievances of blacks against the system, they refuse to take a political position against crimes by blacks, thus lending a certain legitimacy to the new breed of criminals.

In addition, by talking so much about black victimization by racism and saying nothing about the responsibility and capacity of blacks to make choices, they are actually increasing the sense of powerlessness and desperation in black street youth. Thus they reinforce the tendency which exists in every oppressed people to a slave mentality, i.e., the mentality which envies the life of the master, looks to the master rather than to oneself for solutions, and gives up at the slightest excuse.

In this defeatist atmosphere all kinds of escapism and opportunism flourish. Many young people turn to drugs to escape reality; others build fantasies about going to Africa or destroying the system in one big shootout. And even more have begun to say, "if whites are determined to wipe us out, then it's everyone for himself and the devil take the hindmost."

So the jails and prisons fill with black young people (even though only an estimated 2. of those committing crimes are caught and convicted). These are then hailed as "political prisoners" by black leaders, despite the fact that they have been convicted of anti-social crimes, usually against other blacks. This in turn encourages the 98. who were not caught and convicted to continue preying on the community.

This is the new situation with which we must grapple, knowing that it is going to get worse in the next period as the crisis in energy and all basic commidities spreads. Crime is going to increase, the criminals are going to get bolder. If we insist that the main reason for their crimes is police brutality or racist hiring and firing, as many black so-called leaders are sure to do, then it will mean that we have not learned anything from the very painful experiences of the past five years. It will mean, in fact, that we have given up all hope for the future, that we have reconciled ourselves to accepting this barbarism for the rest of our lives, and are only looking for scapegoats on whom we can blame our miseries.

The black movement started out in the belief that racism was the only contradiction in this society, and that if it could only win equal opportunity for blacks to advance in the system, blacks and whites would end up equal. In the course of two decades of social practice, it has become clear that even if many black individuals are promoted to high positions in politics or other institutions of the system the great majority of blacks remain at the bottom of American society where they have been kept historically in the development of this country. It has become clear that racism is not the sole contradiction but that it is inseparable from the capitalist contradictions resulting form the pursuit of economic development regardless of the expense in human and political development. And it has become clear that as long as blacks accept the capitalist philosophy of upward mobility for the individual and for one ethnic group at the expense of others, all relations inside the black ocmmunity and within this country as a whole will continue to degenerate.

We, then, are the ones who must change ourselves in order to change the system. We must rid ourselves of capitalist values and the capitalist outlook so that we can get rid of the capitalist system. Otherwise we are still looking to the system which has oppressed us to the force which liberates us. That is the slave mentality of a politically passive or politically unawakened people.

In the words of the late Amilcar Cabral, one of the greatest revolutionary leaders in this period of great revolutionary leaders, we must now undertake "the most difficult of all struggles , the struggle against our own weaknesses - no matter what difficulties the enemy may create."

Civil Rights Violations

Plaintiff Patrick Paul, in fear of the hostility the defendant police officer was exhibiting, retreated from the door further into his apartment.

At the same time a number of other police oficers entered the plaintiff's residence throuth another door.

At least half a dozen or more defendant police officers encircled the plaintiff and their roommates.

At this time a number of defendant police officers started yelling at the plaintiffs and their roommates as to whether or not they had any respect for the dead.

The plaintiffs and their roommates did not respond to these statements.

Instead, the plaintiffs just looked at the defendant police officers in amazement, not understanding what the defendants were screaming about.

Plaintiff Patrick Paul then asked, "What do you mean•"

At this time Plaintiff Patrick Paul was forcefully approached by one defendant police officer who stated, "Go ahead and yell police brutality, I'm not no cop." and proceeded to violently strike the plaintiff across the face.

Within seconds another defendant police officer approached the plaintiffs' roommate Allison Sapier and stated, "There's that red cocksucker now."

He then viciously grabbed him, one hand choking him by the throat, the other hand clutching the flesh of his face, and threatened him by yelling, "You want to go out that fucking window now•"

He then proceeded to drag Allison Sapier to the window, at which time another police officer approached the defendant and pulled him away form Allison Sapier.

During this time anotherone of the defendant police was shouting toward the plaintiffs and their roommates, "Scumbag," "Scum of the earth", and "If you don't get out of town by sundown we're going to kill you."

Durmg the same time another defendant police officer asked the plaintiffs, "How would you like it if you were buring one of your brothers down there and we were yelling out the window•"In response to the questions the plaintiffs protested that they did not understand.

Plaintiff David Paul repeatedly stated, "Hey, you're making a mistake, we weren't shouting out the window."

At this time Plaintiffs heard other defendant police officers coming up the stairway and heard them say, "Come on, let's take them."

Upon entering the apartment, several of this large number of new defendant police officers appeared in an intoxicated state, exhibiting glazed eyes, slurred words, and a strong odor of alcohol.

During this period of time, the plaintiffs David Paul was forcefully handcuffed.

As defendant polcie officers dragged David Paul towards the door, they viciously and brutally struck him about the face and body.

While being beaten, Plaintiff David Paul exclaimed, "What are you hitting us for, we are not resisting arrest, stop beating us."

At all time herein the defendants acted illegally by placing the plaintiffs under arrest without a warrant and without probable cause or other legal cause or excuse.

At all times herein, the plaintiffs did not resist the defendant police officer in any way, even going os far as to not defend themselves for fear that they would suffer physical abuse from the defendants.

While plaintiffs were being pushed out the door and down the stairs, another defendant police officer viciously pulled Plaintiff David Paul's hair so as to actually pull out bunches of hair.

On the way down the stairs, Plaintiffs, although they showed no resistence, were continually punched, and their heads were brutally and repeatedly slammed against the bannister by defendant police officers, while other defendant police officerss continually and viciously beat them about the ribs, head, and back.

While the Plaintiffs were being taken down the stairs, other defendant police officers remained behind, ransacking the plaintiff's apartment by tearing down posters from the walls, pulling down sacred religious artifacts.

Plaintiffs and their roommates were taken to the police station, where they were booked, at which time they were told by a defendant police officer that he was told to book them slowly.

After the plaintiffs were booked, Plaintiffs Patrick Paul and David Paul and their roommates were each placed in an indivisual cell, and one of the defendant police officers who had previously participated in the assault and battery of the plaintiffs and their roommates walked past the cell, shouting, "Shithead, shithead, shithead,", turned, and proceeded back along the line of cells, pointing and shouting into each, "Red scum, red scum, red scum." Turining again, he walked along the line of cells and shouted into each such epithets as "red cocksucker", "red bastard," etcetra.

During this time, other defendant police officers were laughing and talking about busting open the head of the plaintiffs' roommates by banging it from wall to wall.

While walking out of the police station on the way to court, while in the police garage, the plaintiffs and their roommates were told by one of the defendant police officers, Lieutenant Sullivan, that they were "lucky it wasn't night time," because if it were, the defendant police officers would be "wheeling them to the morgue" instead of taking them to court.

Plaintifs were charged with violating Mass. Gen. Law Chapter 272, section 42.

Pursuant to the telephone call made by the plaintiffs to the Algonquin Indian Association, Plaintiff Chief Red Blanket (a.k.a. Charles Wixon) appeared at the Brockton Police Station to inquire as to the charges against the four young men and whether or not he could aid them.

While at the police station he was informed by one of the Brockton police officers that he had better watch out or he would lose his scalp.

Upon being informed that the plaintiffs and their roommates wer already at the Courthouse, Chief Red Blanket went to said, courthouse, whereupon he was presented with an outdated arrest warrant and place under arrest by Defendant Ronald Roe.

After the arrest was made, Plaintiff Chief Red Blanket was imprisoned, at which time he was subjected to further verbal abuse and mental harassment in such statement as. "Brave, let's see how brave you are now," and "We already got the four braves and now we've got the chief."

Plaintiff Red Blanket was later released with no formal charges brought against him.

Plaintiffs Patrick Paul and David Paul were eventually tried, on May 20, 1980, by a jury of their peers and were found not guilty.

On numerous occasions during the course of the trail,Defendants Dennehy, Vaugn, McClaren and Sullivan did knowingly give false testimony under oath.

On occasions prior to the incidents alleged in the above paragraph, James Cody, indivisually and in his official capacity as Chief of Police, and other officials of the City of Brockton knew or should have known that Brockton police officers used excessive force in the line of duty.

On occasions prior to the incidents alleged in the above paragraph, James Cody, indivisually and in his oficial capacity as Chief of Police, and other officials of the City of Brockton , indivisually and in their official capacities, knew or should have known that Brockton police falsely arrested, falsely imprisoned, verbally abused and harassed, and otherwise denied citizens their statutotry and constitutional rights.

At all times herein the defendants kneew that the plaintiffs were American Indians

This case arouses serious implication for all Third World peoples. Due to cuts in legal service aids, it makes it harder to prosecute cases pertaining to police brutality. This leaves many poor and Third World people very vulnerable to police brutality. Lets study the above case. Through the actions perpetulated by the Medford police, the plaintiffs were deprived of their right to be freee from physical abuse, coersion and intimidation in violation of 5th and 14th Amendments of the United States Constitution. The plaintiffs were deprived of their right to be free from physical abuse, coersion and intimidation in violation of the 5th and 14th Amendments of the U.S. Consitiution. The plaintiffs were deprived of their right to the due process of law also in vilation of the 5th and 14th Amendments of the US Constitution. It is also a fragrant violation of the Massachusetts Civil Rights Act.

Consequently it is also a violation of 1st, 4th, 6th, and 8th Amendments.

These are fundamental Constitutional*rights* That apply to *all*Americans and residents of this country. In the light of conservative Burger Court and greater call for "law and order", infringement of civil liberties exemplified by police brutality like that which happened to Chief RED Blanket, Patrick and David Paul would probably continue.

Unless Third World people actively pursue cases like this, there is greater danger that our rights would be undermined. It is important for us to always keep in mind our right under the Constitution and existence of such organizations as Am. Civil Liberties Union, National Lawyer's Guild, Conference of Black Lawyers, and the Asian-American Lawyer's Organization.

Also Attorney Fee Act of 1976 allows us to sue the police without suffering financial cost in the event of having lost the case.

Amherst selectmen vote to monitor cable TV

By JOHANNA HOSOM
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to create a five-person committee to monitor the Times Mirror Company's area cable vision installation, scheduled to include the University of Massachusetts campus by July, 1982.

Thomas Ashwell, Bonnie Isman and Michael Sullivan Jr. were selected. The other two members of the new committee are still to be chosen.

The board is concerned that an increase fee will be charged by the Times Mirror to cover the expenses of expanding the system purchased from Pioneer Valley Cablevision.

The original license required Pioneer Valley Cablevision to provide a 20 channel system by July 1, 1982, as well as a complete renovation of the present system. The proposal by the Times Mirror is for a 36 or even a 52 channel system for the Amherst area.

The University of Massachusetts is interested in bringing cablevision on campus and was included in the increased service. The expansion by Times Mirror would allow the development of a separate telecommunications system for the University.

The University originally requested the Times Mirror to provide capital and initial operating costs. An inquiry is being made by the town to see if the company will give the University an outright grant.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward said that this might be in the interest of the company if the project proves successful as it would aid the company's attempts to expand in other places.

Selectwoman Edith Wilkinson said that it has not been specified by Times Mirror as to whether a fee increase would be unavoidable with the expanded system. She added that the possibility of a mandatory fee from University students even if they do not choose to receive cablevision has not been determined.

Police still investigate Southwest stabbings

By M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police are still investigating the alleged stabbing of two UMass students, Friday morning in front of George Washington Tower said Associate Director of Public Safety Phillip J. Cavanaugh.

Richard E. Wilson III, 20, of Washington Tower was arrested Friday for the alleged stabbing of G. Denrick Reichard, 19, of 316 Coolidge dormitory, who, police said, received three stab wounds and is in satisfactory condition at Cooley Dickinson Hospital. Michael D. Chenelle, 21, of Beta Kappa Phi fraternity, received ten stitches at University Health Services for a stab wound in the head, said Cavanaugh.

Chenell said he was stabbed in the head with a shrimp fork during the fight.

The fight ensued shortly after a man not identified by police, walked through Southwest with a woman and approached two other men after allegedly hearing them say something about the lights or power being shut off at a fraternity party, Cavanaugh said.

The man allegedly asked the men their names and the fight began, Cavanaugh said.

At that point the woman called Beta Kappa Phi where the man was a pledge and Barbara Bush—on being a vice-president's wife

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Barbara Bush, wife of Vice-President George Bush told an audience of 500 last night that her life has radically changed since her husband began his political career some years ago. Bush told the Smith College audience that she has traveled widely and met thousands of interesting people in her role as Bush's wife.

Bush said that of all the jobs her husband has had she like his being the head of the CIA the least. "George had shared all his jobs (Congressman and U.N. Ambassador) with me and a large part of this job was done without me," said Mrs. Bush.

Bush, a former Smith student said that in the three and a half months since the inauguration she and her husband have done many exciting things. "We were lucky enough to be chosen to go to the hostage return and if you never did another thing in your life you would have been happy to do that," said Bush, speaking of one of the many events she and the Vice-President have attended.

Another event the Bush's attended was the return of the Space Shuttle astronauts. "After George had greeted the astronauts he let me talk to them, and that was exciting " said Bush.

Bush said that in her role as the Vice-President's wife she had "the power to do a lot of good." Bush said she felt she should choose a special project ot concentrate her efforts on.

"My project had to not cost the government a lot of money, it couldn't be controversial and it had to do good for most Americans—so I decided to help in the battle to fight illiteracy," said Mrs. Bush.

Bush, who left Smith in her sophomore year to marry George Bush, said that she has also dedicated much of her time to volunteerism.

Bush is also president of the Senate Ladies. "We used to roll bandages for the Red Cross...hut now we make puppets for children, layettes for indigent families and afghans for veterans," said Bush.

CIA critic charges hostage-CIA connection

By JIM KANE
Collegian Staff

John Kelly, a prominent critic of the CIA and its activities, said he will present documentation at a press conference today that a former U.S. hostage in Iran worked with the CIA.

Kelly will hold his conference in room 917 of the Campus Center, at 5:00 p.m., 1½ hours before an address by former hostage Victor Tomseth.

Kelly said, "I will present an argument for exposing his (Tomseths's) CIA connection." He claims Tomseth worked with the CIA on "insurgency programs in Iran and previously in Thailand."

Tomseth's advance knowledge that plans to admit the Shah of Iran to the U.S. would likely result in the embassy takeover will also be documented, said Kelly.

These claims are based on "Tomseth's basic biography, and a couple of government documents," Kelly said.

A statement by the Ad Hoc Coalition on the CIA, said, "The career of Victor Tomseth closely parallels American intelligence activities of the 1970's, and has led to speculation that he was (or is) a CIA operative."

Kelly is an editor of the magazine CounterSpy, which he said "investigates the covert and often criminal operations of U.S. intelligence agencies." He is also the author of The CIA in America, and chairs the Intelligence Study Group of the American Political Science Association.

Kelly will also speak in Thompson 106 tomorrow at 4 p.m. on "The CIA in America," and will be part of a panel discussing "The CIA in El Salvador," in Mahar Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

Boston council adopts rescue plan

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON —The Boston City Council, facing a court-imposed deadline to rescue the penniless city public school system, adopted yesterday a financial package that members conceded probably would be vetoed by Mayor Kevin H. White because it would subject him to recall.

Their prediction, if accurate, means that the future of the 64,000-pupil school system will be decided today by a Superior Court judge.

The council's complicated financial deal included a provision allowing voters to recall elected city officials. Several members said White had vowed to kill a package that included such a provision.

"He (White) understands that he is very vulnerable," said Councilor Rosemary Sansone, who voted for the recall proposal. "The mayor has said if this is included, he won't sign it and the matter will be decided by the courts."

When students were dismissed for their spring break last Thursday, officials said schools could not reopen as scheduled next Monday unless $30 million is added to the now-depleted $210 million school budget for 1980-81.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge Thomas Morse gave the council and the mayor until today to work out a plan to keep the schools open. And if no agreement is reached, the judge vowed to resolve the crisis himself.

Cohen says towns may override 2½

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — While the Legislature's Taxation Committee is likely to recommend a bill allowing a speedy local override of Proposition 2½, the override possibilities may still be so limited as to ensure local budget cuts, the committee's chairman said yesterday.

Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, also said in a telephone interview that his panel is preparing a "tax reform" bill which would increase state revenue as a "tradeoff, dollar for dollar, on the property tax reduction" in the second year of Prop 2½.

Cohen said details of this bill haven't yet been worked out, but probably will include a "broadening of the base of the sales tax to professional services, and making it more general than we presently have." Food, clothing, prescriptions and services now are exempt from the 5 percent sales tax.

Cohen said his committee will decide either late this week or early next on the 2½ override.

Legislature studies King's spending additional funds

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The House Ways and Means Committee questioned yesterday why the state is spending $12,500 to study a turtle. However, the panel declined to inquire why Gov. Edward J. King wants $10,000 more for his personal expenses.

The selective scrutiny came when administration officials made their case for a $19.2 million deficiency budget to take care of extra state expenses through June.

The largest chunk of the package — about $6 million — is for the state's various mental health programs, but the governor's staff provided few details on how the money would be spent.

The item that appeared to attract the most interest was a proposed $64,607 addition to the state's wildlife management account.

Environmental Affairs Secretary John Bewick replied that the study of the Plymouth red-bellied turtle was needed because the turtle is one of the state's few endangered species.

Sifting through 50 other money requests, the committee was silent when it came to Gov. Edward J. King's request for a $10,000 fund "for personal expenses...while living in Boston."

"Are there any comments from other members of the committee?" asked Chairman Michael C. Creedon, D-Brockton, with a smile. "I'm not going to make any. Bon appetit."

The other lawmakers grinned but said nothing.

After the hearing, gubernatorial spokesman Roy Lyons, asked about the money, said the governor wanted to re-establish a fund, abandoned by the then-Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, that is "primarily for entertaining dignitaries — state, local and national."

The fund would be separate from the governor's $211,000 regular expense account. In the fiscal 1982 budget, King seeks to hike his expense account to $219,440 and the entertainment kitty to $25,000.

Violence escalates in Belfast, as IRA's Sands nears coma

BELFAST, Northern Ireland—Rioters threw acid bombs at police in Londonderry's Bogside quarter yesterday and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher refused to make concessions to end the hunger strike by Bobby Sands, the jailed IRA guerrilla and member of Parliament reported ready to lapse into a coma.

Authorities said three policemen were treated for burns in Londonderry as the rioters hurled bottles filled with acid at security forces. They said the chemicals may have been stolen from Londonderry schools, but the acid was not identified.

It was the first time in several years that rioters used acid bombs against police in Northern Ireland. In addition to the acid, the estimated 100 youths hurled gasoline bombs and bricks and set two mail trucks afire in the seventh day of violence in this strife-torn British province.

Kelly testifies in bribery trial, denies threats, states his version

BOSTON — Ex-Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. took the witness stand in his own defense in his extortion trial yesterday and emphatically denied threatening or pressuring anyone for anything.

Speaking softly on the 20th day of his trial in U.S. District Court, Kelly said he was hired strictly for professional services by Masiello & Associates, Architects. Kelly, an accountant, is accused of improperly receiving $34,500 from the Worcester firm "under the color of his office," a violation of the Hobbs Act.

Kelly recited his version of critical issues in the trial, particularly a November, 1970, meeting in West Palm Beach, Fla., where the job offer — or the alleged extortion — first surfaced. The Masiello firm was then owned by Kassuba Development Corp., a national company.

Kelly said he was offered the accounting work by Frank R. Masiello Jr. and was given additional assignments, including a request that he try to control William V. Masiello's penchant for overspending.

Nuclear accident in Japan exposes 56 to contamination

TOKYO—Fifty-six men were exposed to contaminated waste in the nuclear power plant accident on the Sea of Japan and the plant's executives may be indicted on criminal charges, the government said yesterday. Fish sales from the area plummeted as brokers across Japan refused to buy the local catch.

In its first official statement on the accident, the Japan Atomic Power Co. said eight plant workers were immediately put to work mopping up the spill with buckets and rags after it occurred March 8. The statement said a subcontractor then supplied additional moppers who worked for 15 more days.

Reagan lobbies economic plan

WASHINGTON—President Reagan, lobbying members of Congress to vote for his economic program, wound up as an unscheduled telephone guest on a radio talk show yesterday and assured listeners, "I'm feeling great and getting along just fine."

The president, wounded 22 days ago in an assassination attempt, told listeners of station WEVP in Beaver Falls, Pa., he was "most grateful for all the good wishes and the prayers that I've had and the messages from the people from all over the country."

The president has not appeared in public since he returned home from the hospital April 11 and his voice had not been heard on radio or television before yesterday.

His impromptu radio conversation, which lasted about two minutes, came as the president stepped up his efforts to rekindle momentum in Congress for his economic program.

In addition to his telephone calls, he met privately with eight governors at the living quarters of the White House, all of whom later told reporters they support the administration's program of tax and spending cuts.

Earth Day speaker urges increased activism

By DONNA MCGRATH
Collegian Staff

The League of Conservation Voters is a very unusual environmental organization because it is totally political and it canvasses door to door for candidates, Marion Edy, Founder of the League told an audience of about 12 people in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom last night.

Edy, was one of six speakers who came to the UMass campus to help celebrate Earth Day 1981 sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality.

Edy said 1980 was the first year environmentalists did any massive canvassing or organizing for candidates. "We went on a 'get out the vote' drive," Edy said.

She said the League more than doubled its support for candidates, from contributing $80,000 in 1978 to more than $200,000 in contributions and campaign expenditures in 1980.

The League's main activities include canvassing door to door to inform the people about environmental issues and to let them know how their senator or representative in Congress voted on those issues, Edy said.

"Environmentalists worked hard for candidates to bring out the voters in the 1980 presidential and congressional races and it worked," she said.

There is a need to make people informed on what their congressman is doing so that people are not alienated, Edy said. The League has to demonstrate to those politicians that they can be responsive to what environmentalists want and still survive, she added.

More people are supporting these organizations because they are scared. The Clean Air issue will be a massive fight especially where acid rain is an issue, like in New England, Michigan and areas near the Canadian border, she added.

The League, which has approximately 12,000 workers, has "some permanent job openings for those who want to get involved in political canvassing and organizing," Edy said.

Speaker warns of hazards of nuclear waste disposal

BY BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

An anti-nuclear activist yesterday warned a nuclear power workshop of the long term dangers posed by nuclear waste and encouraged opposition to a planned dump site in Massachusetts.

Dan Giordano, a spokesman for the Rowe Conversion Campaign spoke to the group as part of yesterday's Earth Day activities stressed that the greatest danger posed by nuclear technology is the hazardous effects of nuclear wastes.

Toxic substances must be kept isolated and absolutely safe from any outside interference for up to 24,000 years to reduce the waste product by half, he said.

"These waste products can damage reproductive organs, bones and other parts of the body and can easily be found at the Rowe nuclear power plant," Giordano said.

Northeast Utilities has planned the construction of a low level nuclear waste facility in Massachusetts, Giordano said. At present only three such dumps exist in the United States, and the Massachusetts dump would probably be shared with the six New England states as well as New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, he said.

"The utility company will pick a poor town that needs the economic boost and weigh the benefits with the risks in an effort to gain public support," Giordano said.

Giordano said people have to work to halt plans for the project now or the company will wait until the last moment in an attempt to "railroad" the waste dump past public protest.

The nuclear movement has become more active in the overall community than ever before, and students must join this movement to protect their own future, Giordano said.

"Research done by students would greatly enhance their education," Giordano said.

Legal services may be cut, despite strong support

BY JEFF KELLY
Collegian Correspondent

The Legal Services Corporation (LSC), which represented 70,000 people in western Massachusetts last year, has fallen under President Reagan's budget cutting axe.

The service aids an estimated one million people who could otherwise not afford assistance in problems of housing, social security and welfare, battered women, consumer protection and juvenile cases. Two thirds of their clients are women.

Despite strong support from the American Bar Association, the service's entire 341 million dollar budget may be cut.

"One of the arguments against Legal Services is that the government is paying the poor to sue them," Mary Kelvie, a staff member of University Legal Services, said. "But the cases which actually affect the government are less than one per cent."

Although the Legal Service Corporation is not directly connected with the University Legal Services, Kelvie said she feels the university service cannot function without the larger Legal Service Corporation.

"If Legal Services were to go down the drain right now, our office would be in terrible shape," she said.

"We depend on a lot of the precedents set in their class action suits."

Kelvie recently started a campaign to save Legal Services. She has set up a table in the Campus Center Concourse to alert students and encourage them to write to the Congressmen Conte and Boland, who represent the Amherst area as well as Senators Tsongas and Kennedy.

"Students really know what's going on," Kelvie said. "They come up to the table and they are concerned. We have been able to send out between 50 and 100 letters this week alone."

In addition, Kelvie has compiled a list of people to contact who will send public opinion messages to members of Congress in case something occurs suddenly. "This type of lobbying is one of the reasons that the National Rifling Association is so effective," Kelvie said.

"Conte did not include a question on Legal Services in his recent constituency poll," Kelvie said. "We want to make him very aware that he omitted a major issue."

Both Conte and Boland are on the Appropriations Committee, the Congressional Committee reviewing budget spending.

"Conte is the ranking Republican member and Boland has been in Washington a long time. It's interesting to note that two influential people on the committee are from Western Massachusetts," Kelvie said.

"Fortunately, Massachusetts seems better organized than other states," she said.

The Greater Boston Legal Services, which has 12 offices, has formed 11 committees to solicit support from state and national legislators as well as local judges, Kelvie said.

They are also sending out letters and working closely with the Western Massachusetts Legal Services, she said.

The Legal Service Corporation has hired Chuck Boswals Bosley, a lobbyist, as the Director of the Committee to Save Legal Services. Bosley will act as a full time lobbyist in Washington for Legal Services.

Oxfam donations total $3,800

By TIMOTHY J. FOWLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Hunger Task Force has announced that total contributions to OXFAM from the Spring Fast, held last Thursday, April 16, amounted to $3,800.

This sum represented the contribution of 3,045 students who donated Dining Commons meal tickets as well as over $700 in cash contributions from other groups and individuals.

In a news release, the UMass Hunger Task Force extended thanks to "all those groups and individuals that helped make possible...OXFAM's international effort to enable people to achieve food self-sufficiency," and congratulated "students and people of the Valley for their growing sensitivity to world hunger."

Marie Cappadona, assistant director of Food Services, said Food Services allotted $1.00 for each donated meal ticket, worth $3.50, to the Hunger Task Force and kept the remaining $2.50 for itself to cover labor, building, and other costs.

Reverend F. Peter Sabey, spokesman for the Hunger Task Force, said, "We wish they'd contribute a lot more, like half the cost of a meal ticket, but we're not in a position to argue."

Worcester Dining Commons had the most participants in the fast with 810 students contributing meal tickets while Berkshire had 774, Franklin 750, and Hampshire 711. Fraternity Lambda Chi Alpha also contributed the cost of a meal to OXFAM.

Women's Media Project provides listening options

By DEBORAH SANDOCK
Collegian Correspondent

It's Thursday night at WMUA. As music fills the air, and telephones ring off the hook with requests, a group of women carefully sift through stacks of record albums. A sign flashes 'on the air.' The Women's Media Project is working to provide entertainment and information to the University of Massachusetts community.

"The Women's Media Network is the umbrella group which we work out of," said member Adena Gilbert. One of the more than 450 Registered Student Organizations on campus, the network serves as a resource center for women interested in media.

The Women's Media Project takes the reins at WMUA (91.1 FM) on Thursday nights from 7-10 p.m. The music played during this time features predominately female artists.

"The purpose of the Women's Media Project is to spread women's culture. We try to provide non-sexist, anti-racist programming, and emphasize different perspectives in women's music," said member Meg Seiler.

The group believes in exploring types of women's music traditionally left out, Seiler said. Most people grow up listening to pop on conventional AM and FM stations, and little attention is given to gospel, progressive lesbian, jazz, and international music, she added.

"The most exciting thing about the Women's Media Project is having time to express ourselves as women," said Gilbert. It is also possible to learn a skill and acquire technical expertise with radio, she said.

Seiler, who joined the project last summer said at first you just watch, then you get to flip some switches, and before you know it, you can be doing your own show.

In addition to programming women's music, the group also presents news, public service announcements, and conducts interviews. Last Thursday, for example, featured an interview on Women's Occupational Health and Safety.

We try to make connections between women and what is going on around us, Gilbert said. "Every issue is a women's issue."

Conference on workers' health and safety scheduled

By SIOBHAN C. BREEN
Collegian Staff

The hazards and issues affecting women in the workplace will be the focus of a conference to be held this Saturday, at Holyoke Community College.

"Health and Safety on the Job: A Conference on Working Women" is being sponsored by Women Organizing for Occupational Safety and Health (WOOSH), a coalition of local women's and labor groups.

"We want to educate people, to make them more aware of the specific issues that face women in particular," said Michelle Miclette a spokesperson for WOOSH.

Several of the sessions will deal with environmental hazards and "reproductive hazards that can be a form of discrimination against women holding certain jobs," said Miclette.

Workshops will also address such issues as sexual harassment on the job, racism in the workplace, and maternity/paternity rights. They will also focus on occupational hazards and feature speakers from organizations such as SAFEGUARDS for Agricultural Workers and Massachusetts Commission on Household Employment.

"The issue isn't to exclude men but to make the workplace safer for men and women," said Miclette. The preliminary program guide makes a point of welcoming men to the conference.

"We want to continue after the conference," she said, "to have people organize around it and to provide referral and resources."

Women composers featured in concert

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

The works of five women composers will be presented at the Bezanson Recital Hall at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center on Friday April 24. Admission is free.

Joyce Mekeel, an Associate Professor for the School of Arts and Music at Boston University, will be the featured artist. Mekeel, who will hold a discussion period prior to the concert, will be presenting a premier piece of her work.

Her composition, entitled "Fertile Vicissitudes," will be performed by oboeist Peggy Pearson and harpist Susan Alleen.

In the past Mekeel has composed works for the Princeton McCarter Theater and the Ina Dance Company, she has taught at both the New England Conservatory and Boston University. She has also appeared as a harpsichordist and has had professional experience as a sculptor and anthropologist.

The concert of newly commissioned works of women composers, will include along with Mekeel's "Fertile Vicissitudes," "Serenade," by Arlene Zallman; "Uchronia," by Smith Professor Karen Tarlow; "Eure Pax," by Pozzi Escot; and "Persona," by Elizabeth Vercor.

Cohen said he hopes the bill his committee reports out will allow referenda, in any community, as early as this June. He said it is not decided yet how big a margin would be required for an override.

Cohen also said the referenda bill probably would not allow local repeal of Prop 2½ but instead would permit communities to halve the budget cuts required under the law in the first full year.

Effective July 1, Prop 2½ limits the real estate levy to 2½ percent of a property's fair market value. Where that ratio is exceeded, the community must cut spending 15 percent a year.

What Cohen is talking about, as suggested earlier by House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, is reducing the required annual cut to 7½ percent.

Likely attached to the referendum bill, Cohen said, will be a proposed Municipal Finance Practices Act, creating a board empowered to intervene in a community which is found to be overspending.

"This would address a situation such as Boston," which is facing a huge deficit, he said.

ATLANTA—April 21—25th Victim Michael Cameron McIntosh, a 23-year-old black man whose disappearance had not been reported, became the 25th person to be added to the Special Task Force's list of murdered or missing blacks. McIntosh's body was found in the Chattahoochee Monday.

25th victim added to Atlanta's Task Force list of blacks

By DICK PETTYS
Associated Press

ATLANTA—A 23-year-old black man who was asphyxiated and dumped nude into the Chattahoochee River was officially declared the 25th victim yesterday in Atlanta's series of slayings of young blacks.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said the case of Michael Cameron McIntosh, whose body was found Monday, was assigned to the special task force investigating the murders because of "similarities in his profile and that of some of the other cases."

The task force also is investigating the case of 10-yearold Darron Glass, who has been missing since last September.

An autopsy yesterday revealed that McIntosh, like 13 earlier victims, died of asphyxiation.

His body was found a short distance from where the bodies of two earlier victims were found three weeks ago.

Police said McIntosh was unemployed and apparently lived alone. Unlike the previous victims, he had not been reported missing, they said.

Dr. John Feegel, associate Fulton County medical examiner, had recommended earlier in the day that McIntosh be added to the task force list.

"We have a body in the river, partially decomposed, black, albeit a little older than the ones before, but not much older ... no clothing, and again, without any overt cause of death," Feegel said. "I think this fits enough of the characteristics that it should be added to the task force list."

Feegel, who conducted an autopsy yesterday morning, said a lack of marks on McIntosh's body prevented a positive ruling on the cause of death. But he told reporters it was "some type of probable asphyxial death, and we are going to classify it as an asphyxiation due to some type of suffocation."

International News Briefs

(From Uganda)—Twelve African nations, including Uganda, began addressing the General Assembly yesterday calling for economic sanctions against South Africa. Later this week the twelve-member delegation will propose five resolutions condemning South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia.

The African nations have been planning a major push against South Africa since the breakdown of the Geneva conference in January. The African delegates have charged South Africa with refusing to bargain in good faith and refusal to allow the democratic process to operate in Namibia. The twelve African foreign ministers, representing such nations as Tanzania, Nigeria, Zambia, Zimbabwe, and Botswana, have stressed South Africa's violations of the sovereignty of neighboring African nations and past General Assembly resolutions condemning these military agressions in their attempt to persuade the Security Council to take a strong stand.

Mr. Kolara Osunu of Uganda, leader of the African delegation, said the African group would submit five resolutions to the Security Council. One will call for comprehensive sanctions, others for economic sanctions, including an oil embargo and an arms embargo. It is expected the United States will lead opposition to such resolutions as in the past. If this happens, says Mr. Osunu, the delegation will call for an emergency session of the General Assembly to take the matter further.

Mr. Osunu said the African nations were deeply concerned by the Reagan administration's new Africa policy and its public statements on South Africa. He described these statements as words of encouragement that have increased South African intransigence. He was alluding to President Reagan's statements that South Africa was a friendly country and had been a valuable ally in war and might be again.

10,000 days in captivity

On Wednesday, April 22, the Distinguished Visitors Program is bringing ex-hostage Victor Tomseth to speak on campus.

Of the 52 hostages, approximately a dozen have been individually accused of working with the Central Intelligence Agency, and evidence has been provided to substantiate the claims. Tomseth is among that group. These allegations are not made lightly. After careful study of his career and position in the embassy, a group with over 10 years of CIA investigative experience (CounterSpy) has charged that Tomseth has been involved with the CIA.

We are paying $3000 student dollars to hear this man speak about his 444 days in captivity when what he should be talking about is why the U.S. supported and subsidized the captivity of the Iranian people under a brutal dictatorship for over 10,000 days (since 1953). Not one hostage life was taken during the relatively short crisis, whereas well over 100,000 Iranians were tortured or killed during the 30 years that led up to the taking of the hostages.

A question that must be asked is: Who was Victor Tomseth before he was taken hostage, and what was he doing in Iran?

Tomseth began his diplomatic career in Southeast Asia a few years after President Kennedy formally integrated the activities of the State Department, the CIA and the AID programs in that region, to more effectively eliminate popular resistance to U.S. intervention. This means that people, like Tomseth, working for the State Department during this period were also legally connected to the CIA through joint ventures. Tomseth became an embassy official shortly after learning to speak Thai, at the height of the Vietnam War, when U.S. counterinsurgency programs were based in Thailand. Many aspects of this program were carried out from Udorn, where Tomseth worked. In addition, the secret bombings of Indochina were also launched from Thailand. How could Victor Tomseth continue working in Thailand after such atrocities as the My Lai massacre were publicized worldwide?

Tomseth's illustrious career turned toward the special study of Farsi (the native language of Iran) for his next assignment in Iran. After a mere three years he became senior political officer at the U.S. embassy in Teheran. Tomseth was promoted unusually quickly because of his familiarity with Iran, past diplomatic experience, and fluency in Farsi.

It is important to note here that John Marks and Philip Agee, former State Department intelligence officer and CIA officer, respectively, have confirmed that the title "political officer" is one of the most common covers for CIA agents. But perhaps more crucial is the common knowledge that the CIA traditionally seeks to recruit people fluent in foreign languages for their "intelligence gathering" work, particulary those who have diplomatic immunity.

Very few people in the embassy spoke fluent Farsi, and those who did were needed for intelligence liaison or translation work, especially in the areas of surveillance, wiretapping, and communications. This information would then often be turned over to the Iranian secret police, SAVAK.

Tomseth recently said it has never been proven that there were undercover agents in the embassy. But, in fact, the CIA (through Kermit Roosevelt, mastermind of the 1953 coup) openly boasts of their success in the coup in Iran, and acknowledges the embassy's role.

The ex-Shah's police state was trained and maintained largely by the U.S. "A State Department spokesman confirmed in 1978 that in that year, 175 SAVAK agents were undergoing training at the CIA's McLean, Virginia facilities" (Dave Alpert, Tell the American People. 1980). In addition, according to Jesse Leaf, Chief CIA analyst on Iran until 1973—during Richard Helms' tenure as CIA director—the CIA provided torture seminars to SAVAK officials. (New York Times, 1/7/79). In addition, for part of 1978, there were reported between 50 and 75 full time CIA officers in Iran and "at least 100 retired intelligence specialists" working for U.S. firms in Iran, many of whom were thought to be still working for the CIA (Washington Post, 12/17/78, the Times, 7/9/78). Could such a high ranking embassy official as Tomseth been unaware of this long established CIA-SAVAK connection?

By 1975 Amnesty International named Iran as the worst human rights violator in the world. What did Victor Tomseth do to protest, publicize or correct these grievances? Did he ever warn our government that we were in violation of international law by training and supplying equipment for torture? What did Tomseth have to say in 1977 when the International League for Human Rights sent a message to Carter and Congress saying that the State Department was withholding information concerning the mass arrests and torture of the Iranian people?

A high ranking SAVAK official, Hassan Sana, said "SAVAK's first aim after an arrest was to terrorize the person, not to get information" (Tell the American People, p. 119).

"It is almost impossible to find a family in a major city which did not have a family member or acquaintance killed, tortured or imprisoned by SAVAK. Children were raped and somtimes murdered before the eyes of their parents; broken bottles were forced up the ani of prisoners suspended by their wrists from a beam; prisoners were roasted on electrically heated bedframes, whipped with electrical cables, burned on the genitals with cigarettes, and branding irons." (ibid., p. 6) Other more sophisticated methods of torture were also employed, using equipment imported from the U.S.

The above information makes clear the fact that the CIA is not simply an intelligence gathering organization, as some people believe. It has been well-documented that the

Who was Victor Tomseth before he was taken hostage, and what was he doing in Iran?

CIA routinely engages in the overthrow of popularly elected governments, and the training of terrorizing police forces in many countries around the world.

There are a number of bills presently pending in Congress which, if passed, would reduce the already unenforced restrictions on CIA activity. One such bill is the Intelligence Identities Protection Act, which would make it a crime punishable by three years in jail and a $10,000 fine to publish the names of CIA personnel or any information that might lead to the identification of an agent or informer, even if that information is already publicly known or declassified. The purpose of the bill, as far as many congressmen are concerned, is to shut down the two organizations that monitor CIA activity and identify agents operating in various countries: Covert Action Bulletin and CounterSpy. One senator was heard asking, "Will this get (ex-CIA agent) Agee?" (Mother Jones, 2/81). What the senator and others fail to consider are the broader ramifications of the bill which would affect not only every journalist and investigative reporter, but every American citizen by denying our right to know what our government is up to.

The Center for National Security Studies, a Washington based legal research organization, has issued a list of people who could face criminal sanctions under the proposed legislation. This list includes: Sen. Daniel Moynihan, who revealed the CIA contributed money to an Indian political party; Seymour Hersh, New York Times correspondent who wrote the first major public report on CIA domestic spying; Jerry Landauer, who wrote an article for the Wall Street Journal which revealed the covert ties between the CIA and Yoshio Kodana, Boeing's Japanese agent.

If this bill had been law just a few years ago, the American public would never have found out about the CIA directed coups in Iran, Chile, Brazil and Guatemala, nor would we know about Operations Phoenix, MK-ULTRA, CHAOS, COINTELPRO, and Watergate, and their devastating effects on millions of people.

This bill would "legitimize" atrocities much worse than those that Victor Tomseth was part of in Iran. We must oppose these bills, and all CIA crimes in order to restore freedom and dignity to the lives of people around the world, including ourselves.

The battle is not over

On April 14th, the Board of Regents sent a tuition increase proposal back to committee for further work. This was an important victory for students, because without the student presence at that meeting, the proposed increase would probably have gone through.

The meeting also showed the vulnerability of the new board. They were swayed by the strong student presence from all over the state and by the unified front presented by them.

This was a good first step, but the battle is not over. There will be another meeting of the Regents on Friday, April 24th, where the tuition proposal will come up again. There will be buses leaving the Campus Center circle at 8:30 a.m. If you are interested in going, come up to the Student Senate office (420 Student Union) before Friday morning. Remember, this could decide the future of this University. Everyone should be concerned.

Laughing at human rights

I am writing to make a protest regarding the Turkish Night of the International Week held April 10th in the Campus Center. Although called a cultural night, my questions to representatives there were of a political nature and were responded to by people saying, "We are not political here." Yet, information published by the Turkish Ministry of Tourism and Information, a ministry of the Turkish government, was distributed that night. In so doing, the sponsors of the night, the Turkish students of UMass are jeopardizing their non-political position and are encouraging tourism, thereby aiding the economy and government of Turkey, one of the most oppressive in the world.

In the past six months, 35,000 political prisoners have been arrested in Turkey and the use of torture and deaths resulting from torture has been documented by Amnesty International both before and after the establishment of a military junta last September. Turkish students are associating themselves with a government that oppresses Armenian, Greek and Kurdish minorities and to this date denies the massacre of 1.5 million Armenians in 1915. It should be made clear to Turkish students—as well as the United States government, which supports Turkey with billions of dollars in military and economic aid—that they are showing support for a government that laughs at the idea of human rights.

The final frontier

Hail, Columbia. In your maiden flight, the imaginations of humankind have once again been freed from the bounds of the earth, giving us a vision of what might be. You show us hospitals in which heart, burn, and arthritis patients can be freed from the agony of gravity. You show us the path to new and cheaper medicines, other sources of food. Leaving the earth, we see the abundance of energy and materials you put within our reach; resources which can improve the standard of life for people of all nations in this time of global depletion. You hold the promise of new industrial processes, processes which cannot work in the presence of gravity, to give us products and materials never before dreamed possible. And you give us the means to continue to place satellites in orbit, satellites which tell us of our weather, our resources, and give us the ability to communicate with each other from afar.

But what are your dangers, Columbia? Do you hold the potential for evil as well as good?

Already our warriors have changed your design to suit their own purposes and needs. Almost one-half of your flights will be used to carry out their own oftimes secret plans. To some, you hold the promise of letting us kill more effectively with less risk to ourselves. Are killer satellites and orbiting battle stations the price we must pay for building you, Columbia?

Must we take our problems to our final frontier, a frontier which holds so much promise? We of the Pioneer Valley L5 Society say no. We urge all concerned citizens to write to their congressmen, the President, the U.S. delegate to the United Nations and the Soviet Embassy in Washington to insist that space be used for peaceful purposes only. We also urge you to write to your congressmen and the President and insist that the Space Shuttle be used for peaceful and scientific purposes only, in accordance with NASA Charter.

five men at the fraternity including Chenelle and Reichard drove over to help him, said Chenelle.

"When we reached Southwest, I ran as fast as I could toward the pyramids and called out my friend's name," Chenelle said.

Chenelle said someone then yelled, "Over here," and when he approached the men one of them hit him.

The other men from the fraternity joined in to help Chenell, Chenelle said.

G. Denrick Reichard, 19, of 316 Coolidge dormitory, was also allegedly stabbed three times during the fight and received wounds on the left lower side of the abdomen, on a finger of his left hand, and a puncture wound on his right sub clavical, (near the shoulders), said Cavanaugh, as he was told by Doctor Ronald Grimm of Cooley Dickenson Hospital.

When Officers William Murphy and Kevin Donovan arrived on the scene, Chenelle said the two men ran into Washington Tower and Chenelle and his friends held them in a stairwell until police arrived.

The other man was not arrested, Cavanaugh said.

Police are continuing to question witnesses, Cavanaugh said.

Senate regulates liquor industry

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Senate, working into the evening hours, has given final approval to a bill forcing liquor dealers to buy their supplies from franchised wholesalers within the state.

The 19-17 endorsement came yesterday after the upper chamber refused, 21-16, to delay the bill and ask the state Supreme Court whether it is constitutional.

The "primary source" bill, already approved by the House, would prevent dealers from shopping around out of state to get the best buy. Supporters say it is designed to stabilize the liquor industry in Massachusetts and capture more exeise taxes. Opponents say it will stifle competition and drive up prices for consumers.

Sen. George Bachrach, an independent from Watertown, tried to persuade the Senate to seek the court's opinion, saying the measure may violate federal anti-trust laws.

Adam and the Ants
Kings of the Wild Frontier [Epic]

The Adam and the Ants album might strike some as being extremely bizarre and unaccessible, but it is really nothing more than a strangely imaginative, self-advertising pop record.

Every song on this album is some kind of advertisement for Adam and the Ants, or for the weird and irreverent fad these songs attempt to create.

Lyrics like "Music for a future age, don't be square be there" or "Antmusic for sexpeople, sex music for ant people, get off your knees and hear the insect prayer" serve as both promotional jingles and half-serious cries for some vague revolution.

The lyrical concerns are certainly weird (something to do with indians and ants and sex and pirates), and the concept of the band is hard to pin down (and that's the way they want it), but if you take their constant attempts to establish themselves as mock leaders of some bizarre movement with a grain of salt, you will find a lot of fine, innovative, flashy and catchy music here.

Indian drums and war whoops mix with heavy metal guitar to create a unique sound (why indians? Leader Adam Ant claims that he got "sick of listening to rock and roll").

The arrangements are extremely varied, though, and utilize everything from Bowie, Gary Glitter style flash guitar from the 70's, to Ventures-like tremulo guitar from the 60's.

Most of the songs are fun and energetic, although a few, like "Los Rancheros," a song about Clint Eastwood, and "Jolly Roger" a song about pirates, take fun perhaps a bit too far, and end up sounding like a cowboy movie soundtrack and an Old Spice commercial, respectively.

But despite the occasional idiocies, Adam and the Ants are indeed the "Kings of the Wild Frontier," a pop landscape that they themselves have created, where all it requires to survive and thrive is a bit of a twisted imagination, and a desire for good, clean, fun.

—DAVE WILDMAN

Ronnie Montrose
Gamma II [Elektra]

Gamma II,Ronnie Montrose's current band's latest release drips with energy. I have always placed Montrose in a category with the potential equality of Page, Clapton, and Beck. Yet he's always expanding on new concepts, leaving his audience behind.

On Gamma II, he seems relaxed with his efforts and those of his hand-picked band members. The album is consistent throughout; hard rock with (How I hate to use this word in reference to music) an intellectual edge. His leads are tight and fluid and the whole band plays with such force and brutality that an undeniable intensity pervades every play of the album. Each listen yields new discoveries on technique and instrument manipulation.

Even the vocals add to the overall spine-chilling vibes produced. There is so much going on all at once that this description just does not do justice to the work and sweat necessary for such an outing.

It would be impossible to choose outstanding numbers from this album; they all add to and compliment each other. There's a great cover version of the late Sixtie's tune "Something In The Air" which will hopefully get some airplay for those financially deprived or unwilling to gamble on my opinion. The titles of the songs are original (none of the abundant rock'n'roll themes restated fifty different ways) and provocative to the mind; e.g., "Cat On A Leash" and "Skin And Bone".

As a finishing stroke, the album cover is outrageous and I would be glad to have someone explain the symbolism of the two sharks cutting their way through a beautiful lawn towards an unsuspecting couple. Sheer brilliance; creativity abounds.

Rally set in support of Namibia

A demonstration in support of independence for the South African colony of Namibia will be held today at noon in front of the Amherst Post Office.

The rally has been planned to coincide with the United Nations Security Council hearings today on proposed trade sanctions against South Africa for its occupation of Namibia. The United States is expected to veto the proposed sanctions.

Six local organizations have endorsed the demonstration, including the Center for Racial Studies, the Sylvan Racial Awareness Program, and the Amherst College Black Student Union.

Police report thefts, break-ins

By M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

A Rolling Green resident reported yesterday that their apartment had been burglarized over the weekend and $1000 worth of stereo equipment, chairs and clothing had been taken, Amherst police said.

The alleged burglar apparently pried open a sliding glass door using a railroad spike which police found in a nearby flower garden, police said.

A color television set and stereo valued at approximately $1000 were reportedly stolen from a Riverglade apartment this weekend, police said.

Two other Riverglade residents last night reported finding pry marks on their sliding glass doors in what appeared to be an attempted break-in, police said. A window was broken in one apartment but no entry was made in either case, police said.

A Sunset Avenue resident last night reported a pair of skis with bindings and poles, worth approximately $200, were stolen from their apartment, police said.

A car in Puffton Village was reportedly vandalized last night, police said.

Journalism conference planned

The deadline for registering for this Saturday's journalism conference is 6 p.m. today.

The conference, "First Take on the Future," is sponsored by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and will feature discussion and presentations on various aspects of print journalism and the future of the field.

Speakers at the conference will include Mike Short of the Associated Press; Anna Mayo of the Village Voice, Kit Rachlis of the Boston Phoenix, Mike Stanton and J. Walter Green from the AP, and others.

Cost of the conference is $4 for UMass students plus $7 for the banquet. Reservations must be phoned in to the Collegian, at 545-3500, by 6 p.m.

Activist to report on Indochina

A former draft resister and veteran peace activist will speak tomorrow night at Hampshire College on his recent three-week trip through Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia.

Jerry Elmer, a field secretary for the American Friends Service Committee, will give a "Report from Indochina" at 2 p.m. in the West Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall on the Hampshire campus.

Admission is free. An open discussion will follow Elmer's talk.

Ensemble theater presents Love's Labor's Lost

BY JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

The clever genius of William Shakespeare coupled with an impressive all-around production by the University Ensemble Theater furnished viewers with a joyous look at Love's Labor's Lost this past weekend. Those who missed the previous performances will get another opportunity later this week (April 23—25) at the Rand Theater in the Fine Arts Center. All shows start at 8:00 pm.

Shakespeare's tale of comedy and romance gives the cast a wide range of characters to personify. Most noteworthy in the delightful role as the clown Costard is Bob Stack whose energy and stage-presence proves to be the catalyst of the play. Audry Jacques, as the Princess of France, adds charm and elegance to her role as the gracious and noble lady. The characters Berowne (Lenny Egan), Holofernes (Dennis Wemm) and Don Adriano De Armado (John Hunt) give fine individual performances complimenting the entire cast with meritorious execution.

The costumes and the stage sets add significantly to the production. Both are simply exquisite, dazzling the audience with fairy tale-like imagery. The set, painted green with two statues and numerous little trees, is typical of the popular Shakespearian sylva.

The performance's one flaw may be its slow beginning that leaves the audience a bit restless. The emergence of Stack changes the pace, creating an upbeat tempo.

Much of the play involves the delightful little subplots that circumfuse the stage, De Armado's quest to win the love of a country wench (Julie Parent) and Holofernes pontificating. The main plot centers around Ferdinand, the King of Navarre (Alan Arenius) and his attending lords who sign a pledge abstaining from the social rigors of the world, specifically avoiding women. Their agreement lasts until they first lay eyes on the Princess and her attending ladies. These women happen to be the lovliest, wittiest and most cultured ladies imaginable.

Love's Labor's Lost is an enjoyable experience to watch. The University Ensemble Theater provides an outstanding production. When you consider your weekend plans, do yourself a favor and take in a classic Shakespearian comedy, and bring a friend, too.

Gorillas at Hofstra

Manhasset Connection plays 'home game'

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

By now, the scene is well-known to followers of the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

Tri-captain midfielder Pete Schmitz scoops up a loose ball from an opponent's grasp and deftly passes to All-American attacker Jim Weller to the right of the net. Weller moves to the cage and flips the ball behind the wary goalie to tri-captain Chris Corin.

Corin comes out front, but, instead of shooting, passes to senior attacker Skip Vosburgh. Vosburgh waits until Corin sets up for the easy five-foot shot and hits him with a bullet. Corin slams it into the cage for a Massachusetts score. The Manhasset Connection strikes again.

Massachusetts head coach Dick Garber's Gorillas travel to Hempstead, N.Y. this afternoon to do battle with Hofstra University under the lights.

On the schedule, this contest is listed as an away game since it is to be played far from the friendly confines of Boyden Field. However, for Corin, Vosburgh, Schmitz and many other Gorillas, tonight will be a homecoming of sorts.

Long Island, N.Y., is a national hotbed for lacrosse. A good portion of the Massachusetts roster is comprised of players from this easterly lacrosse-land, several from Manhasset High School.

This school has produced Corin and Vosburgh, two thirds of the potent, high-scoring Gorilla attack, as well as two other Massachusetts starters, senior defenseman Mark Fierro and midfielder Tim Cutler.

"I've played ball with Skip (Vosburgh) since I was six-years-old and with these other guys a couple of years too," Corin said. "We used to play the county championships (Nassau vs. Suffolk) on Hofstra's field.

"When we play there (at Hofstra), we're going to have a lot of people rooting for us, relatives, friends, coaches and guys we've played against in the past. Needless to say, we'll have a lot of incentive to play well."

Vosburgh echoed these sentiments. "No question we'll have a lot of people there for us. They're all curious to see what we've got at UMass for a team," he said. "People know their lacrosse around there and they'll be checking us out.

"We lost at Hofstra two seasons ago and some people remember that. All we have to do is play our game and that'll show everyone that UMass is for real."

"They're (Hofstra) going to be up for us," Corin said. "But playing there now, while we're doing so well, makes it an even bigger goal to win and if we do, it'll be an incredible high. It's been a lot of years."

The good people of Long Island should find out sometime tomorrow evening that Corin, Vosburgh, Weller et al are indeed for real.

AROUND THE CREASE—Tonight's twilight tilt is the Gorilla's only nighttime excursion of the season...Skip Vosburgh thinks that playing on Hofstra's astroturf field tonight will be a good warmpup for the Gorilla's May 2 encounter with Army at West Point...Chris Corin's been on a scoring tear as of late, pumping in 16 goals in the last three games...Weller, Corin and Vosburgh are all in the top ten on the Massachusetts all-time scoring list, and Weller's only a junior...Boston College has moved up to fifth-ranked in New England after wins over Yale and Harvard last week, BC's highest rating ever. UMass beat BC 14-7 earlier this season.

UMass shortstop Vin Bonanno fields the ball in a previous game this season. Today the Mittmen travel to the University of Rhode Island to take on a doubleheader with the Rams beginning at 1:00 p.m.

Crew team splits

Weather conditions on the Charles River Saturday were good for the UMass women's novice-8 boat to beat Northeastern University and Smith College at 11 a.m., but one hour later changed drastically, preventing the varsity-8 boat to lead UMass to a sweep, as they came in second.

The novice crew boat won their race easily by open water (more than one boat's full length) with a time of 6:19, ahead of Smith and Northeastern's respective times of 6:27 and 6:28. UMass head coach Barbara Roche was surprised by their easy win. "I was under the impression the other teams were much better," said Roche, "but we were very strong."

The novice boat was fortunate to have good rowing conditions and calm water. The varsity-8 boat was not as lucky.

Three minutes before the start of the 1500 meter varsity race, the course was changed and shortened to 1000 meters. The change was made because the water conditions were bad and the water was very rough. UMass was rowing in the outside lane (the lane farthest from shore), putting them in the roughest water and it was their coxwain's first race on the Charles.

Smith was in the first lane and finished first with a time of 4:10, UMass finished second in 4:20, and Northeastern was third.

And this weekend the UMass women's crew team will be rowing on the Connecticut River in South Hadley against Mount Holyoke College and Brown University.

Netwomen top Smith, 7-2

By ANTONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team dominated Smith College yesterday afternoon, dropping only two matches of the nine played for a final score of 7—2. The matches were played under sunny skies but temperatures in the forties made playing a bit uncomfortable.

"We played well despite the weather," coach John Beal said. "Smith played better than last fall but we were still able to dominate them."

In singles play, the netwomen were able to win all but one of six matches. Starting off at the number one spot was Elizabeth Sullivan who beat Smith's Arthe Kelly in straight sets 6—1, 6—4. Captain Joanne Vennochi, at number two, took a bit longer to subdue her opponent 6—3, 7—5. Freshman Paula Natale looked very impressive at the number three spot as she breezed by Elisa Brontman 6—1, 6—1. Number four Chris Carson beat Smith's Lisa Nuyen 6—4, 6—1.

The final UMass singles win was a real cliff hanger as Patricia Sullivan battled Holly Detels and won the match 7—6, 5—7, 6—4. The match started at 4:00 and lasted well past sundown. This did not bother Sullivan as she was able to use a strong forehand shot to win many points.

The netwomen won two of the three doubles matches. Number two doubles Sue Lochiatto and Jane Carson swept past their opponents 6—3, 6—1. The number three UMass doubles team of Lynn O'Sullivan and Didi Courtright had little trouble with their competition as they won 6—2, 6—3.

The netwomen have a full schedule next week as they host three teams; Mount Holyoke College, University of Rhode Island, and Brown University.

Golfers down MHC

The University of Massachusetts women's golf team geared up for this weekend's upcoming New England Championships by first defeating Mount Holyoke at the Orchards on Friday and then placing third behind Mount Holyoke and Amherst and ahead of Springfield College on Monday at Hickory Ridge.

UMass won by a comfortable 40 stroke margin on Friday. The final score was UMass 291 and Mount Holyoke 331.

Robin Hayes placed first with a score of 96 and was followed closely by teammate Nola Eddy.

On Monday, however, it was Mount Holyoke's turn as they turned in a team score of 393 to take first place by seven strokes from Amherst College. UMass was third with a 408 and Springfield College was fourth with a 420.

Monday's loss could not overshadow the individual performance of Hayes, a junior, who turned in her best round of golf this year. Hayes finished second overall with a score of 91, two strokes behind winner Kate Mahr of Amherst who shot an 89.

Both UMass and Amherst College played without their number one players. Marlene Susienka of UMass was out with the flu and Monica Romano of Amherst was injured.

Leaman said Susienka should be back and ready for the New England's. Susienka, a sophomore, is the defending New England champion.

Overall, Leaman was optimistic about the upcoming tournament. He said that his players seem to be reaching a level of consistancy that should make them competitive.

"The key to our team is if Robin Hayes can continue to play well," Leaman said.

The New Englands will be held on this Saturday and Sunday. Saturday's round will take place at the Orchards and Sunday's will be held at the Hickory Rigde Country Club

Sixers hold on, Celtics fall

BOSTON—Reserve guard Andrew Toney scored 11 of his 26 points in the fourth quarter, including two free throws with two seconds left, to lead the Philadelphia 76ers to a 105-104 victory over the Boston Celtics last night in the opener of their National Basketball Association Eastern Conference showdown.

Boston had rallied from a 10-point fourth-quarter deficit and taken a 104-103 lead on two free throws by Larry Bird with four seconds to go. But after a time-out, the 76ers inbounded the ball from midcourt to Toney, who was fouled as he drove the right baseline.

The rookie from southwestern Louisiana calmly sank both foul shots for the winning margin. A desperation heave from the right corner by Bird hit the side of the backboard at the buzzer.

The second game of the best-of-seven conference finals will be played here tonight before the series shifts to Philadelphia for games Friday night and Sunday afternoon.

Toney, who was Philadelphia's No. 1 draft choice, had scored 35 points in the regular season finale when Philadelphia dropped a 98-94 decision at Boston, giving the Celtics the Atlantic Division title. But this time, his big game off the bench took away the home court advantage in this series, an edge which Boston had gained in their previous meetings.

Toney had seven points and three assists in a 19-4 Philadelphia surge that turned a 83-78 deficit into a 97-87 lead with 5:58 to play. Boston stormed back, scoring eight points in a row and finally pulling even at 101-101 on a basket by Cedric Maxwell with 51 seconds to play.

Julius Erving added 25 points for the 76ers, but the key to the victory was the play of their reserves, who outscored Boston's substitutes 44-16.

Bird led the Celtics with 33 points.

Bird was brilliant from the start, hitting his first four shots to help Boston to a 15-10 led after 5½ minutes.

Snow sets record

Solid performances by the University of Massachusetts women's track team prevailed last weekend at the Boston College Relays, despite the absence of the team's top competitors Judy McCrone and Nadine Jackson, Junior Micki Callahan's first-ever attempt at the rigorous seven-event heptathalon was outstanding. Callahan captured 4,057 points for 3rd place.

"Micki showed a lot of courage in these events and did a fine job considering the asthma she had to contend with," said coach Kenny Banda. Callahan qualified for the Eastern competitions as a result of her high point totalage in the heptathlon.

Further additions were made to the record books when senior Karen Snow's javelin throw of 140' was good for second place in Relay competition and a UMass women's school record, edging out the previous by an inch.

Distancewoman Kathy Petrick in her debut for the 10,00 meter run took a ninth in 38:04 and junior Caroline Gardner ran an impressive 4:56.2 in the 1500 meter event.

Freshman Iris McDonough displayed early minutewoman talent running 2:22 for 800 meters, followed by teammate Sally Anderson in 2:25.

Banda "was quite pleased" that his small, 10-women team did so well against a competition field of over 50 teams and running clubs that represent some of the finest talent in track.

The women's track team will host the trackwomen of the University of Rhode Island this Saturday at 1:00 at the UMass Derby Track.

Victor Tomseth spoke before a full house in the SUB last night. His lecture, dealing with his captivity, was interrupted by protests throughout the evening.

Former hostage accused of involvement with CIA

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Victor Tomseth probably doubled as a foreign service officer and a CIA operative in Thailand and Iran because he spoke those languages and was assigned to those countries by the State Department during politically turbulent times, CIA critic John Kelly said yesterday.

"It is extremely difficult to imagine that Victor Tomseth did not have a working relationship with the CIA," Kelly said in a news conference 90 minutes before Tomseth, a former hostage in Iran, spoke in the Student Union Ballroom.

Kelly, who is the Editor of CounterSpy magazine, said Tomseth used the cover of a embassy political officer to participate in CIA counterinsurgency programs.

During a news conference before his speech, Tomseth denied the allegations (see related story this page).

Tomseth was a foreign service officer in Thailand from 1967 to 1971 before he was sent by the State Department to Iran, Kelly said.

Because he spoke Thai and Farsi, the native dialect of Iran, he may have been part of a joint State Department, CIA, Agency for International Development program to carry out covert intelligence operations while he was in those countries, Kelly said.

The three agencies were sanctioned by President John F. Kennedy in 1962 to collaborate in the "crushing of 'wars of liberation,'" he said.

"Therefore, the significant fact is not that Mr. Tomseth is CIA, but that he was carrying out a covert reprehensible program not unlike England's war to crush the American revolution," said Kelly.

"This is the important information that the Amherst academic community and the American people need to know in order to understand the seizure of the U.S. embassy in Iran," he said.

Kelly presented a copy of a State Department document seized during the embassy takeover in November 1979 which discussed admitting the late Shah of Iran into the United States. On the top of the document was a handwritten note which read, "Show to Tomseth." Kelly said he did not know who had written the note.

Kelly said Tomseth must have knowledge that admitting the Shah into this country would lead to the embassy takeover and that by remaining silent, he endangered the lives of embassy staff.

He also said Tomseth was in a position to know of tortures by SAVAK, the secret police of the Shah, and was to blame for continued atrocities by not protesting publicly.

Tomseth meets conflict; refutes ties with CIA

By M. W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

Former hostage Victor Tomseth met great controversy last night when he spoke on his time in captivity and his ideas on why the Americans in Iran were held hostage before a capacity crowd in the Student Union Ballroom.

Tomseth, former counselor for Political Affairs in Iran, was taken hostage on November 4, 1979, and held in Iran 444 days along with 51 other Americans.

Tomseth met controversy from John Kelly, editor of CounterSpy magazine and a critic of the Central Intelligence Agency, and many other members of the audience who made allegations that Tomseth was a CIA agent, which Tomseth firmly denied at the speech.

Tomseth told the audience that speculations on why the United States embassy was seized should be considered from both U.S. and Iranian viewpoints.

"Many Iranians perceived failures and shortcomings in the provisional revolutionary government at that time," Tomseth said, "and they not only put blame on the provisional revolutionary government for those, but many Iranians also put part of that blame on the United States."

Tomseth said he thinks the motive for Iranian invasion of the embassy was to break any ties between that government and the U.S., and the thought of returning the Shah occurred to them later.

From an American standpoint, Tomseth said the U.S. had too much invested in the former government and had to get some of those investments back because the relationship with the future government could not be the same.

Tomseth also discussed in detail his experiences in Iran.

During a question and answer period, Tomseth was badgered about supposed CIA connections and the CIA's accused involvement with SAVAK, the Iranian secret police under the late Shah. Tomseth denied any involvement in either case.

Kelly also invited Tomseth to a debate but Tomseth did not respond to the challenge.

Tomseth said he plans to return to work for the State Department but has no intentions of going to El Salvador or any place that his actions would interfere with his conscience.

Tomseth said he is not bitter toward the Iranian people or the U.S. Government.

The Distinguished Visitors Program, sponsors of the speech, paid $2,750 for Tomseth's appearance, said Carol Fantozzi of DVP.

CIA CRITIC — John Kelly, editor of CounterSpy magazine, last night claimed he had proof that ex-Iranian hostage Victor Tomseth was a member of the CIA.

Group supports use of violence

By JIM KANE
Collegian Staff

A representative of the John Brown Anti-Klan Committee yesterday announced that organization's support for the use of violence in the "struggle against police."

Beth Ruck, of Northampton, speaking before a crowd of about 40 people during a demonstration at the Amherst Post Office, said, "We completely support the right of black people to struggle against the police."

"We support the right of whoever it was that tried to shoot those cops to murder any cop they please."

—Beth Ruck, John Brown Anti-Klan Committee

Referring to a shooting last Thursday in Queens, N.Y., in which two police officers were wounded, Ruck said, "We support the right of whoever it was that tried to shoot those cops to murder any cop they please."

Ruck called one of the officers "a known killer cop."

The rally was organized by the Anti-Klan Committee in cooperation with the Southwest Africa Peoples Organization (SWAPO), and the People's Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN), to protest an expected U.S. veto of U.N. Security Council sanctions against South Africa.

"The United States is expected to be one of the few countries — perhaps the only country — to veto these sanctions," Ruck said.

Other speakers also appeared at the rally, including Amherst College student Majakathata Kokoena, of South Africa, who said, "The only way people all over the world are going to be free is to carry a gun and fight back."

Ruck said members of the Anti-Klan Committee met yesterday morning with members of the staff of Jeanne Kirkpatrick, U.S. Delegate to the United Nations. Ruck said they demanded support for the sanctions, and called for Kirkpatrick's resignation.

About 25 picketers marched in a circle in front of the post office, carrying signs with slogans such as "U.S. mercenaries out of Africa," "Self determination for the black nation," and others. The crowd shouted slogans such as "Namibia will be free. Death to imperialism and white supremacy."

King asks for $3M to pay UMass profs

BOSTON—Gov. Edward J. King has asked the Legislature for $3.1 million to finance pay hikes for University of Massachusetts faculty members. King's supplementary budget was filed yesterday in the House and sent to the House Ways and Means Committee. It is one of several end-of-the-year spending requests totalling $29 million that King's staff expects to seek over the next two months.

The administration contends there's enough spare money in the current $6 billion budget to cover the extra spending. However, the Senate Ways and Means Committee has warned the state may end up with an $11 million deficit by June 30.

No senate meeting

The Undergraduate Student Senate did not meet last night because of a lack of quorum.

Ken Moore, chair of the Public Policy Committee, said the sparse turnout was a result of the change yesterday to a Monday class schedule.

Moore was scheduled to chair the senate meeting because Speaker Ed Lee was attending a class. He said 30 senators were officially excused from the meeting.

Youths in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, many of them masked, rioted last night following the funeral of two teenagers killed Sunday by an army landrover. Sign in background expresses their sentiment on the hunger strike of prisoner Bobby Sands, now in its 53rd day.

Youths riot in Ireland as Sands nears death

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Young Roman Catholics, hurling acid bombs and firing ball bearings from sling shots, defied priests and went on a rampage yesterday after the emotion-packed funerals of two teen-agers. Jailed guerrilla Bobby Sands, in the 53rd day of a hunger strike, sank nearer to death.

The Vatican's envoy in Ireland announced possible intervention by Pope John Paul II to end the fast by the convicted Irish Republican Army terrorist, and the British said they were freeing another jailed guerrilla on medical grounds, but neither move appeared likely to defuse the explosive atmosphere.

The rioting erupted after the funerals of two Catholic teenagers killed Sunday when a British army vehicle plowed into a mob of rioters hurling gasoline bombs in Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second largest city 65 miles northwest of Belfast, the capital.

The mother of one of the victims hurled herself on the grave at the funeral, and relatives of the other teen-ager collapsed and had to be carried away.

Several hours after the funeral a mob smashed into an auto showroom in Londonderry, drove out six cars and set them afire. The trouble soon spread to other areas as mobs attacked police with stones and gasoline and acid bombs. Police said some sharp-shooting youngsters used sling shots to fire ballbearings at troops and police.

Youngsters, many of them masked, threw up barricades around the Catholic Bogside and Creggan quarters despite appeals from priests who buried the slain teen-agers not to attack security forces.

In Belfast, stone-throwing Catholic youths attacked security patrols, hijacked four vehicles and set one afire. British troops fired plastic bullets at the mob, and the demonstrators responded with gasoline bombs. One British soldier, hit by a gasoline bomb, leaped from his armored personnel carrier, his uniform blazing, and extinguished the flames in the street.

In Dublin, the papal nuncio, Dr. Gaetano Allibrandi, said after meeting supporters of Sands that the pope could intervene if he received a request to do so and considered it necessary. He noted that the pope has "expressed concern" over the hunger strike.

Allibrandi added that he would visit Sands in prison at any time provided the British government had no objection. Britain's Northern Ireland Office in Belfast said it has not seen any formal request yet, but declined comment on whether British authorities would allow a visit "at such a sensitive time".

The Northern Ireland Office also said it was releasing jailed guerrilla Dolours Price because she had "deteriorated to the point where she was in imminent danger of sudden collapse and death." It said the balance of her 20-year sentence was cancelled, but that the release had nothing to do with Sands' case.

Reagan still feeling pain from wound

WASHINGTON — President Reagan says he's still suffering pain from his gunshot wound March 30, and while the episode seems unreal to this day, he wonders, too, why he wasn't attacked "27 times before."

In an interview yesday, his first with reporters since the assassination attempt outside a Washington hotel, Reagan disclosed that his first thought when he heard the gunfire was "to take a look" around. But the nearest Secret Service agent, he noted "had a different idea."

When he finally realized he had been wounded, he said, it was "the most paralyzing pain, as if someone hit me with a hammer."

That sensation did not occur until he was in his limousine and speeding away from the scene, the president said.

"It still seems unreal," he said.

Reagan said he continued to suffer from what doctors told him was "one of the longest enduring discomforts" because of his type of injury.

"It doesn't go away," he said. "There is that pain."

Wearing a blue-gray suit, Reagan walked with a steady although slightly stiff gait as he entered the Map Room in the White House for the 19-minute interview. His cheeks were ruddy and his voice showed no effect of the lung injury he received.

In response to a quick question about how he was doing, he declared: "I'm feeling fine." But later he spoke of the continuing pain and said he was not ready "to hurdle any tables for awhile." Nonetheless, he said his recovery "is astonishing to me."

Officials ordered to find a solution to troubled schools

BOSTON — A Massachusetts judge, expressing reluctance to intervene, yesterday gave city officials two more days to find a way to keep open the financially wobbly Boston school system.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Morse, despite pleas from the state Board of Education and the teachers union that he issue an order immediately, asked lawyers for the mayor and the School Committee to do "everything humanly possible to see if a resolution can be achieved short of a court judgment."

Morse had set yesterday afternoon deadline for the mayor and the City Council to produce a plan to bail out the nation's oldest school system. However, political tension between Mayor Kevin H. White and the nine-member council reached a climax when, hours before the deadline, White rejected a $75 million bond and tax package designed to keep the schools open.

Morse accepted a suggestion by his appointed master, Harvard Law School Professsor Charles Haar, that he give city officials more time to work out a compromise. Haar said a solution to the schools' financial dilemma was close but that it was being blocked by "extraneous matters."

Group claims to have a lead on suspect in Atlanta killings

By DICK PETTYS
Associated Press

ATLANTA — A civil rights organization claimed yesterday to have a witness who can link one person to six or more of Atlanta's killings of young blacks and challenged police to arrest the culprit within 72 hours.

Roy Innis, chairman of the New York-based Congress of Racial Equality, told reporters on the steps of City Hall he has a photograph of the individual, whom he described as a "psychopath."

Innis said he tried unsuccessfully to give the information to Mayor Maynard Jackson and Vice President George Bush, who has served as a liaison between the federal government and city investigators working on the cases.

If police do not arrest the person CORE believes is linked to the slayings within 72 hours, he said, his organization will "make the collar" itself.

A spokeswoman for Jackson said the mayor "has no comment at all on that press conference."

Spokeswoman Dorothy Carr said there had been no contact between CORE and the mayor's office to her knowledge, adding, "No one remembers talking with or seeing" Innis.

Innis, who refused to say whether the individual was white or black, male or female, said his information was developed by a special task force organized by CORE that had worked with parents of the 25 slain young blacks. He said he was announcing the information to the news media in an effort to force Atlanta authorities to look at it.

He said CORE was able to develop the information because parents and members of the community trusted CORE more than police.

Innis, CORE's director for the past eight years, currently is embroiled in legal challenges to his leadership of the organization and fund-raising techniques used in New York and other states. CORE dissidents, claiming Innis runs the group like a dictator, are attempting to run an alternate CORE.

Southwest to vote today for assembly officers

By LAURIE CANTALUPO
Collegian Correspondent

Although three of the four Southwest Assembly positions are uncontested, residents of the Southwest Residential Area will go to the polls today to elect next year's SWA officers.

Vying for the office of co-presidents are Steve Wysocki and Kevin O'Rourke against Ruth Mazzola and Theresa Kolish. O'Rourke, 20, is a sophomore residing in Moore House and an undecided major. He said he and Wysocki want to "make the students more informed on what the SWA is and does."

Their opponent, Mazzola, also resides in Moore House and is a 19-year-old sophomore majoring in education and psychology. Her running mate, Kolish, is a 20-year-old sophomore communication studies major who lives in Cance. They said they would like to see "more student awareness of the issues that face them."

Running uncontested for co-vice presidents are Marjorie Harlow and Andy Prescott. Prescott, 18, is a political science major and a member of the class of 1984. The two said they plan on leaving the social events mainly to the social and cultural committees, under the supervision of Harlow, while Prescott will concentrate on the issues. They would like to make SWA "a more issue-oriented body," Prescott said.

Alyce Russo, 19, is running uncontested for the position of treasurer. She is a sophomore majoring in business. She said she would like to put more into the position of treasurer and "be an active member of the executive committee."

"I would like to see more things done for the area beyond just social events," she said.

For the Office of Communications, Coordinator Beth Cooney is running uncontested. Cooney, 18, is a freshman journalism major residing in Emerson. She said she would like to bring the Southwest area together and "establish a way of communicating to students what SWA is doing."

Professor urges more UMass participation in state government

By STEPHANIE KLEIN
Collegian Staff

With Proposition 2½ and impending budget cuts, the University of Massachusetts must seek measures to reduce the financial burden through an active voice in the political arenas in the state legislature, Ralph Whitehead, assistant to the Chancellor for external affairs, said yesterday.

Appointed to the position of chancellor's assistant this past December, Whitehead, a journalism professor at UMass, has background in the design and execution of political campaigns.

Whitehead stressed that he was not involved in public relations for the University but that his work entailed locating tangible ties with alumni involved in the state legislature and other areas of the commonwealth who would be inclined to help the University in its lobbying efforts.

Historically, the University has had a low profile in the state legislature partly due to its geographic distance from the political center of the state and partly because it has failed to make demands of people who would be willing to help, Whitehead said at a meeting of the Resource Network.

"We're simply not in a dialogue with the rest of the state," said Whitehead. "The people here have good ideas but they don't know who to talk to."

Future plans to create public sensitivity include using a direct mailing list to get new students' parents involved in university developments and encouraging active lobbying involvement from highly motivated students from such programs as the University Without Walls, he said.

Gaining exposure in forums of public debate, such as the Boston Globe, are also planned.

"If you're not regarded as a player," said Whitehead, "you may as well not exist."

Traditionally, the university has been involved in efforts to alleviate inflationary pressures in areas of health, food, energy and housing, which were responsible for 85 percent of the inflation pressure of the 1970's, said Whitehead, yet these efforts go unnoticed.

"The dollars spent on state education is the best single investment on economic growth," Whitehead said.

Rep. Barney Frank to speak on New Right and Moral Majority

By MICHAEL SULLIVAN
Collegian Correspondent

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., of the 4th Congressional district, will speak tonight at 8 on "Democracy, the New Right, and the Moral Majority" in room 101 of the Campus Center.

Frank got his start in Massachusetts politics in 1968 serving as executive assistant to Mayor Kevin White before moving on to serve as administrative assistant to Congressman Michael Harrington in 1971. He represented Ward 5 of the city of Boston in the State House of Representatives from 1973-80.

When Pope John Paul II pressured Jesuit Congressman Robert Drinan to step down last summer, Frank seized the opportunity and won a hotly contested battle for the vacated 4th Congressional seat last November.

While a state representative, Frank served as a member of both the House Ways and Means Committee and the Special Commission on Civil Service, and also served as vice-chair of the Advisory Commission on Implementation of the Wage Reporting System. In his current congressional position, Frank serves on the committee on banking, finance and urban affairs, committee on government operations, committee on the judiciary, and the select committee on aging, as well as several sub-committees.

The New Jersey native graduated Magna Cum Laude from Harvard in 1962.

The event is co-sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and B'nai B'rith Hillel, and admission is free.

Collegian meeting

All staff members of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian are reminded that a staff meeting will be held at 6:30 tonight in room 804 Campus Center to discuss the mandatory awareness seminars.

In addition, staff members and other students wishing to attend this weekend's conference on the future of journalism must do so by 6 p.m. today. Reduced rates on the conference fee are available to Collegian staff members (see ad on page 18).

Arts program offers variety of instruction

By SUSAN GLADWIN
Collegian Correspondent

Perhaps you have walked by the old chapel and wondered what's inside it. Since you were too busy or shy to look, you didn't know that the Performing Arts Division (PAD) is located there. Everyday, students and non-students are studying music, theater, and dance under well qualified instructors at reasonable prices.

Supported by the Fine Arts Center and the music and dance department, the Performing Arts Division "exists to serve the student," says Diane Jenkins, assistant coordinator. Classes for the aspiring musician include arranging, composing, theory, song-writing and voice. Dance-exercise, tap, ballet, modern and jazz dance are offered. Harp, lute, and harpsichord are among the many instruments for which multi-leveled courses are offered.

Both group and private lessons are available, conducted by a faculty of about 65 professionals, post-graduates and the music and dance faculty. Highly qualified undergraduates and graduates also teach. To see if a particular level or instructor is right for an individual, students can take a conference lesson for a one-time fee of $5 plus the teacher's fee.

One must pay a $20 registration fee to take a class through PAD. Costs range from $3 to $6 for a half-hour (longer times are offered), depending on the level of instruction. There is a $2 processing fee for each additional class. Class times are arranged between student and teacher and spring classes can be arranged to continue during the summer.

"We definitely are growing," said Jenkins. PAD does more than give lessons, she said. They inform students of music and dance events and faculty and students give recitals.

Workshops are continually offered. The Odissa Dance Artists, featuring Ranjana Haksar, are currently teaching and performing the temple dance styles of India.

A six-week workshop is in process, covering community theater, nightclub and Broadway auditioning, under the direction of Anne Rothenberg, a faculty member at UMass.

It's not too late to start a class this spring. So, if you'd like to explore the performing arts, give PAD a call or drop in, now that you know what's inside the old chapel.

Polanski transforms a classic novel into a masterpiece film

By RALPH HYBELS
Collegian Correspondent

Tess must not be missed. Roman Polanski's adaptation of Thomas Hardy's novel, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," restores confidence in the capacity of film to do full justice to a great novel. Polanski's camera is as accurate and insightful as anyone's descriptive prose.

Filmed in France, he paints Hardy's nineteenth century English countryside, a landscape of rolling hills, scattered farms and villages, skies sometimes blue, more often cast over with a brooding grey. Muck and drizzle pervade the fields where peasants must toil endlessly to work their lives from the stubborn earth. We are drawn into the universe of Hardy's writing, where the drama of character's lives is determined by their environment, where individual free will is a very weak defense.

Tess Derbyfield was born into this world as a lily among weeds and debris. Nastassia Kinski, the 20 year-old German actress is not merely pretty. Her beauty has a sensuous quality, not exotic, but exquisite in expression. She is perfect for this role. As Tess, her downturned eyes and demure looks seem coy, but in fact express her feeling of separation from a dirty existence in the wrong time and place.

Born into a noble line (D'Urberville) that had lost its title and fallen into poverty, she is a cultivated and graceful courtier in an age when the privileges of noble blood have been usurped by the new capitalist class. The representative of this new class, Alec, played by Leigh Lawson is a seducer, allowed little sympathy by either Hardy or Polanski.

In fact, there is not a man in the entire story who could be viewed in a good light. Angel, played by Peter Firth, embodies the double standard of men everywhere. He represents the Anglican moral hypocrisy of his parents, which he pretends to have rejected. When he learns, after marrying Tess, that she is not the virgin he had presumed her to be he rejects her as not the woman he married. "The woman I have been loving is not you, but another woman in your shape."

Thus, he and the other men contribute to the fall of Tess of the D'Urbervilles. She is a victim of her social environment, and, like her fellow workers in the fields, seems the pawn of an omnipresent Nature. Hardy's deterministic Nature is everywhere, silent in the spring buds, in the stars, turned up with the potatoes in the fields. The hills are warm, calm and serene. Tess seems a reflection of the natural beauty around her. She strives for happiness, but she succumbs to manipulation, she is driven to lament that she should be dead with her ancestors in the D'Urberville family crypt.

Her gradual turn from Christianity to the paganism of her pre-historic ancestors shows her acknowledgement of the powers governing her life. This spiritual awakening culminates in a kind of ritual self-sacrifice at Stonehenge. The image of this most beautiful of women, whose vulnerable sensitivity, focused in the curl of her lip, makes all men desire to possess her, sleeping in the curve of a fallen stone slab is not quickly forgotten.

Her life is raped by fate, by the tragedy of her circumstance as much as she is violated by Alec, her nouveau-riche cousin. In just under three hours, Polanski succeeds in presenting a full epic experience. Oh, the pleasures of melancholy! There is a beauty in tragedy, a sensation of vicarious pain like the caress of a sharp blade in the hand of a trusted friend.

Editor discusses reporter's integrity

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Journalism's new scandal dominated a convention of the nation's newspaper editors yesterday, but the executive editor of the Washington Post told his competitors that none is safe from a reporter who is determined to lie.

The meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors was filled with talk of the Pulitzer Prize that the Post gave up last week after reporter Janet Cooke confessed the story which won it was a hoax.

"If you have a rule that makes an editor check every single fact," said Executive Editor Benjamin Bradlee of the Post, "you are going to put out a monthly newspaper" instead of a daily.

Miss Cooke is black, her immediate editor is black, and her story concerned a black child, 8-year-old "Jimmy," whose mother watched as her boyfriend shot heroin into his arm.

The race issue was brought up on Tuesday by a black Washington Star editor who served on the panel that awarded Miss Cooke's Pulitzer Prize.

"The greatest injury Miss Cooke has done with her fabrication is not to the Pulitzer prizes, however, or even to the Washington Post," wrote Roger Wilkins, an associate editor of the Star. "It is to blacks in newsrooms all over the country."

Miss Cooke has refused to discuss the case since she apologized and resigned from the Post last Wednesday.

Bradlee, who is white, said the race of reporter and editor "probably made me trust them more, not less...I considered them expert in this area."

He said any suggestion that race and affirmative action led the Post to hire Miss Cooke is "baloney."

Newspapers, Bradlee said, are forced to rely on their reporters and therefore are vulnerable.

"You cannot legislate, you cannot make a rule that is going to prevent, preserve you, save you, from a pathological liar," Bradlee said. "There is no such rule. In the last analysis there is going to have to be trust."

Both in formal session and in the corridors, editors at the ASNE convention talked of little else.

Bill Green, the Post's ombudsman—a reader's representative—last Sunday printed a lengthy account of how the fake story escaped the Post's internal checks and was published Sept. 28, 1980 on the front page of the paper.

He cited editors' early doubts about the story because Miss Cooke was not street-wise. Green told the editors yesterday that the Post ignored such warning signals and adopted a defensive posture.

Scooter's album lacks originality and smoothness; a jumble of poor production

The Scooters
Blue Eyes* (EMI)

There are two good things about Blue Eyes, the debut album from The Scooters. The first is that this work "is dedicated to the memory of John Lennon," and the second is an interesting sleeve design. Do not be fooled, however; Bill Burk's artwork cannot justify this waste of vinyl.

From their self-conscious posing on the inner sleeve, the band would have us believe that they were the next best thing to blueberry muffins. Unfortunately this album puts forward a very convincing case to the contrary.

Despite being a collection of songs written by the band, the album's most striking aspect is its lack of originality. From Supertramp ("Where Did We Go Wrong") to Pat Benetar ("Love Stealer") to Joe Jackson ("Time") to The Vapors ("Alien Night"), we are subjected to weak vocals, turgid playing and overused cliches.

The quality of production is so inferior that it sounds as if the entire album was recorded under a mattress. The only half-decent song on the album, "In Love Again," suffers as a consequence.

So scoot off guys, get a production job that doesn't leave your songs competing with flaccid celery, and take some courses in Elements of Thinking (190), and maybe the next album will be less underwhelming. Surely John deserves better than this.

Blues guitarist John Lee Hooker will be appearing in a free concert next Wednesday night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Hot Damn!

It's another big weekend of entertainment in the Pioneer Valley, and there's a bunch of "big" acts coming to the area.

Saturday night you've got a choice of Hall and Oates at Mount Holyoke or Pat Metheny at the Paramount Theater in Springfield.

Tickets for Metheny are reasonably priced at $7.50 and $8.50. He recently toured with Joni Mitchell and is also featured guitarist on her double live album Shadows and Light.

Hall and Oates cost $9.00 and that'll be general admission.

Tonight the Paper Dolls will be at Rahar's. They've got a gig scheduled for May in Boston's Channel club, where they'll back up Velvet Underground alumni John Cale.

Also tonight, Greg Kihn will be at Stage West in Hartford. Kihn just released a new album entitled Rockihnroll.

Tomorrow night you get another chance to see NRBQ. This time they're at the Rusty Nail. They usually offer an entertaining evening.

The Elevators, amazingly enough, are not playing, anywhere in the area this weekend, but don't worry, they'll be back at the Hangar in the near future.

Friday night Boston's own Rings will be at the Hangar.

In case you missed it, the results of the contest to rename the Blue Wall came in a while back, and they've voted to retain the present name. Golly, all that excitement for nothing.

The Wall welcomes The Trademarks Friday night and B. Willie Smith on Saturday.

Next Wednesday The Commuter Collective is sponsoring a free concert with blues guitarist John Lee Hooker in the Student Union Ballroom. Hooker is one of the great blues men, and this is a superb chance to see him.

I think Santana must be so rich that they don't have to stick to signed agreements like the rest of the world. I think they're a wonderful band.

Roger Taylor of Queen recently released his first solo album called Fun in Space. Let's hope he makes better music individually than Queen has been producing as a group the last couple of years.

Students columnist fears threats after making death wish for Reagan

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Dominic Manno made a mistake: He wished, in public, on paper, for the death of the president of the United States. Now he worries that someone may be wishing the same for him.

"It's a sobering thought. There are 20 people out there that want me dead," the 23- year-old University of Pennsylvania senior said in discussing the threats he has received since the appearance in print of his college newspaper column commenting on the assassination attempt on President Reagan.

"You don't worry about the people who call. It's the people that don't call. They worry you," he said, shaking a head framed by curly black hair and a beard.

In the weekly column he wrote for The Daily Pennsylvanian's op-ed page, Manno said he set out to portray the national outpouring of grief and horror over the Reagan attack as "somewhat hypocritical" when so many others suffer violence every day.

"When the news first broke with the report that Reagan had not been wounded, my first reaction was, 'Too bad he missed. That's the result of sending an amateur to do a professional job,'" Manno wrote in the April 1 edition. "Then with the news that he had been shot, my reaction had changed to, 'I hope he dies.'"

Later in the column, Manno suggested some people may be so frustrated with election results that they use bullets to cancel out ballots.

"A lot of people feel that way about the system," he concluded. "Including me."

The words seemed to pain him as he recalled the chain of events in an interview. "It was a first reaction. It was a gut reaction to the news and it wasn't well thought out or rational," he said.

"Later, I was surprised I ever felt that way. I let my hatred for Ronald Reagan the politician overwhelm my respect for the man, which everyone deserves."

Coming so soon after the March 30 attempt on Reagan's life, the words set off a blast of criticism from readers. The fallout is still raining down on him, his family and the university.

Manno knew something was amiss when he arrived at the newspaper office the afternoon of April 1.

"The phones were ringing off the hook, which is unusual at that time of day," he said. "The callers would say something and then hang up. A lot of them were obscene — your standard impossible anatomical suggestions."

Then, just hours after the column appeared, two Secret Service agents appeared at the offices of the 96-year-old, five day-a-week paper. They told Manno they were checking his background and wanted to know whether he was a person who would act out violent ideas. When they left, they said they'd be talking to the U.S. attorney.

"Scenes from bad prison movies flashed through my head," Manno said.

Callers then began reaching Manno's parents at their south Philadelphia home. It was their first news of their son's column.

"What the hell did you write?" asked Manno's mother, Elizabeth, when she finally got through to the paper. She was "pretty shook up" by the phone calls, which her husband, Francis, described as abusive: "They'd say 'Bang, bang, you're dead' or 'Bang, bang, you're next." Two weeks after the column, she went into the hospital for a day of blood pressure tests.

Within days, Manno and his editors were deluged with interview requests. The column was condemned in Philadelphia newspaper editorials and letters to the editor. Newsweek magazine reported this week that first-lady Nancy Reagan was so enraged by Manno's death wish for her husband that she asked Attorney General William French Smith whether the student could be punished. The White House has denied Mrs. Reagan made any request for prosecution.

Dominic Mullo, who wrote in a column that he wished President Ronald Reagan would die from his gunshot wounds, says he now fears for his own life. The college senior was cut from the staff of his school newspaper, The Daily Pennsylvanian, following the column's publication.

Heating oil leak reported

About 200 gallons of heating oil reportedly leaked from the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant fuel pump house on Tuesday, April 14, it was learned yesterday.

Art Clifford, director of the UMass News Bureau, confirmed yesterday that 200 gallons of number 6 fuel oil leaked about 6 a.m. when an oil strainer seal failed. The oil apparently leaked into a floor drain and was discovered by the UMass sewage treatment plant, Clifford said. No drinking water supplies were endangered in the mishap, he said.

Clifford also said that the leak was repaired by Physical Plant personnel and the oil was cleaned up by Southampton Sanitary Engineering Company. He did not know the cost of the cleanup operation.

Speech to center on creative possibilities for engineers

Nathaniel Wyeth will give a speech entitled "Creativity in Engineering," centering on how people can use the certain amount of creativity Wyeth said he feels they are born with to solve problems, at 3 p.m. today in the Engineering East Auditorium.

Wyeth comes from a very creative family. His father, N. C. Wyeth, was a well-known illustrator; his sister Henriette is a portrait artist; and his brother is Andrew Wyeth, the famous painter. Wyeth said he feels this creative background helped him discover ways to use his innate creativity to solve the problems he encountered in his 40 years of work at Dupont.

The program will start at 2:40 p.m. with coffee outside of the auditorium and there will be refreshments and an informal discussion following the speech.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

It's like trying to teach a cat to say 'Thanks'

In public, he mangles the English language worse than any high official since Eisenhower.
Newsweek, March 16, 1981

"Come in, Alexander. Take your seat, please."

"Listen, we're going to have to skip the lesson today, okay lady? I got a meeting with the President in an hour and I..."

"I am not your lady, Mr. Haig. I am your tutor and you are my student. You are to address me as Miss Feingold. Is that clear? Now take your seat."

"Yeh, yeh, sure. It's just that I got this meeting with the president..."

"You what?"

Bob Conte

"I said I got this meeting in an hour..."

"You do not got a meeting, Alexander. You have a meeting. Do you understand? We do not got things. We have them. You must think about what you're saying, Alexander. How does it look for a Secretary of State to go traipsing about the world speaking like a functional illiterate?"

"Hey, if you think you can intimidate me you're barking around the wrong fence, understand? I gotta get to my meeting. See ya next week."

"You will not leave until after your lesson. I spoke with the President this morning and he told me to make sure you put in your full hour today. He said that your press conferences are a disgrace to your country and the entire English speaking world and that it is my job to make the White House safe for literacy again."

"That rotted out ancient son of a bitch..."

"Alexander! I will not have that language in my classroom. Now take your seat at once!"

"It's not my fault, dammit! I aint no poofed-out fag English expert. I'm United States Army! There aint no syntax in foxholes, lady. Just the universal language."

"Music in foxholes?"

"Gunfire! Speaks a hell of a lot better than words. You rip off a quick round six inches over Charlie's head and he'll know damn straight what you're trying to tell him."

"That is enough! Sit down this instant or you can be sure the President will hear about this!"

"And if Charlie turns and runs, then he buys one in the back. That's what I told my boys in Nam, lady. You thing good grammar matters to an adolescent communist lying knee deep in slop with his guts hanging out of his mouth?"

"Sit down Alexander! Put your flag back in your pocket and let's get to work!"

"I'm sorry, lady. Sometimes I get caught up in the moment. God, I love this country!"

"And your country loves you. But you're a high public official now..."

"And rising every day. Heh, heh."

"...and you must be able to express yourself clearly and correctly. Some of these memos to the President are absolutely ghastly."

"Where the hell'd you get those? Those memos are A-1 confidential documents!"

"The President dropped them off this morning for me to correct with you. Listen to this sentence, Alexander. 'Listen Ron, you and me both know that Bush is a chicken dung jellyfish who, if you had unfortunately happened to kick off during surgery, would be the disastrest of Presidents of all time.'"

"Sounds good to me."

"It is horrendous, Alexander. Incorrect personal pronoun, shifting of tenses, awkward mixing of metaphors, inappropriate tone of voice. Some of your words are not even words, for goodness sake."

"Would you give me a break, lady? I don't have time to sit around and figure out personal tones and metavoice shifts. I'm the damn Secretary of State! Alls I gotta know is how to keep the Russians from storming through yours and my living rooms, cause they're coming, lady! Sure as I'm standing here talking to you them sons of bitches are coming!"

"Those sons of bitches are coming, Alexander. Watch your pronouns."

"Yeh, hey, sure."

"Very good. Now, your assignment for next week is to correct these memos and to write a thousand word composition on a person whom you strongly admire."

"Can that be autobiographical?"

Diary of a Chooch: Week 1210

Eric Janszen

Having wildlife in my apartment living in their natural environment gives me a warm feeling that lasts the whole day through.

Monday — Diseased morning.Clouds dense as economists when I got up to shampoo my fish. And the floor was cold and wet, like my fish.

John's idea of using a trash pail as an aquarium is working out great. The fish love it. I threw the egg shells in there along with the bacon grease and everything else from breakfast. One of the grey eels has made a home in the orange juice carton. He rests his little head outside the opening, smiling cheerfully. Either that or he's dead.

Tuesday — I'm driving along tonight, minding my beer, not bothering anybody. I stop at the lights on main Street near town and this guy pulls out in front of me and stops. The light turns green. He reaches out and starts pissing around with his windshield wiper. I stick my head out the window and say, "Excuse me..." So what does the guy do? Does he move? No, he gives me the finger.

Okay. This cretin just flipped the bird out his tan and brown 1981 Toyota Celica in the direction of my phlem-green 1969 Plymouth Fury III. I'm thinking, there's a Japanese oil tanker, and me, an American nuclear submarine.

"Full speed ahead, Johnson."

"Aye, Captain!"

Caaaaaarunch!

"What in hell was that!? Surface, Johnson."

"Aye, Captain!"

"See anything?"

"Naw. Just a big oil slick and a few bathers."

"Very good, Johnson. Dive and continue on course to land Taiwan bars before closing at 13:00."

"Aye, Captain!"

Wednesday — Got a call from the police this morning. I was nervous at first. How did they trace my car when I traded license plates with a Jordan Marsh truck just last week, I wondered. But just as I almost chewed through the telephone cord, the policeman told me my landlord had filed a complaint against me for "vandalism."

Vandalism?! Why that ungrateful, sump-brained little hunchback! That vicious, simpering caske of yak's urine! I called him up and told him I go to a lot of trouble trying to fix the place up, and this is the thanks I get. I spend three weeks collecting over 3000 beer cans in my livingroom, then take a whole afternoon epoxying them one by one to the front of the house in a handsome grid pattern, spray-painting it a delicate pink and yellow, and covering the whole thing in nutritious apple butter, all to make my home beautiful before the community and before God.

He said I'll get the summons Friday.

Thursday — Depressed. I've been in bed all day drinking Ten High with my cats. Martini passed out hours ago, but Rossi's still staggering around wet on the roof howling. I soaked him down after he scratched my Dead Kennedy's album, right across "A Holiday in Cambodia." The day, a total loss.

Friday — Patrolman Peterson came by today to serve the summons. I nailed the door shut downstairs, but he still got in. I used a whole gallon of lithium grease on the stairs and banister, but he still made it to the second floor. He let out a holler when he tried moving the electrified bed frame, but he got by that too. He had some trouble with the acid pool, though. But he got up here, and in only 13 hours. I was glad to accept the summons from him. How I respect a public servant who earns my tax dollars.

Saturday — Slept.

Sunday — Sat on the roof drinking Ten High, recovering from yesterday, and, as always, from the whole ordeal that started 23 years ago.

My fishes died. C'est la vie. (That's French for "screw it.")

Defending the G core

Recently there has been much controversy over the adoption of a G-Core (Social Cognizance) requirement at UMass which would require students to take two semesters of classes dealing with institutional racism. I would like to point out that this requirement would not mean any additional classes for students, since the proposal is that there be a reduction in the current C and D core requirements.

Not only would students benefit from such a program, but the University itself would gain recognition for leading school systems in a fight against one of the most dominant social issues of our day. Surely the G-Core requirement should be respected as the demonstration of an effort to identify racial issues and combat racism.

Funding for this new program does not necessarily present a problem. The committee presently working with the proposal is hoping that it is possible to work within the resources already available to the university. Also, existing courses at the school could be altered in such a way that they would be able to fulfill the requirement of the G-Core. Though the enrollment in some courses may drop, there would be no need to eliminate positions for professors currently employed.

The threatening feeling that many students have concerning Third World studies may be lessened rather than intensified by becoming aware of our racial problems and ways in which they can be dealt with. One fear is that equality for Third World people would mean taking away from those of us who have traditionally been favored. Courses dealing with racism would help to clarify some of the disturbing beliefs that many have. A requirement such as the G-Core might be one way in which we can come close to understanding the needs of all, rather than continuing to feel resentment towards each other.

The University of Massachusetts has the facade of a liberal educational institution. There are many problems plaguing the University and I am compelled to bring up yet another problem that affects many students at this campus. As a Medicaid recipient I cannot have the UMass Health Services charge my Medicaid card for medical or pharmecutical needs. I must, like others, pay $141 per year for the mandatory health fee, — unneeded and unused. This is unnecessary, unfair, and quite typical of the bureaucratic red tape that holds this university and its students by our throats.

Regardless of UHS, as a student on Medicaid I still have the option to see a private physician. This would result in a $50.00 per hour bill sent to the welfare department. Because I also receive financial aid that goes toward paying the health fee, it is ludicrous that, at a time when state money is tight, the state is picking up the tab for my health care more than once.

In order for any student to have this $141 waived we must join the Valley Health Plan, a private non-profit organization that holds a monopoly over UMass and Amherst Health Services. In my case, since a single individual cannot join VHP alone, I must either produce an offspring myself or have my family join VHP. The result of my family's participation would be that they would have to travel over 100 miles for medical services. If we were to join, the state would pay a $30 per month premium, while VHP would pay UHS for my treatment.

Sounds complicated? Well it is! Those of us receiving Medicaid should not be subjected to such hassles to ensure proper health care. I have found little cooperation dealing with this issue. I am concerned with the bureaucratic waste of $141 that might help myself or another student with educational expenses. As a result of requiring Medicaid recipients to pay the UMass Health fee the students lose, the University loses, the state loses, which means the taxpayers lose.

Flaunting the law

Regarding C. Mileski's letter "Big laws for little guns," I must point out some errors in the facts and figures concerning handguns. I'll quote mine from the data gathered yearly by the FBI.

Although one murder is one too many, handguns are not responsible for 22,000 murders a year, as was quoted. Out of the estimated 55 million handguns in the U.S., approximately 5,000 are used in the taking of a life. This amounts to less than 1/10 of one percent of all handguns in the U.S. Using these figures, I find that about 90,000 have died in the years since 1963. A very large difference from the 400,000 quoted. More lives are taken by car accidents on our nation's highways in two years than in 18 years by murders from handguns.

Saying there are 25,000 handgun laws is also slightly incorrect. These 25,000 laws regulate all firearms and not just handguns. Hopefully, our courts will find it beneficial to enforce the laws now on the books. As for now, only the honest citizen abides by these laws and not the criminals who are subjected to our revolving-door judicial system.

Lastly, if we were to ban all handguns, how long would it take before someone shortened a rifle or shotgun with a hacksaw? Ban all hacksaws too?

On the positive side, the statement closest to being correct was that of severe penalties. Regardless of the kind of weapons used, murder is murder and should be dealt with swiftly. Only when everyone associates crime with criminals and the commission of a crime with swift, sure justice will America start to see a reduction in the crime rate.

Americans should write to their legislators to encourage them to support crime control legislation. We've suffered too long at the hands of those who flaunt the laws of this country with impertinence.

Remembering a genocide

Armenians all over the world are in mourning tomorrow, for tomorrow marks the 66th year of the first genocide of this century. The massacre of 1.5 million Armenians by the Turks.

Armenians call themselves Hay and their country Hayasdan after Hayk, a legendary archer, grandson of Japhet who was the son of Noah (Genesis 10:1). Armenians became the first nation to adopt Christianity as their official state religion. This came about through the efforts of St. Gregory the Illuminator in 301 A.D. The Armenian language is the only modern representative of a distinct branch of the Indo-European language family. Its alphabet was invented by St. Sahag and St. Mesrob in 406 A.D. Ancient Armenia was situated in the center of the ancient East-West invasion routes. As a result most of the old Armenia came under the ruthless rule of the expanding Ottoman Empire in 1514. Centuries of intermittent persecution followed. With the outbreak of World War I, a group called the "Young Turks" saw a chance to annihilate the Armenian nation.

In early 1915 the first part of an extermination campaign was carried out successfully and secretly in an atmosphere of white-hot murderous fanaticism. On April 24th, 1000 leading Armenians who lived in Constantinople were taken from the city and executed.

The leader of the "Young Turks" and the arch murderer Talaat Pasha decreed that "The Government...destroy completely all Armenians living in Turkey...An end must be put to their existance, however criminal the measures taken may be, and no regard must be paid to either age or sex nor to conscientious scruples."

By 1916 the Armenian race had lost a million and a half persons by the gun or the bayonet, by deliberate starvation, and by privation. About a third of the Armenian population was destroyed. Later tyrants were to mark well the indifference with which the world as a whole greeted the Armenian tragedy. As Hitler remarked on the eve of World War II, "After all, who remembers today the extermination of the Armenians?"

The Turkish government of 1915 had coldly decided to exterminate the Armenian people. Since then, all succeeding Turkish governments have even denied the existance of the Genocide itself. Today the Armenians number between five and six million, half of whom live in a small portion of historic Armenia that now exists as the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic. The rest are scattered all over the world.

The Armenians demand that the crime of Genocide committed against the Armenian nation in 1915 years following be condemned by the international community, through the United Nations and by Turkey.

We demand that the harassment of Armenians remaining in Turkey and the destruction of the monuments of the ancient Armenian culture cease. We also demand the return of all lands inhabited by our people since 94 B.C. for the formation of a modern Armenian nation.

Rebel with a cause

In response to the caption, "Rebel without a Cause" of the 4/17 Collegian front page photo of a UMass student enjoying a New Wave act, I would like to know what this statement implies. Is he a rebel because he wears a leather jacket and a dog collar instead of an alligator shirt and a baseball cap? If so, there are many, many causes to rebel against. It may be the alligator he is rebeling against; or in general the fraternity mentality that dominates on our campus.

What would the caption read on a photo of a UMass student enjoying a disco act at a local club such as Poor Richard's? How about "Sucker for a Beat?" What would the caption read on a photo of a UMass student enjoying a Dead-Head act at a local club? How about "Regression to the sixties?" At least these last two stereotypes would get original phrases — not something stolen from a movie. The man on the front page of Friday's paper isn't James Dean, so why say "Rebel without a Cause?" Let's be original and say "Rebel with a Cause."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

It's like trying to teach a cat to say 'Thanks'

In public, he mangles the English language worse than any high official since Eisenhower.
Newsweek, March 16, 1981

"Come in, Alexander. Take your seat, please."

"Listen, we're going to have to skip the lesson today, okay lady? I got a meeting with the President in an hour and I..."

"I am not your lady, Mr. Haig. I am your tutor and you are my student. You are to address me as Miss Feingold. Is that clear? Now take your seat."

"Yeh, yeh, sure. It's just that I got this meeting with the president..."

"You what?"

Bob Conte

"I said I got this meeting in an hour..."

"You do not got a meeting, Alexander. You have a meeting. Do you understand? We do not got things. We have them. You must think about what you're saying, Alexander. How does it look for a Secretary of State to go traipsing about the world speaking like a functional illiterate?"

"Hey, if you think you can intimidate me you're barking around the wrong fence, understand? I gotta get to my meeting. See ya next week."

"You will not leave until after your lesson. I spoke with the President this morning and he told me to make sure you put in your full hour today. He said that your press conferences are a disgrace to your country and the entire English speaking world and that it is my job to make the White House safe for literacy again."

"That rotted out ancient son of a bitch..."

"Alexander! I will not have that language in my classroom. Now take your seat at once!"

"It's not my fault, dammit! I aint no poofed-out fag English expert. I'm United States Army! There aint no syntax in foxholes, lady. Just the universal language."

"Music in foxholes?"

"Gunfire! Speaks a hell of a lot better than words. You rip off a quick round six inches over Charlie's head and he'll know damn straight what you're trying to tell him."

"That is enough! Sit down this instant or you can be sure the President will hear about this!"

"And if Charlie turns and runs, then he buys one in the back. That's what I told my boys in Nam, lady. You thing good grammar matters to an adolescent communist lying knee deep in slop with his guts hanging out of his mouth?"

"Sit down Alexander! Put your flag back in your pocket and let's get to work!"

"I'm sorry, lady. Sometimes I get caught up in the moment. God, I love this country!"

"And your country loves you. But you're a high public official now..."

"And rising every day. Heh, heh."

"...and you must be able to express yourself clearly and correctly. Some of these memos to the President are absolutely ghastly."

"Where the hell'd you get those? Those memos are A-1 confidential documents!"

"The President dropped them off this morning for me to correct with you. Listen to this sentence, Alexander. 'Listen Ron, you and me both know that Bush is a chicken dung jellyfish who, if you had unfortunately happened to kick off during surgery, would be the disastrest of Presidents of all time.'"

"Sounds good to me."

"It is horrendous, Alexander. Incorrect personal pronoun, shifting of tenses, awkward mixing of metaphors, inappropriate tone of voice. Some of your words are not even words, for goodness sake."

"Would you give me a break, lady? I don't have time to sit around and figure out personal tones and metavoice shifts. I'm the damn Secretary of State! Alls I gotta know is how to keep the Russians from storming through yours and my living rooms, cause they're coming, lady! Sure as I'm standing here talking to you them sons of bitches are coming!"

"Those sons of bitches are coming, Alexander. Watch your pronouns."

"Yeh, hey, sure."

"Very good. Now, your assignment for next week is to correct these memos and to write a thousand word composition on a person whom you strongly admire."

"Can that be autobiographical?"

Last Call for a 19 year old University of Massachusetts Sophomore to become a 21 year old Army Officer.

The Army offers college sophomores the opportunity to earn an officer's commission in two years. The deadline for this year's class is soon.

Apply now and once you are accepted for the special two year program, you attend a six week's summer camp, for which you'll be paid approximately $400. And that's not all. You may find yourself in the best physical condition you've ever been in.

Then back to college and the Army ROTC Advanced Course in the fall. If you've done exceptionally well at camp, you may be heading back to college with a full two-year scholarship.

For the next two years, you learn what it takes to be an Army officer. You get the kind of management and leadership and experience that will be an asset to you in any career, military or civilian. You will earn an extra $100 a month up to 20 months. And when you graduate, you will have earned your college degree along with the gold bars of an Army officer.

The Army ROTC Two-Year Program

If this is the kind of challenge you are looking for, you are the kind of student we are looking for.

THE DEAN'S LIST

It is anticipated that the Dean's List will soon be reactivated by the Faculty Senate. This means that if you completed 12 or more graded credits and achieved a minimum grade point average of 3.50 for the Fall 1980 semester, your name will appear on the list.

Those students on the Dean's List will be recognized in the Daily Collegian, and hometown newspapers. Additionally, a congratulatory note will be sent to each student's family.

If you choose not to be recognized for this distinction, contact the Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore, in person or by mail, before Monday, April 27. For more information, call TIPS at 545-1540. Request Tape #1013.

Immediate Action Needed to Save Bus System

Administration gives students a ride, in an effort to halt buses

To the Students:

For many years the Student Senate has allocated the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) for many crucial services. These services have ranged from WMUA to the Legal Services Office to the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA). One of the most important services that we have funded over the years is the bus service. Today, due to political games being played by the UMass administration, the largest free busservice in the country is in danger of disappearing.

President Reagan is proposing large cuts in federal funding of mass transit and inflation has eaten away at the budget for the bus system. Without an additional $100,000, there will have to be drastic cutbacks in the bus system. Unfortunately, the money in the Student Activities Tax Fund is finite, determined by the number of undergraduate students who attend school. In fact, in the next fiscal year we expect to have less money than the year before. It is quite impossible for this extra $100,000 to come out of the SATF.

In an informal poll, we found that students overwhelmingly supported maintaining the free bus service at its current levels. Over the past several months we have exhaustively investigated and researched all the possibleways that this could be done.We have made every reasonable cut in our budget that we could and we still could not find the increase that the transit system needs. We investigated charging a bus fare (every fare you pay the fed. count as revenue and proportionally reduce the amount they contribute). cutbacks in the system (the cutbacks needed to balance the SATF budget were too drastic), getting towns to contribute a larger share (proposition 2½ made this impossible), defered maintainence on the busses (only a stop gap measure for a few months), and on and on. We decided that the only way a free bus system could be maintained today and in the future was to establish a separate student fund fee under student control and kept as low as possible to fund the transit system.

This proposal met with widespread support except with Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance, George Beatty. So far he has adamantly opposed the proposal by putting roadblocks in our path at every stage. Apparently, he believes that there is extra money in our trust fund (which there isn't) and that he can attempt to play political games at the student's expense by forcing us to fund the transit system by cutting the budgets of other groups such as SCERA and LSO, which have been constant thorns in his side and which have literally saved students hundreds of thousands of dollars. The alternative that Mr. Beatty is attempting to force us to acquiesce to his demands or cut the bus system. We are confident that if the administration spent as much time fighting tuition hikes and budget cuts as they do in killing student initiative, this university would be a much better place.

Sadly, unless Mr. Beatty changes his position in the next few days we must inform the student body that due to Mr. Beatty, we will be able to do no better than to fund the transit service at last year's level. This will result in a 60-70% services cut in the bus system that some of us depend on. It will mean the probable elimination of certain routes as well as the elimination of all weekend and night service.

We are working hard to reverse this situation but we need your help. If you would like more information on this issue, please do not hesitate to call the Student Senate Office at 545-0341. Better yet, if you're angry enough and depend on the bus service and feel that it is a crucial service, call Vice-Chancellor Beatty at 545-1581 and tell him so. But do it today--for a free transit system tomorrow.

Mother Earth is suffering—perhaps terminally. Both individually and collectively, we must aid in her recovery. The manufacturing and use of plastic polyesters, synthetic acetates, and other artifically produced fabrics perpetuates the deterioration of Mother Earth. Cotton, wool and silk fibres (to name a few) are natural products our "Mother" gives to us for our welfare, warmth, and protection. Producing, using, and recycling these gifts aids both our well-being and our "Mother's" recovery.

In accordance with this belief, we at the Northampton Trading Co. are proud to offer new and selected recycled natural fibre clothing for your comfort and security and for our planet's continued prosperity.

Attempted coverup of radioactive leak concerns Japanese

TSURUGA, Japan — Tsuruga is not another Three Mile Island, officials in this port town of 63,000 insist, but they say they are angry and disturbed about the attempted coverup of a serious radioactive leak at a nearby nuclear power plant.

Unlike the Pennsylvania reactor accident two years ago in which radioactive gases were released into the atmosphere and hundreds were evacuated, life in this western Japanese city goes on pretty much as usual four days after it was announced that the worst radioactive leak in Japan's history had occurred eight miles away at the Tsuruga Nuclear Plant.

The Japan Atomic Power Co. insists the 56 workers involved in clean-up operations received only minimal dosages of radioactivity after the March 8 incident in which tons of radioactive waste water overflowed a storage tank. Fukui Prefecture (state) officials have given a clean bill of health to fish caught in the bay where some waste materials are believed to have flowed.

But the accident, unreported by the power company for more than a month, has marked the city, psychologically and economically.

"The company betrayed the trust of the people," said Kiyoshi Yoshimura, a leader of the anti-nuclear movement in Tsuruga. "We're shocked both by the leak and the attempt to conceal it." Yoshimura led 600 in a protest Tuesday, the only visible sign of protest yet.

The troubles for the 357,000- kilowatt boiling-water reactor started April 1 when a worker reported a 3-month-old "hairline crack" in the turbine to authorities in Tokyo. The crack was discovered in January, but not reported. Plant operations were stopped immediately.

This was one of the few games this season that a team has outshot the formidable Gorilla attack gunners. Hofstra led in this department, 46-40.

AROUND THE CREASE — Weller's third seven goal game of the season gives him a comfortable lead in team scoring with 34 goals and 20 assists for a total of 54 points in eight games...Corin is behind him with 25 goals and 19 assists...Skip Vosburgh leads the Gorillas in assists with 22...For all this talk about scoring, this first attack line is entirely unselfish when it comes to sticking them in. On countless occasions, Corin, Weller and Vosburgh have foregone the difficult, longer shot and passed off for an easier, surer shot to a teammate...As Corin says, "I would much rather make a good pass for a goal than score it myself. It's more of a team effort that way and it makes everyone a little happier."...If you're into comparing teams on the basis of common opponents, try this one on for size. Last Saturday, the Syracuse Orangemen downed first in Division Three Hobart, 12-11 in overtime. Earlier this season, Massachusetts beat the Hobart Orange 10-9. In overtime. Syracuse is ranked number three in the nation and Massachusetts is fifth. The Gorillas host Syracuse May 8. Be there...

The Minutemen were just not mentally in the nightcap of the doubleheader losing again this time by a score of 7-0.

UMass starter and eventual loser Tony Presnal battled with URI pitcher Ron Barber through the first three scoreless innings. Presnall gave up two runs in the fourth, but pitched well overall giving up only three hits with two strikeouts and three walks for his four inning stint. Vin Todd came in and pitched the next two and two thirds innings giving up five runs, but none of them were earned.

Cramer relieved Todd and got the final out for the Minutemen.

Jump for joy.

Gorillas ground Dutchmen

Weller scores seven

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — After the Flying Dutchmen of Hofstra University came out deceivingly strong in the first ten minutes of play here last night by taking a 2-0 lead, one scout from Syracuse University asked rhetorically, "These guys are ranked fifth in the nation?"

As if in response, fifteen seconds later the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse squad answered with an emphatic "yes", popping in five unanswered goals in over six minutes to take a lead they would keep and add to en route to a 14-8 win over the fifteenth-ranked Dutchmen, whose record drops to 2-5.

Massachusetts co-captain Paul Kinnane and his defensive crew held Hofstra to just two goals in their ten shot opening barrage. Kinnane, junior Steve Martino and senior Long Islander Mark Fierro held the Hofstra attack outside of a fifteen yard perimeter around the net.

Martino was all over the field and in one crowd-pleasing play, dodged four Dutchmen defensemen and survived three body checks in getting the ball to the UMass end.

Mass goalie Chris Bennedetto served as a wall in front of the net, robbing the Flying Dutchmen of about seven goals that they should have scored and totalling 18 saves in the course of the evening.

"We let up a little in the end and didn't play as well as we can," Bennedetto said. "They had really good sticks and made the game pretty even."

Hofstra's leading scorer, junior attackman Gary Arnold, penetrated twice in the first ten minutes to give the Dutchmen a short-lived lead. Arnold tallied three goals and two assists on the game.

Hofstra had the home-field advantage (astroturf) and most of the fans. But Massachusetts played in front of what could be called a hometown crowd.

The Long Island natives, along with a guy from Ontario, Canada, Jim Weller, started a turnaround ten minutes into the game which stretched over the remainder of the contest. Attackman Skip Vosburgh of Manhasset, N.Y., was involved in three of the first five Massachusetts scores in the surge, amassing two goals and an assist. Vosburgh totalled three goals and four assists on the game.

Hofstra was just another team for junior attacker Weller. He continued to roll over opposing defenders by slamming in seven goals (equalling once again his season high for a single game which he set twice, against Cornell and Brown) and assisting on another. Weller and senior tri-captain Chris Corin combined for five goals in shattering a weak Hofstra zone defense that simply could not handle the Gorillas' pop-it-in-quick offensive attack.

Massachusetts tri-captain Pete Schmitz and the Manhasset Connection, Vosburgh and Corin, combined for three goals in last night's excusion under the lights. Schmitz, who led the middies, Mike Lavin and Tom Walters in playing a never-let-up game, tied the score at eight off of a pass from Vosburgh.

Midway through the fourth quarter, Hofstra started a slight comeback, scoring three unanswered goals in three minutes. Attackman Phil Faust, a freshman, scored two and Arnold tallied the third. Like their early-game lead, this attempt at a comback surge was short-lived.

In the final two minutes, Weller scored his final two goals, one unassisted and one from a pass by Corin to shut the lid on the victory for head coach Dick Garbers Gorillas who remain undefeated at 8-0.

This was one of the few games this season that a team has outshot the formidable Gorilla attack gunners. Hofstra led in this department, 46-40.

Rams take two from Mittmen

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I.—"It was just one of those losses that you have to put in your back pocket and sit on," said catcher Jim Aulenback after the University of Massachusetts baseball team was stunned twice yesterday in Kingston, dropping a doubleheader to the University of Rhode Island.

Despite another fine outing by pitcher Chuck Thompson (who was named co-New England player of the week, along with URI first baseman Tom Healy) the Mittmen dropped the opener in 10 innings, 4-3.

Thompson (5-1) pitched nine innings allowing just three runs, two of them earned, while scattering eight hits, striking out two and walking four.

UMass (13-12) took an early 1-0 lead in the second inning when Aulenback singled down the leftfield line. Firstbaseman Warren McReddie followed Aulenback with another hit through the hole between first and second moving Aulenback to third. He scored the games first run when rightfielder Keith Lovellette reached first on a fielders choice.

The Minutemen added another run in the third when second baseman Dean Bennett singled sharply with one out. With a one and two count on shortstop Vin Bonnano, Bennett stole second and moved to third when the Rams starting pitcher Dan Hastings (13-2) threw the ball into centerfield in an attempted pickoff of Bennett. Bennett scored on the next pitch on a sacrifice fly ball by Bonanno.

With one out in the fifth inning Thompson walked Ram thirdbaseman Dave Starrett and second baseman Joe Ouellette followed with a double, setting the stage centerfielder Bob Howard's single driving in both runs and tying the score at 2-2.

Things were still tied in the ninth inning when centerfielder Mark Litano reached base on an infield single off Ram reliever and eventual winner Rich Schmid. Litano stole second and went to third when the catchers throw to second ended up in centerfield. Litano scored the lead run on a wild pitch off Schmid.

URI (9-11) tied it again at 3-3 in the bottom of the ninth with two out when pinch runner Peter Terreri scored from second on a two base error by Lovellette.

URI scored the winning run in the tenth inning when Ted Haley crossed the plate following a walk by reliever Steve Cramer.

The Minutemen were just not mentally in the nightcap of the doubleheader losing again this time by a score of 7-0.

UMass starter and eventual loser Tony Presnal battled with URI pitcher Ron Barber through the first three scoreless innings. Presnall gave up two runs in the fourth, but pitched well overall giving up only three hits with two strikeouts and three walks for his four inning stint. Vin Todd came in and pitched the next two and two thirds innings giving up five runs, but none of them earned.

BOSTON—Larry Bird scored 23 of his team-high 34 points in the first half as the Boston Celtics took command early and breezed to a 118-99 triumph over the Philadelphia 76ers last night, tying their National Basketball Association playoff series at one victory apiece.

The third game of the best-of-seven Eastern Conference finals will be played in Philadelphia Friday night. The 76ers won the opener 105-104 Tuesday night to take away Boston's home court advantage.

The Celtics led all the way, scoring the game's first eight points and never looking back.

Bird and Nate Archibald scored 10 points apiece in the first quarter, which ended with Boston in front 30-22. The Celtics had also led by eight points after the opening period Tuesday night, but this time, instead of letting Philadelphia climb back into contention, Boston buried the 76ers with a 36-point second quarter to lead 66-47 at halftime.

The crucial spurt came late in the period when Philadelphia was held scoreless for 3:40 while Boston reeled off 14 straight points. Bird, M.L. Carr and Robert Parish had four points apiece as the Celtics stretched a 45-41 lead into a commanding 18-point advantage.

RUGGERS MEET — The University of Massachusetts Rugby team faced Chelsea College of England yesterday at UMass. The two teams played to a 12-12 tie.

'A' Ruggers tie Chelsea Club

By ELIZABETH McGOWAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's A side rugby scrummed, rucked, and mauled its way to a 12-12 tie against Chelsea College Rugby Club yesterday afternoon on the Boyden fields. The B side defeated Chelsea by a 12-3 score.

Both squads remain undefeated on the season. The A side is now 3-0-1, while the B's are 4-0.

Minutemen coach, "Doc" Lawrence said that the Chelsea team offered excellent competition for his team. "We had many chances to score in the first half, but we just didn't take advantage of them. Chelsea started using the ball intelligently in the second half and held us."

The opening twenty minutes of first half play were scoreless, although UMass dominated the line-outs and scrums. The Minutemen finally put themselves on the board when Greg Renaud, a transfer student from Indiana State University, took the ball over the try line. Scrum half Bruce Simmond's kick after the try was good and UMass led, 6-0.

Chelsea's back line was having trouble keeping possession of the ball, but strong play by their forwards kept the UMass ruggers from scoring. Before the first half ended, Chelsea tied the score, 6-6 on two three point kicks.

Both teams were evenly matched in second half play. After a knock-on by Chelsea, UMass had control of the ball in a scrum at about the 20 yard line. One play later Simmonds took the ball in for a try. His kick was good and the Minutemen were up 12-6.

However, Chelsea was quick to retaliate. After driving to UMass's end of the field, they scored on a penalty play. The score was tied once again with approximately 15 minutes of play remaining.

Chelsea had a chance to put the game away late in second half play, but the attempted kick was wide and the wind blown crowd had to settle for a hard fought tie.

UMass captain, Dave Packard, who injured his knee in first half action, echoed the opinion of his teammates when he said, "We should have beaten them, by quite a bit,"

Frank raps New Right

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.), told a Campus Center audience last night that the Moral Majority "operates out of a framework which is inherently hostile to minorities," and judges politicians by "how good a Christian they are...counter to the framework of the Constitution."

Frank called the New Right a skillful group of propagandists which correctly read the public mood of disillusionment with government in the last elections.

Frank said he personally faced opposition from Moral Majority forces in his election to representative of the fourth congressional district because of his non-Christian background.

He said the old political axiom: "if someone says something negative about you, ignore it," no longer holds true.

"Lies give you a big advantage," he said, "because people assume the lies will expose themselves, but do not."

Frank also said politicians do not get elected on their own, and must repay the persons that got them elected.

Reagan received much support from the neo-conservative tide, Frank said, and although he does not share their views or bigotries, he owes them." Reagan's cabinet appointment of William Richardson is evidence of this, Frank said. He called Richardson a "lunatic," who does not accept the existence of the Holocaust.

Frank also spoke of Reagan's budget plans, saying, "I do not think most people, even on the conservative side, understand the depth of the cuts."

He said Reagan's budget philosophy — not to make government programs better, but to make them less — is summed up by Budget Director David Stockman, who said "nobody's entitled to anything."

Frank also talked of Alexander Haig and his seeming obsession with the Soviet Union, saying, "the Secretary of State is not temperamentally and emotionally suited to be secretary of state."

Frank acknowledged there exists public support for military build-up following recent embarrassments such as Iran and Afghanistan, but added that their causes were not due to insufficient military ability.

Therapist says incest victims stereotype selves

by KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

A sexual assault therapist told a Psychology of Women class at the University of Massachusetts yesterday that in the past three and a half years she has dealt with 400 victims of incest in the Northampton area.

Joyce St. Pierre, who works for Networks in Northampton, a 24-hour psychiatric crisis intervention unit, said she expects to get busier.

According to St. Pierre, there has been a 1,300 percent increase in the past four years in male juvenile sex offenders aged eight to fourteen in Hampshire County.

Because of the intense emotional nature of the problem, St. Pierre said, "I expect to be burnt out very soon."

St. Pierre said the majority of her clients are females, although she deals with some male victims. Most of the females are victims of father/daughter incest and she has one case of mother/son incest. While the majority of her clients are adolescents, she has some as young as four years. Helping children at that young age is a problem, she said, because they don't have the vocabulary necessary to express the kind of abuse they have suffered.

St. Pierre showed a film entitled, "Incest: Victims Nobody Believed" in which three women discuss their experience as child victims of incest.

"My dad started being sexual with me at eight or nine...I'd wake up in the night when he started touching me...When I was about nine he had intercourse with me. I didn't realize it was sex until I was twelve," one victim said.

They explain they submitted to the abuse out of fear and ignorance. One victim describes how she sought affection from her father, but got sex instead. If they didn't tell anyone about it, it was from fear of being made to leave the family, or to protect other family members. When one victim did tell, she said, "Mom didn't do anything...she would cry and say father was sick." St. Pierre said that at least half of the mothers know that incest is occurring.

The victims shared a feeling of the uniqueness of their situation and a sense of badness in themselves that caused the situation: "There's something wrong with me because if I was good maybe he'd be a good father like everyone else," one said.

St. Pierre said that many of the victims stereotype themselves as "whores" or "sluts" who are only good on their back.

The first thing St. Pierre said she must accomplish in her therapy is the establishment of trust with the victim, because that is what they have lost.

Regents to rehash tuition hike

The Board of Regents will meet this afternoon and are expected to vote on proposed tuition increases for the state's public colleges and universities, after a similar measure was defeated by one vote at the board's last meeting.

The regents' April 14 meeting was attended by more than 200 opponents of the planned increases, and a heated encounter occurred when several students were denied the opportunity to speak before the board.

The board voted 7-3 in favor of the planned increases, but a majority of eight votes are required to approve a measure.

An Wang, president of Wang Laboratories, abstained from voting and the motion was defeated.

The Regents have said that if the proposed increases are approved, the present tuition waiver program which exempts needy students from tuition fees, would be expanded to include up to four percent of the student body at each of the state's 28 colleges and universities.

The regents have postponed any decision on the planned merger of UMass-Boston and Boston State College until June.

Black leaders disagree on future of civil rights

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Disagreement among black leaders about the future and function of the civil rights revolution was in evidence at a panel discussion at Amherst College last night.

The discussion was held during a forum to honor Charles Hamilton Houston, an early civil rights strategist. After an hour of discussion about the history and impact of Houston on the civil rights revolution, Judge Constance Motley, a black federal judge, and Professor Newson, a black law professor at the Howard University School of Law, voiced disagreement about the future of the civil rights movement.

Newson said he felt "the objectives of the civil rights movement will never be achieved unless and until black people are involved in the decision making process."

In disagreement, Motley said "the civil rights struggle has died down because the momentum which led to the struggle has been spent. There is a great consciousness of the problem in society."

Both agreed that the issue of class is equally as important as the issue of race. "Race and class matter. You can't understand Houston or the predicament of black people today without considering both," said Newson. "The black community has changed dramatically in the last three decades. It is more stratified today, and I think the struggle of the black community will take a far different form in the 80s as a result of this," said Motley.

Speaking from her experience as a judge, Motley said, "It has gradually dawned on me that blacks are not the only group in society that has suffered real disabilities.

SHOOTING VICTIM — Unidentified man is aided by members of the Green Cross (Cruz Verde) of Salvador after he was shot in the head by unidentified assailants who fired from a passing vehicle in the center of San Salvador earlier this week.

FBI, police review Atlanta info

ATLANTA — Police and FBI agents examined information Thursday about a man who Roy Innis claims was involved in the slayings of six black youths. A spokesman for the civil rights leader said the suspect was a black man who obtained victims to be murdered by whites.

The mother of one of the victims said she had identified a photograph shown her by Innis supporters as that of a black man who frequented her neighborhood. But mothers of some of the other victims said they did not believe Innis' story and said he was trying to salvage his reputation through publicity.

Meanwhile, mourners prepared to attend funeral and burial services for Joseph Bell, a 15-year-old whose body was found in the South River in suburban DeKalb County on Sunday. A medical examiner ruled that Bell, who had been missing since March 2, probably was suffocated.

Innis, staff director of the Congress of Racial Equality, said Wednesday that his investigators had a "witness" who could direct police to a suspect in at least six of the 25 murders of young blacks being investigated by a special police task force.

Innis, whose leadership of CORE has been challenged by other members of the New York-based group, called a news conference and waved an envelope which he said contained a photograph of a suspect whom members of families of the murdered children had seen cruising through their neighborhoods.

He would not identify the witness or the suspect. But Larry Mitchell, a spokesman for Innis, told The New Haven (Conn.) Register that the CORE suspect was a black man who obtained victims to be murdered by whites.

Mitchell said CORE tailed the alleged suspect for eight days before announcing its findings.

"We are 99 percent sure that this person is implicated and that there are others involved. He's a major part of the abductions and murders of the kids," Mitchell said.

Social Security recipients to get 11.2% pay hike

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's 36 million Social Security beneficiaries will get an 11.2 percent cost-of-living increase in July, the government announced yesterday. That translates to a $37 a month raise for the average pensioner, who now gets $334 a month.

The across-the-board hike was triggered automatically by the Consumer Price Index for March. It matches the inflation rate from the first quarter of 1980 through the first quarter of 1981.

Some 4.1 million poor, aged, blind and disabled persons also will find a 11.2 percent increase in the checks they receive in the first days of July.

The Social Security hike will cost the system's dwindling trust funds $15.4 billion in the year ahead, according to Secretary of Health and Human Services Richard S. Schweiker.

The increase in Supplemental Security Income, paid from general revenues, will cost the Treasury $600 million.

For the average retired worker drawing benefits alone, the monthly Social Security check will jump from $337 to $374, or $4,488 a year.

The maximum monthly Social Security benefit for a 65-year-old worker retiring this year will rise from $677 to $752.90, a $75.90 increase. That is $9,034.80 a year. If the retiree's spouse is eligible for the 50 percent spouse's benefit, their checks will total $13,552.20.

The minimum monthly Social Security benefit for a retiring 65-year-old will rise from $153.10 to $170.30, a $17.20 increase. That totals $2,043.60 a year.

The benefit increase is the twelfth for Social Security beneficiaries in the past 13 years. Last July they got 14.3 percent.

Here are other examples:

—The average aged couple's monthly benefits will rise from $576 to $640 a month, a $64 increase. Their annual benefits will be $7,680.

—For a mother with two children, the average monthly check will rise from $782 to $870, an $88 increase. Annual: $10,440.

Riots follow British refusal of Sands' requested meeting

BELFAST — Rioters stoned police and troops and hijacked cars in Catholic West Belfast yesterday after the British turned down Bobby Sands' request to see former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark and the Rev. Daniel Berrigan.

Police reported no casualties and said the violence in West Belfast was on a smaller scale that previous rioting over the hunger strike by Sands, a jailed Irish Republican Army guerrilla demanding political prisoner status and approaching death after 54 days of fasting.

The violence in Northern Ireland had gone on for eight nights with police and troops battling roving bands of youths. It was the latest outbreak in the long struggle between majority Protestants and minority Roman Catholics in this British province. The IRA is fighting to end British rule and unite Northern Ireland with the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic.

Reagan budget could cut $120M from Mass. services

BOSTON — President Reagan's federal budget recommendations could mean a loss of $120 million for Massachusetts human services programs in the next fiscal year, according to a preliminary analysis released by state officials yesterday.

The study, issued by the executive Office for Human Services, said the state also could lose $3.87 million in program funds in the remaining months of this fiscal year, which ends June 30.

John Gillespie, spokesman for the human services office, said the bulk of the loss would come in Medicaid, with a potential federal cut of $70 million. Another $20 million would affect social services in all agencies within the secretariat.

"It's common knowledge that significant reductions are pending," Gillespie said. "What we're doing is asking the

Cease-fire and negotiation efforts begin in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Another cease-fire took hold in Beirut and Zahle yesterday and efforts were under way to negotiate two other truces in Lebanon. But a Christian leader warned they would all collapse unless Syria was brought to the bargaining table to end the fighting that has left at least 375 dead and 1,300 wounded since April 1.

Israeli jets, meanwhile, skirted Palestinian anti-aircraft fire and flew reconnaissance missions over Beirut and southern Lebanon. Israeli frogmen blew up a Palestinian gunboat in the port of Tyre, 12 miles north of the border.

The Syrians and Christians in Lebanon held their fire after three days of bitter fighting in Beirut and in the Christian city of Zahle, 30 miles to the east. The cease-fire, the 19th ordered by President Elias Sarkis, took hold in Beirut at daybreak and in Zahle at midday.

Government officials said cease-fires also were being attempted t, halt a separate war in West Beirut between pro-Iraqi and pro-Iranian Moslem militias and another in southern Lebanon pitting Palestinian guerrillas against Israel and Israeli-backed Christian militiamen.

Syrian troops, who police the armistice that ended the 1975-76 civil war between Lebanon's Christians and Moslems, teamed with Palestinian military police to set up buffer zones in West Beirut between the militiamen.

The southern Lebanon truce was being worked out by Maj. Gen. William Callaghan, commander of the U.N. peacekeeping force in Lebanon who has met with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin to try end the killing of U.N. troops.

THE DEAN'S LIST

It is anticipated that the Dean's List will soon be reactivated by the Faculty Senate. This means that if you completed 12 or more graded credits and achieved a minimum grade point average of 3.50 for the Fall 1980 semester, your name will appear on the list.

Those students on the Dean's List will be recognized in the Daily Collegian, and hometown newspapers. Additionally, a congratulatory note will be sent to each student's family.

If you choose not to be recognized for this distinction, contact the Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore, in person or by mail, before Monday, April 27. For more information, call TIPS at 545-1540. Request Tape #1013.

BOG mulls rent for auto body shop

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors discussed last night problems that are plaguing the University of Massachusetts Auto Workshop cooperative, as a result of a heavy financial "burden" placed upon them by the university.

Board member Jay Buckley, Economic Development Council Chair, who is heading an investigation into the Workshop's difficulties, said the co-op will not exist in the near future if pressure is not put on the UMass Parking Office by the board, to "nullify" rent fees they charge the Workshop.

The Workshop, located on the first level of the Campus Center Parking Garage, is charged a rental fee of $2,400 a year by the Parking Office. At present, Buckley said, the Workshop is the only student co-op that is charged any kind of fee by the university.

Although the rental fees are being reduced to $1,700, beginning next semester, Buckley said, all fees should be abolished. "All we want to know is why the Parking Office is charging a student group, that is serving students, any kind of fee. The only difference between the Auto Workshop and other co-ops is that it is not located in the Student Union," he said.

In other business, the board discussed a meeting scheduled for today, that will entertain proposed plans and specifications by an Amherst design firm on the upcoming Hatch renovations.

William Harris, Campus Center director, said the design firm of Ruth, Shives, and Williams, will come address Campus Center administrators and students on final draft proposals, before contract bids go out to engineering firms on May 8.

The meeting will be held in rooms 811-815 of the Campus Center at 11 a.m.

Cleanup competition to be held tomorrow

By STEPHEN M. PORTER
Collegian Correspondent

Anyone interested in cleaning up the University of Massachusetts campus and enjoying some free food, fun, and sun will have the opportunity to do so in the Make It at UMass Cleanup Campaign to be held tomorrow morning from 10 a.m. to noon.

The cleanup campaign, said Nancy Seraphin, a junior HRTA major and a co-coordinator of the event, will be run as a competition in which the winners will recieve blue t-shirts with a white Make It at UMass insignia. All participants will be invited to a reception to be held at the Flagstone Cafe outside the Campus Center immediately following the competition where free hotdogs and soda will be served.

The campus will be divided into six areas for the competition, Seraphin said, with each area competing against the other. The winner will be that area which has filled the largest number of trash bags by noon.

The six competing areas, Seraphin said, will be the Southwest Residential Area, the Central-Orchard Hill area, the Northeast-Sylvan Area, the University Apartments and Greek area, the area between the campus pond and Massachusetts Avenue, and the area between the Student Union Building and Engineering East.

Anyone who wishes to participate in the cleanup competition, Seraphin said, can do so by signing up today at the Make It at UMass table in the Campus Center Concourse or by showing up tomorrow at 10 a.m. at either the pyramids in Southwest, the dormitory side of the Franklin Dining Commons, the Northeast Quad, the Massachusetts Ave. side of parking lot 34, the reflecting pond by the Fine Arts Center, or the front of Stockbridge Hall.

Freeman Woodson, a junior Social Thought and Political Economy major and the other co-coordinator of the campaign, said that he hopes this project will "show that students on campus do like to see a clean environment."

"The whole thing is to get students to take pride in their campus," Seraphin said. "I never could understand the need to decorate trees with toilet paper."

Student response to the cleanup project so far has been fair, Freeman said, and he expects a lot of people will show up on the day of the campaign.

Panel to discuss Salvadorean conflict

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

American involvement in El Salvador will be the topic of a panel discussion to be held tonight at 7:30 in Mahar Auditorium and a rally to be held tomorrow in Northampton.

The discussion entitled The Darkening Tunnel: American Involvement in El Salvador is being sponsored by the Western Mass Latin American Committee (WMLAC) and the undergraduate Spanish students' group Ahora. It will feature CIA critic John Kelly, editor of CounterSpy magazine.

"We're having the panel discussion to make people more aware of what is going on in El Salvador," said Brooke States, an organizer for the Radical Student Union (RSU). "With the media the way it is in this country, you really do not get a chance to see the other side of things," States said.

Speaking along with Kelly will be Americo Duran, who is a member of the Salvadorean coalition fighting against the U.S.-backed Junta in El Salvador, and John Womack, professor of Latin American history at Harvard Universitv.

The WMLAC and Ahora will also sponsor a march to be followed by a rally Saturday in Northampton.

"It will begin at the Bridge Street school at noon and march up to Polasky Park," said States. "It is being sponsored by the April 25 Coalition which is a coalition of area groups that are opposed to U.S. involvement in El Salvador," he said. The speakers at the rally will include Americo Duran and David Cohen, president of the United Electrical Workers Union local 225 of Holyoke.

"Members of the R.S.U. have been helping to organize both the discussion and the march," said States. "We will also be at the rally."

"Eleven-hundred people showed up for a march in Amherst and 7000 people showed up at a rally in New York City," States said. "What we want to do here is call attention to President Reagan that there are a lot of people around that are unhappy with what is going on in El Salvador."

Sunday is Spring Day at NE/Sylvan

By DAVID NELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Northeast/Sylvan will kick off this year's spring events with a promising schedule of activities between noon and six o'clock Sunday in the Northeast Quad.

Matt "Guitar" Murphy of the Shaboo All-Stars is just one of the many talented performers who will be appearing at the Northeast/Sylvan Spring Fest on Sunday.

Scheduled to appear are: Ellen McIlwaine, who performs with a Bonnie Rait style of rock'n'roll blues will play from noon to 1 p.m.; Pastiche, a new wave band out of Boston with impressive credentials, will take the stage from 1:30 to 2:30; at 3 p.m. T. M. Stevens will add some dynamic fusion funk to the line-up till 4 p.m. when the climax of the day's events will be the Shaboo All-Stars.

These performances offer a wide range of musical expression so that there should be something for just about everyone's individual tastes.

The Shaboo All-Stars have a distinctly diversified background to boast of with various members of the band having collaborated with such heavyweights as the Steve Miller Band, Muddy Waters, Johnny Winter, Blood, Sweat and Tears, Sly Stone, and the Blues Brothers, just to name a few. If their past record of performances is any indication of what to expect, you won't want to miss their set of energetic rhythm and blues.

Pastiche was the winner of Boston's 1980 "Battle of the Bands" held at the Rat and sponsored by radio station WBCN. They perform a set of mostly original material but also do some cover versions of songs by the Byrds, the Who, and even the Sex Pistols.

Also on hand will be a wide array of performers such as jugglers and mimes to entertain the expected audience of two to three thousand people. Food and beverages will be on sale throughout the day. In case of rain, back-up accomodations for the event have been planned at the Hatch.

The event is sponsored and funded by the Northeast/Sylvan student government in cooperation with UPC (Union Program Council). Much of the credit for this impressive program goes to UPC coordinator Leah Bagell who has devoted many hours of her free time to its development.

Students, faculty and the general public are invited to turn out and enjoy this celebration of the arrival of spring. No problems are anticipated and all those involved are confident that everyone will conduct themselves in a mature manner so as not to spoil the three months of hard work that have gone into planning the festivities.

UMass police report laser stolen from Engineering East

By M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

The theft of approximately $1,630 worth of equipment from the Engineering East Building was reported Tuesday morning, University of Massachusetts police said.

The items, reportedly stolen between last Friday night and Tuesday morning, were a small neon-gas laser valued at $1000, a high voltage transformer valued at $500, and two calculators valued at $130, police said.

A John Adams Tower resident reported that his door had been kicked in and an estimated $524 worth of camera equipment, cassettes, and a calculator were stolen Wednesday night, police said.

A resident of Jeffery Lane, Amherst, reported Wednesday that $10,000 worth of Hungarian silverware from the early 1900s was stolen between June and November of last year while the resident was on vacation, Amherst police said.

A Chevrolet van parked in lot 50, near Southwest Residential Area, was reportedly broken into and robbed of a 23 channel CB radio and two speakers valued at $175, a knapsack valued at $75, some electrical tools, and a 52 quart cooler containing a bottle of champagne and a six pack of beer, Wednesday afternoon, UMass police said. Total loss and damages were estimated at $422.

The UMass Stadium facilities building was reportedly broken into yesterday morning and robbed of ten dozen pairs of white socks, four dozen towels, two rolls of adhesive tape, and a pair of football cleats. Total value of the stolen goods was between $500 and $600, UMass police said.

Several pairs of old socks and a girl's bathing suit were reported stolen from the Curry Hicks supply cage, Wednesday morning, UMass police said. Gerald E. Beals, 19, of Amherst, was arrested and arraigned yesterday for driving under the influence after reportedly driving onto the grass on North Pleasant and East Pleasant Streets in Amherst, police said. Beals was treated for minor injuries at Cooley Dickenson Hospital in Northampton and stayed in the Amherst lock-up until his arraignment, police said.

Schlafly : feminists guilty of sexual harassment

By ANNE KIRBY
Collegian Staff

Last Tuesday's testimony before a U.S. Senate labor subcommittee by Phyllis Schlafly, a militant opponent of the Equal Rights Amendment, evoked responses of disgust from people in and around the University of Massachusetts community.

Schlafly said, "The most cruel and damaging sexual harassment taking place today is the harassment by feminists and their federal government allies against the role of motherhood and the role of the dependent wife. Schlafly also said that for the "virtuous woman" sexual harassment is not a problem. Her testimony was greeted with hisses in the hearing room, according to Associated Press reports.

Massachusetts Rep. Barbara Gray, (R-Framingham), who proposed a sexual harassment bill in the State Legislature, said her (Schlafly) statements are typical of what her position has been all along. She is "reactionary and out of touch," Gray said. She compared Schlafly's comments to those of people who say a woman that is raped was probably asking for it.

An assistant professor in the Political Science department, John Brigham said (Schlafly) she could be classified as a "comedian." "I imagine she does have some influence," he said. "She's quotable and I think people find her amusing," Brigham said.

The bill on sexual harassment introduced by Gray has not yet come before the Senate in Massachusetts. Gray's bill seeks to "establish a person's right to be free from sexual harassment in the conduct of public employees, and establish a greivance procedure for state employees who have been victims of sexual harassment."

A member of SASH, Students Against Sexual Harassment, Lisa Nazzaro summed things up by saying, "I think she's (Schlafly) a disgrace."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Ray Charles: the legend of the man

By KAREN MARIE THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

Legendary Ray Charles brought the full house audience in the F.A.C. to its feet for the third and final time. He stood in the spotlight, grinning broadly, waving his arms while he rocked back and forth to the applause of the audience. A few minutes later, in his dressing room, the great Charles greeted his visitors.

"How you be?", he said, enthusiastically shaking a young man's hand.

He sat in a metal chair and his dancing feet quickly wrapped about the chair's legs. He sat silent for a moment, reflecting on the outburst of a young woman who demanded a song for the children of Atlanta in the middle of the concert.

"I think that it's a terrible thing what's happening in Atlanta. We all feel that, but I think that everything has its place... I feel bad for any tragedy, anything like this where there ain't no rhyme or reason, no cause for it. I'm human, it hurts me just like it hurts everybody. But I think for somebody to come into my show and tell me what to do in it and who to sing it for is ridiculous... you can't do that. In my mind it was very bad taste. That's the way I felt about it and I said it, now of course, some people might of felt 'Isn't that a shame he ain't got no feeling at all.' Well, I think that anybody who know me, knows better than that," he said.

Referring to comedian Bob Hope, Charles said that Hope would not go to a funeral and tell a joke. His success as a black musician has not been as great as other performers.

"I don't mean this in a nasty way... often people say to me, 'Ray you're a cornerstone in music' or 'Ray you're a legend in your own time,' I got all kinds of names... I don't want to sound unappreciative, that's wonderful, but I'll never make the money Sinatra makes, never! I'll never make the money Dean Martin makes. We all have to understand that there are certain absolutes in life and as long as you don't let them make you bitter and as long as you understand what's happening to you... it don't take a lot to make me happy."

According to Charles his success did not come overnight. There were lots of little steps to where he stands today.

"I started out with zero, so it don't take a lot to make me happy. What I want is to be able to play my music for the people. That's enough for me," he said.

Charles credits his introduction to music to Wally Potman, a pianist who allowed Charles at the age of three to bang on the piano. Pitman then began to teach Charles how to play the instrument.

"I credit him for being number one, for if he shooed me away, maybe I wouldn't be here talking to yuou today," he said.

Black music today for Charles is still good.

"It's still spontaneous. You can still get that umph feeling from it, thank God," he said.

According to Charles the music industry has become very commercial.

"Record companies are being swallowed up by big conglomerates. You don't see record people anymore. I started with a small company and I know the meaning of it. The small company knows the small artist," he said.

Charles would like to see the music industry returned to the people who have a 'feel' for the music and not for money. Charles offered advice for upcoming artists.

"Just make sure you have talent," he said.

Rev. Chester D. Freeman, Jr. will officially begin his position as the Black/Third World Chaplain at UMass on June 1, 1981.

New Black Chaplain at UMASS

The Board of Directors of the United Christian Foundation announced recently the appointment of The Reverend Chester D. Freeman, Jr. to the position of Black/Third World Chaplain at UMass in Amherst.

The Reverend Freeman is presently Campus Minister at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, simultaneously serving Creighton University and the Nebraska Medical Center in Omaha. He will begin his duties at the University of Massachusetts during June- of 1981, assuming a collegial role in ministry to the whole university community with The Reverend Dr. F. Peter Sabey, Protestant Campus Chaplain, while also fulfilling a special mission to the Black/Third World communities through work in New Africa House, and by teaching in the Department of Afro-American Studies.

Freeman will replace The Reverend Dr. Gilbert Caldwell, first incumbent in this special position, who is now Associate General Secretary of the Methodist Council on Church and Race in Washington, D.C. Freeman was selected on the basis of his academic training, campus ministry experience at the University of Rochester and in Omaha, and on the basis of outstanding recommendations, notable among which was the unqualified endorsement of The Reverend Dr. Gayraud Wilmore, noted author and professor at Colgate Rochester.

Freeman has had extensive experience leading gospel choirs, in addition to leading traditional choir performances and playing the clarinet and saxophone. His other artistic interests include sacred dance and drama. He recently directed a performance of James Baldwin's "The Amen Corner" to standing room only audiences in Omaha.

Freeman also brings to the position excellent speaking abilities, skill as a writer, and considerable ability as an organizer.

In recognition of the Five-College nature of the Black/Third World Chaplaincy begun by Caldwell, Amherst College has appointed Freeman to a part-time position as Religious Advisor to black students at Amherst College. It is anticipated that Freeman will continue the Third World celebrations of worship for the Five-College black community which were begun by Caldwell.

Ray, we can't stop loving you

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

Ray Charles landed at the crossroads of music Wednesday night in his concert at the Fine Arts Center, combining elements of jazz, gospel, blues, country western, and even a little bit of rock 'n roll.

Appearing with the 17 piece Ray Charles Orchestra a five man saxophone line, four trumpets, four trombones, a bass guitar, drums, guitar, a second pianist and the Raeletts trio, Ray proceeded to give the audience a lesson in musical genres.

Before Charles came out, his band played a spirited but short set, which included a rendition of Chick Corea's "Spain" (a song that DiMeola, McLaughlin, and DeLucia did a couple of weeks ago). They produced images of the 1940's big band sound.

Although there was a somewhat pretetious Las Vegas-type introduction, Charles was greeted to a well-deserved ovation and began what would be a full but rather short show.

His set included a beautiful version of "Georgia on My Mind," a jazz arrangement of Rogers and Hammerstein's "Oh What a Beautiful Morning" from the musical Oklahoma, and a rendition of "Some Enchanted Evening" that was not like anything you have ever heard on easy listening stations.

His voice was in wonderful form, and he sang with such emotion that the audience could feel each tune. He engulfed the crowd inside his music.

When the Raeletts came on, they added a fullness to the show and made it all the more professional. When Ray and the trio did his version of "I Can't Stop Loving You" it was so sweet even the band applauded.

Although there were no encores, it seemed everyone was satisfied when it was over. Ray Charles is a living legend, and the audience at the Fine Arts Center was treated to a show that appealed to a part of everyone there. Ray Charles defies musical categorization; he is simply great.

Roister-Doister one-act-plays succeed in Southwest production

By JOHN BROBST
Collegian Correspondent

Deep in the bowels of that concrete jungle known as Southwest, there is a bastion of truth and beauty in the thespian vein.

The Roister-Doister Society is presenting three one-act plays tonight and tomorrow at 8 p.m. at the Hampden Center for the Performing Arts, located in Southwest. The three plays are: Tennessee Williams' "Something Unspoken," Harold Pinter's "Trouble in the Works," and Peter Shaffer's "White Lies."

Director Joel Cotter selected these three plays because "they all follow a line of frustration." Each play is good in its own right. But something unique is created when they are all seen together.

"Something Unspoken" deals with the frustration of an aging, upper-class, widowed socialite who is losing her grip on a particular ladies club. Cornelia Scott (Cynthia Simpson) takes out her frustration on her secretary and companion of fifteen years, Grace Lancaster (Janet Busser).

The meaning of the play is open to interpretation. This is a credit to the actresses. They develop their characters very nicely, and they allow you to interpret them as you will.

The somber atmosphere of "Something Unspoken" is nicely balanced by the light-hearted "Trouble in the Works." Larry Geddes, a University phenomenon who never fails to amuse, plays an engineer who can't understand why the production of his hi-speed taper shanked spiral flute reamers and his hemi-unibal spherical rod ends have been aborted. Geddes, fresh from the University Ensemble production of "Travesties," makes this skit work well.

Then comes the grand finale. "White Lies" deals with a fortune teller (Jeannette-Esther Trombly) who is asked by the manager of a rock band (David Ambos) to tell a particularly nasty fortune for the band's singer (John Martindale). "It's all for a giggle," the manager tells her. The fortune teller has a hard time reconciling her basic belief in truth with this opportunity to pay her long overdue rent, but she does it anyway.

The Roister-Doister society is the dramatic counterpart of the University Music Theatre Guild — the group that put on "Jesus Christ Superstar" a few weeks ago. The society was founded in 1912, while the University was still an agricultural school.

There are whites who have been white all their lives who haven't been anywhere and aren't going anywhere simply because they are of the wrong class."

Newson said the "sickeningly cyclical" history of blacks in America can only be overcome by someone who has the most to lose. Newson said that it is the duty of black elites to measure themselves against the history of Houston and others.

Motley said she felt "the problems of the future will not be as easily defined, recognized or dealt with as in the past." She said the laws which defined blacks and women restrictively are gone. "I think the civil rights revolution and the women's rights revolution are essentially over in that the objective has been accomplished. That is not to say that every black is home free or every woman has every right but the point has been made and society is aware," she said.

As for the future, Motley said, "We must first find out what the problem is before we can find additional solutions."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control

Diploma or car: which comes first?

From the talk buzzing around here, I get the idea that a new custom has developed among college seniors. It seems that lately a diploma is not enough. As a matter of fact, the diploma is a secondary thing, eclipsed by that new symbol of the nouveau-educato class: the new car.

Yes, the senior must be eager to race from graduation ceremonies with gown flapping in the spring breeze, and arrive breathless at the new car lot to spend four years of unearned money on a downhill investment.

Steve Masse

I know the feeling, because I did the new car thing myself. Save your money. A new car is going to cost you a minimum of $5000. You'll be required to put down about $1000, so your $4000 loan will be approved. The loan will cost you another $1000 in interest spread out over four years. Now the car's cost just went from five to six thousand bucks.

The insurance, which under a loan must be full coverage, will cost you an additional $1000 per year, total $4000. Repairs (yes, as soon as your car hits two years, you'll get it good with petty repairs), body work not covered by your insurance if you want to keep the car looking new, and maintenance, tires, etc., will cost you another $2000. If you have an outside antenna, you've replaced it three times because your local neighborhood delinquents love to snap them off at the stem. Not to speak of missing gas caps and wheel covers. Of course that undercoating you paid three hundred extra dollars for is beginning to peel off by the end of the second year. Even if your so-called guarantee is honored, you have to leave the car for three days before the work is done. Then of course your paint peels and the car looks like a tin can that hasn't finished rotting yet. And you still pay the bank about $150.00 per month for the privilege whose good flavor went bad with the first insurance payment.

Let's say you keep the car for four years, to get your money's worth. This means $6,000 for the car, $4,000 for insurance, $2,000 for repairs and maintenance. Total cost for the car is $12,000 for four years, or $3,000 per year. Notice that I left out the cost of gasoline. No matter how well you think your new little engine will do for mileage, gasoline will still cost you about fifty dollars a month, since you will be driving yourself crazy to get maximum use of your investment.

I know a guy who buys a car every eighteen months at a used car lot. He pays roughly $1,000.00. The insurance bill is about $250 per year. Say the car lasts only a year, and needs about $500 in repairs. The total yearly cost for that car is about $1,750.

You need a car for transporation, that's for sure. But you also need money for other things like food, rent, entertainment, etc. Why pay $3000 for the same thing you can get for $1750 (minus the shininess)? Even a complete paint job costs less than $1000, so you would still have a pretty new looking car without the ridiculous price.

A new car is no better than a used car for dependability. No better under any circumstances. In a way, a new car is worse, because you expect it to be perfect every time, and you'll find that it will not be. Things will go wrong with any motor vehicle, new or old — though the chances are that a two year old car with about 30,000 miles will have the fewest problems of all. By that time, what will have gone wrong has already gone wrong for the first owner. The shocks should have been replaced, as well as the brakes. Check these things out wisely, and if you do your buying carefully, there is no need for you to end up with a lemon.

Those of you who smile and flick up a middle finger at me for this apocryphal advice would do well to cut out this column and tack it under the visor in your new car. Then after two years read it again. I just love to say "I told you so."

When you buy your brand new car and find it has a crease in the windshield that only lights up when it rains and the wipers streak back and forth over it, remember that though the repair is free, your time is not. The bubble in the rug looks worse when the car is $6,000. When the passenger door doesn't shut right, the light in the ashtray doesn't light, the seat doesn't come forward — these problems become major catastrophes.

When the electrical system fails at a traffic light, remember that you are the guinea pig behind the wheel of that new car. And if somebody in a shitbox with four bald recaps drives up next to you and honks, rolls down his window and laughs derisively as you boil to death in your own bile, don't give him such a quick flick of your middle finger. He's merely trying to tell you what I've been trying to tell you — that no car is 100 percent dependable, so you're better off taking the less expensive headache.

The Armenian Genocide

Today marks the anniversary of the Armenian Genocide committed by the Turks during World War I in which 1.5 million Armenians were massacred. Under the commands of Talaat Pasha, Minister of the Interior of Turkey during WWI, Turkish armies executed the Armenian Genocide without mercy. Children were burned alive, entire villages of Armenians were marched into the desert to starve, Armenians were shot down and some were beaten to death simply for the pleasure of doing so. Thousands of babies were thrown into the Euphrates River to drown. Women were raped, stripped of clothes, and their nails were ripped out. Pregnant women's children were butchered out of their bellies and tossed about. The list goes on and the incidents grow more horrid.

It may shock some to learn that the Armenians are still pleading that the genocide committed against them, the first actual genocide of this century and more vicious and terrible than the Jewish Genocide during the second World War, be recognized by Turkey and the rest of the world. The Armenians have not received justice for the genocide committed against them sixty-six years ago. Didn't the Jews receive justice during the Nurenberg trials? I find it ironic that because the Armenian Genocide was bottled up and forgotten by the world, Adolf Hitler took the initiative to execute the second genocide of this century. After Hitler gave the orders to start his genocide he was quoted as saying, "After all who remembers today the extermination of the Armenians?"

I ask that non-Armenians please acknowledge the Armenian case so that we may defeat the denials of today's Turkish government that the Armenian Genocide never occurred. If the occurrence of the Armenian Genocide is ignored by the world, then the threat of genocide will constantly be with all nationalities.

Finally, I ask that Armenian-Americans remember April 24, what your families experienced, and why you are in this country. Pass the crime committed against us from generation to generation so that one day we will reach our goal of establishing a free, united, and independent Armenia. Together, we must fight for our goal at all costs for the good of both Armenians and the protection of the world from genocide.

It's time to think

I'm writing this letter to urge people to support legal abortions for all who want them. Some people either oppose this right or remain silent about it because it frightens them. They should remember that to people with other ideas about how the world works, abortion may be an act of compassion and the failure to have one a sin.

For instance, I believe that I should end or prevent suffering whenever I can.

I also believe that we, the born, fear death irrationally merely because we think. Without thinking, death would be no more terrible than the physical sensation of dying. Thus, a three month old fetus wouldn't mind dying since it doesn't yet think, doesn't yet realize it's alive, doesn't fear the idea of being dead. For it, death would be another change, which it would accept the same way a water drop accepts evaporation.

With these beliefs, if I accidentally became preganant when I knew that my would-be child was doomed to a life of suffering because I could not support it, give it the love it would need, or because it was going to be severely deformed, then I would feel absolutely compelled to have an abortion.

I hope everyone who reads this will protect our freedom to follow our own moral codes by supporting legal early-term abortion for all women, rich or poor. (If you're afraid of this right being used as birth control, support sex education, too. Any informed woman would prefer using a contraceptive to having an abortion.)

SWA lacks quorum because of elections

By JOHN DIPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly did not transact any official business in its meeting last night because they lacked a quorum.

Many assembly representatives did not attend the meeting because of involvement in Southwest Area Government elections, said Co-President James Budreau. The elections began yesterday and are continuing today.

The assembly did informally recommend that the University administration install more emergency telephones in the Southwest Residential Area to help combat vandalism and crime.

"They've had some bad luck lately, especially with injuries. They were really playing good lacrosse when they lost their super attackman John Fay. That hurt them and just last week they lost their best defenseman."

One New Hampshire player who will be healthy tomorrow is attacker Steve Glover. Glover is having an outstanding season and picks up a lot of the Wildcat scoring slack. Saturday he tallied all five goals in the Brown loss and has scored five or more on two other occasions this season.

"Glover is an excellent shooter," Garber said. "He's like our Jimmy Weller, always around the net."

Each time the Gorillas meet New Hampshire, the point is made that a special rivalry must exist since the Wildcats are coached by Garber's son Ted.

"There isn't any real rivalry," Garber said. "We respect each other as coaches and we're also good friends. We both play to win and I'm looking forward to a good game."

Tomorrow's game will be the first of Gorilla-Wildcat encounters this season, the second coming May 13 at Durham. This move of double scheduling was made to reduce travel expenses for both teams, according to Garber.

Massachusetts has already equaled its win total, eight, of the last two seasons with Wednesday's victory at Hofstra. Tomorrow they seek victim number nine. The Hill will probably fill up early for this, a homecoming for the Gorillas, who return from three consecutive road games.

One look at Wright's intensity and concentration as he speeds over the hurdles dispels any thoughts of greed propelling him. "He's a great competitor; the bigger the meet, the better he performs," O'Brien said.

"He has a personality filled with enthusiasm and enjoyment for just about anything. He's very people oriented," said O'Brien.

"When asked about this performance at the BC Relays (where he set three records), John said he 'did pretty well,'" O'Brien said.

Will John Wright become any faster? "Each time he races, I don't know what his limits will be," O'Brien said. Whether that next stadium Wright will hasten to will be in Philadelphia; Eugene, Oregon; or even Los Angeles, California, one thing is for sure: John Wright is fast!

Middie Peter Schmitz drives around a Cornell defender in the first of the Gorillas' eight-game win streak. The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse squad attempts to bring its record to 9-0 tomorrow afternoon (2 p.m. — Boyden) against New Hampshire.

Gorillas host UNH

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

The success of the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team this season could be likened to the domino theory of Cold War diplomat George Kennan. All one must do is to substitute lacrosse games for nations.

First the Gorillas got by their strongest opponent (Cornell), and the rest, seven in all, have fallen like dominoes, victims of Massachusetts' determined quest for victories.

Well, the season has not been quite that easy. It has taken a lot of hard work to get where they are now, 8-0, without question the best team in New England, and fifth-ranked in the nation with a chance to improve their position with each successive victory.

Massachusetts has demonstrated an effective combination of a potent, lightning-quick strike force which pounces on opponents' mistakes and misplays and a spirited, aggressive defense which consistently keeps enemy attackers at bay.

This early success seemingly creates an air of confidence. But, the season is far from over with games against Harvard and Syracuse, both ranked in the top ten nationally, still to be played.

"It's certainly nice to be where we are," Massachusetts head coach Dick Garber said. "Every success helps out a little more, but we've got quite a job in front of us."

First on Garber's agenda is to get by the Wildcats of the University of New Hampshire, who will make the Durham to Amherst trip tomorrow to face the Gorillas at 2 p.m. at Boyde Field.

New Hampshire is a team that has been ranked second to Massachusetts in New England for much of the season, only to fall on hard times as of late. The Wildcats (4-6) have dropped their last three contests, including a 12-5 defeat last Saturday to Brown University, a team which was blasted by the Gorillas 25-1 a few games ago.

"At the beginning of the season, I would have said that this would have been one of our biggest and toughest games," Garber said. "They (UNH) lost a tough one early in the season, 11-9 to Virginia (Virginia is currently ranked fourth nationally in Division I), and they beat a good Loyola team.

Batters need wins, luck for post-season bet berth

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Dreaming of the College World Series in Omaha, Nebraska.

What must the University of Massachusetts baseball team accomplish to make the National Collegiate Athletic Association post-season tournament?

The answer, simply enough, is for the Minutemen (currently 13-12) to win as many games as they possibly can, because nothing they can do can put them into a position where they can qualify automatically.

Since the university's withdrawal from the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference in the summer of 1978, (because of a conflict of interest in television broadcast rights involving the basketball team and its commitments to both the ECAC and the Eastern Athletic Association) the batters have spent the last two seasons trying to play above and beyond the rest of the New England competition.

Things were different for Dick Bergquist and the Minutemen (now in the EAA) when they competed in the ECAC. A perennial powerhouse, UMass had qualified for the ECAC regional tournament throughout the 1970's. The top finishers in the ECAC's were springboarded to the Northeast Regionals of the NCAA.

But the champion of the EAA, unlike the three champions of the ECAC leagues, is not an automatic qualifier of the NCAA tournament. What UMass must do, is become the EAA champion, maintain a good overall record, and hope for a call.

Here's the way it works. Throughout the nation there are leagues which have champions that are automatic qualifiers for regional tournaments in the NCAA. The Pac Ten, the Big Eight and the Atlantic Coast Conference are such leagues. Closer to home, the champions of the ECAC North, the ECAC New York - New Jersey, the ECAC Washington, D.C. - Maryland area and the Eastern Intercollegiate Baseball League (which includes the Ivy League schools plus Army and Navy) are all automatic qualifiers.

In order to fill the brackets for the tournament, the NCAA chooses the best teams among the rest. The fill-in teams usually include the second place teams from qualifying leagues, first place teams in non-qualifying leagues (UMass' hope), and major independents like the University of Miami.

UMass coach Dick Bergquist, the Chairman of the NCAA baseball committee said "That's what makes it doubly tough, having to be chosen as an at-large bid and then face the possibility of facing someone like Miami."

Even if UMass is selected, its chances dimmed with each loss, there is the possibility it will not play in the Northeast Regional. Last year the fourth team at the regional in Orono, Maine was Eastern Carolina University. Several years ago, Bergquist said, the University of Nebraska was sent to the Northeast Regional. The Cornhuskers had won more than 40 games.

There have been moves to make the EAA a recognized league. Bergquist said a petition to make the league champion an automatic qualifier was turned down this year, but could be accepted in the years to come.

The EAA, up to now a little sister to Eastern Baseball Leagues, is split into two divisions this year. The South is comprised of the University of Pittsburgh, George Washington University, Duquense, and West Virginia. The North is Umass, Rhode Island, and Rutgers University. St. Monaventure, the other EAA team, does not have a baseball team.

After playing each team in the d'vision four times, home and away double headers, the divisional champions will square off on May 8 to decide what could be a tournament-making champion.

Last year, when the league was decided in a round-robin championship, UMass was by far the superior team. But that was long before UMass was swept in a double header by the newest of the EAA teams, the University of Rhode Island.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team hosts Rutgers University tomorrow afternoon at Earl Lorden Field. The first game of the double header starts at 12:00. The softball team is also at home (NOPE — 1 p.m.) against Temple tomorrow afternoon, and they host Adelphi on Sunday also at 1 at NOPE.

The right word about Wright...He's fast

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

John Wright is fast! Not only can he race 110 meters worth of high hurdles faster than anyone ever wearing a Minuteman uniform, but he can also change from a high school hurdler at a track meet in White Stadium, Dorchester, Ma., to a national class hurdler at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, Pa., in a scant two years.

That celerity which will send Wright to the 87th Penn Relays this weekend, one of the most prestigious meets in the world, is certainly evident in his progression from a Massachusetts high school star to currently the top New England collegiate hurdler.

Wright, who first learned to hurdle in the eighth grade, made his debut in outdoor track as a junior in high school.

He's a great competitor... the bigger the meet, the better he performs
-O'Brien

He became a genuine threat in the hurdles in his senior year, winning a state title indoors, a state coaches title outdoors, placing second in both the Massachusetts State and New England meets, as well as being named The Boston Globe's All Scholastic High Hurdler.

Upon reaching the University of Massachusetts, the freshman etched his name in the Minuteman record books in both the indoor and outdoor campaigns, and defeated the best hurdlers in NE. Later in the summer, Wright scored big at the national class level, placing second in the National Junior Olympics, at San Jose, Ca.

This year, Wright was denied the NE indoor hurdles title by the narrowest margin, with Bob Holden of the University of Rhode Island edging Wright by inches on the telltale phototimer. This spring, Wright has had no equal in the 110 meter highs. Undefeated, and the fastest N.E. collegiate hurdler to date, Wright scored wins in the Boston College dual meet (14.8 seconds), the UMass Relays (a personal best 14.3 seconds), and at the Boston College Relays, where he broke the meet record three times, with his 14.3 final effort being the new meet standard.

Although he has made this dramatic rise to such a high level of competition so quickly, and with such apparent ease, Wright has spent many hours working on his technique over the 42 inch barriers.

John Wright clears the last hurdle on his way to a meet record of 14.3 seconds at the Boston College Relays last weekend.

"When he came up as a freshman, he had technical problems. The big one was the start to the first two hurdles. He worked hard on that," O'Brien said.

After nearly two seasons in maroon and white thinclads, Wright has reduced his technique problems. "Right now, he's eliminated about 70 percent of them," added O'Brien. "That's reflected by John running so well."

"I usually spend about two hours a day on technique," Wright said.

In approaching maximum technique in hurdling ten 42-inch barriers in 110 meters, Wright must pursue other means of improving: "I don't have that much raw speed," Wright said. His assets being strength and endurance, Wright adds, "To improve in the highs, I'll need to improve my speed, and develop more body strength."

No one really knows where Wright's greatest talents lie. "John was really an overstrider. Indoors I saw lots of improvement in his running style. Last year I would have said he could run ten flat, maybe 9.9 for 100 yards, now, 9.5," said O'Brien. In a strict sense, Wright would have to concentrate greatly on sprinting in order to acheive those marks. "He could be a good 100 man, and an outstanding 220/440 runner," added O'Brien.

A runner with that kind of range could have great potential in the 400 meter intermediate hurdles. "He's got the tools, He learned to hurdle leading with his left leg. Now he leads with his right. He can do both and they're both efficient," O'Brien said. "He could run using 13, 14, 15, 16 or even 17 steps between the hurdles."

Thus Wright has potential in any of the sprints and both hurdles. For now, however, the key race will be the high hurdles.

"I'd like to run 13.9 this year," commented Wright. "I'd like to get to the Nationals. I'd love to win the Nationals," Wright quickly added with a big grin. "I like to win everything I can. I guess I'm kind of greedy."

Regents approve tuition hikes

By KEVIN MCGUIRE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—The Massachusetts Board of Regents approved a $16 million tuition increase package for the state's public colleges and universities Friday amid strong protest from the 50 students packed into the small meeting room.

Tuition for University of Massachusetts resident undergraduates was raised $202, or 27 percent.

Shortly after the vote, the six-member student advisory committee to the Regents resigned in protest.

"The Regents have demonstrated a blatant disregard for student concerns, and we are not going to legitimize their claim of including student input when in fact they do not," said committee chairman and UMass-Amherst senior Ronald Keefe.

The Regents also passed a $5 million tuition waiver policy that will reportedly grant full and partial tuition waivers for about 20,000 students.

Under this policy, the University of Massachusetts may waive tuition equal to four percent of its resident undergraduate tuition revenues to allow needy students to attend school.

The tuition waiver amendment did not mute hostile student reaction to the tuition hikes, which will take effect this fall semester. Cries of outrage greeted the passage of the motion which passed on a 10-2 vote with three Regent members absent. A majority of eight is necessary to pass a motion.

Students shouted chants such as "Hey hey, corporate fools, give the money to our schools," for fifteen minutes after the Regents passed the motion and then left the room quickly.

A cordon of police officers had screened entrants to the McCormack State Office Building, limiting the number of people who could attend the meeting.

During the meeting, which Chairman James R. Martin said was "an open meeting, not a public hearing," Regent Ray Stata said the present tuition rates were "unrealistic," and the new rates were "well below the average of the Northeast states, and comparable to the nation as a whole."

According to Regent staff reports, although Massachusetts undergraduate tuition was ninth highest in the nation as whole in 1980-81, it ranked seventh out of eleven comparable public universities in the Northeast where costs generally are higher than the rest of the country.

UMass student Linda Geary, one of the fourteen preselected speakers allowed to address the Regents, said no analysis has been done of the students who will have to drop out, referring to claims that thousands of students will be forced to leave as a result of the tuition increases.

After the speakers were finished, Regent Foster Furcolo, former Massachusetts governor, proposed a 25 percent reduction in the tuition increase. No one seconded the motion and it was dropped.

The vote was then cast 10-2 in favor of the tuition increases, with Furcolo and Regent Elizabeth B. Rawlins, education professor from Simmons College, voting against the increases.

Undergraduate tuition for the fifteen community colleges will increase from $450 to $542; the ten state colleges from $600 to $725; for Southeastern Massachusetts University from $664 to $802; for the University of Lowell from $700 to $842; and at the University of Massachusetts from $750-$952.

Graduate and non-resident tuition at UMass will increase proportionally (please see box).

Protesters plea for an end to military aid to El Salvador

By RICH NAGLE
and JIM KANE
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON—About 700 demonstrators marched through the streets of Northampton Saturday holding signs and chanting slogans calling for an end to U.S. military aid to El Salvador.

The march, coordinated by the Western Massachusetts Coalition on El Salvador, and sponsored by 34 area organizations including two labor unions, several local churches and student groups, followed a mile-long route through the center of Northampton to a 90 minute rally at Pulaski Park, where four speakers denounced American military and economic assistancea to the ruling junta in El Salvador.

Forming a procession nearly a block long, the marchers carried signs saying "Feed the people, not the Pentagon," and "Stop aid to the fascist junta," while being escorted by two Northampton Police cruisers.

The crowd of students, area residents and parents with young children in tow proceeded through the center of the city while local merchants and their customers peered through storefront windows along the march route.

About 200 people signed an oversized postcard to Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Ma, which called for an end to U.S. military aid to El Salvador.

Coalition spokesman Ronald Burger, of Montague, said Conte cast the deciding vote in a March 24 decision by the House Appropriations Committee to continue military aid to the Central American country.

Americo Duran, of El Salvador, a leader of the Democratic Revolutionary Front, and featured speaker at the rally, said, "Salvadoreans are a peace-loving people. They've been forced to take arms in hand to seek justice."

Speaking through an interpreter, Duran attacked the U.S. media, accusing them of Faculty Senate to propose change in pass/fail system

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Correspondent

A proposal by the Faculty Senate to change the present pass/fail system so that only grades of "C" or better be recorded as a "P" will be presented to the senate for a vote on Thursday.

The Faculty Senate Academics Matters Council, which developed the motion, has proposed that grades of "C/D" and "D" be recorded as such.

The present pass/fail system records all grades above an "F" as "P".

Psychology professor Harry Schumer, Chairman of the Academic Matters Council last year when the motion was being developed, said when students take a course pass/fail they don't put forth a good effort.

"A student will do enough to get by," Schumer said, "and this creates a morale problem for the rest of the students in the class."

Schumer said the original purpose of pass/fail, which is "to encourage students to be venturous with their course choices," will not be affected.

A student can still risk taking a course in a new department, he said, because a "C" is an average grade."

"A 'D' doesn't often require a great deal of effort," said Schumer.

Schumer said it was the sequential courses especially that were being used by the pass/fail system, and this hurts the student in the long run.

Using French as an example, Schumer said a student could take 110 pass/fail and pass it, and delude himself into thinking he had mastered the material.

"The problem becomes cumulative," he said, when the student takes courses higher in the sequence.

The Academic Matters Council includes in its proposal data from the registrar's office showing that students who take courses p/f "tend to get a greater proportion of C/D's and D's."

Lower division courses in rhetoric, French, math, botany and sociology were used for the data, however Schumer contends that "we could have chosen astronomy or psychology and you'd find the same thing."

Two killed in head-on crash

By M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

One University of Massachusetts student and a former student were killed and two others seriously injured in a car accident early yesterday morning.

Amherst police said Jeffrey W. Barcomb, 23, of Cohasset, a former UMass student and driver of one of the cars, was found dead at the scene.

George M. Rich, 20, of UMass and Provincetown, a passenger in Barcomb's car, was pronounced dead on arrival at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, police said.

Ayodele O. Mobolaurin, 34, of UMass, reportedly the driver of the other car, was in serious condition last night in the intensive care unit at Cooley Dickinson, a hospital supervisor said.

Suzanne Ellis, 21, of UMass and Cohasset, reportedly a passenger in Barcomb's car, was also in serious condition in the intensive care unit, according to the hospital's supervisor.

The accident occurred in the eastbound lane of College Street, at the Shumway Street intersection, when the cars collided head-on, police said.

Barcomb's car had been driving west on College Strees and Mobolaurin's had been driving east, police said.

Amherst Police are still investigating.

Congress returns to budget after recess

WASHINGTON — Members of Congress returning to Washington after a two-week recess face tough decisions on President Reagan's proposals to revitalize the economy.

Many of the lawmakers spent part of the recess talking with constituents to see how they feel about Reagan's plans for reducing taxes and the growth of federal spending. Several members received personal calls from the president, seeking support.

The House and Senate will get another reminder of the importance Reagan attaches to his economic plan when he addresses a joint session of Congress tomorrow night.

Republicans on the Senate Budget Committee will try to reach a compromise among themselves today that would reverse an earlier setback on the president's budget. That compromise would be aimed at reducing the federal deficit under the $45 billion level that the committee anticipates for 1984.

Three conservative Republicans who complained that the projected 1984 deficit was too large joined with committee Democrats earlier this month to defeat a spending plan similar to Reagan's proposal.

During the week, the House likely will complete the first phase of its action on the spending reductions. Debate is scheduled to begin Thursday on a resolution that would set spending limits for the budget year that begins next Oct. 1.

The House Budget Committee rejected Reagan's spending target chiefly on grounds it cut too deeply into social programs. Instead, the panel approved a version written by its chairman, Rep. James Jones, DOkla. That proposal provides for only a one-year individual tax cut, rather than the threeyear cut requested by Reagan.

But even Democrats concede support is growing for a compromise, now endorsed by the Reagan administration, that would make deeper spending cuts than favored by the committee and that would allow a three-year tax cut.

Administration officials say the aim of the president's address tomorrow night is to seek support for that compromise, which is favored by Republicans on the House Budget Committee.

Reagan's economic program is a four-pronged effort: tax reduction, including a 10-percent cut in personal tax rates in each of three years; sharp reductions in the growth of federal spending; relaxation of government regulations on business; and slowing the growth of the nation's money supply.

The House Ways and Means Committee probably will start work on a tax cut some time after May 4. There are signs the president will not get the full three-year tax reduction he wants; but while Reagan is ready to compromise a bit on spending reductions, his advisers insist he will not back down on the tax plan.

So far this year, Congress has put aside virtually all other legislation to give quick consideration to budget cuts. The action this week in the Senate Budget Committee and on the House floor will be on measures that set overall spending limits. Actual votes on cutting specific programs will come later in the year.

Fees go up as taxes go down

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — While the focus now is on new state taxes, perhaps, and the pending legislative response to the local tax-cutting Proposition 2½ law, the King administration has been steadily increasing state fees and adding new ones under an authorization approved early last summer.

The Legislature temporarily gave up its right to pass on each fee imposed by the state and left things in the hands of executive Office of Administration and Finance. The authorization expires in December 1982.

In the meantime, all fees are coming under the scrutiny of Richard Asadoorian, an aide in administration and finance, who says a computerized list "indicates the total number of state fees to be in excess of 1,200."

Not all fees are being increased, according to Asadoorian, but some new ones are being added.

The most recent batch approved, involving the Public Health Department, took effect earlier this month and include a series of new fees for health care facilities.

Nursing homes now will pay a biennial fee of $95 to $495, depending on size. Hospitals, $85 to $670, again depending on the number of beds, and clinics, including those which are nonprofit, $85 to $300, depending on the number of out-patient visits.

There is a new $100 application fee for anyone who wants to provide an ambulance service, and a new $35 per ambulance certificate of inspection fee for up to 12 ambulances. There is no charge for each ambulance after the first 12.

While car registration increases took effect early on, increased fees to register private airplanes were ordered more recently. Also increased recently were fees charged people who have to register with the state to practice in certain professions.

"There are many criteria" for determining the new fees, said Asadoorian. "The cost aspect" of providing any state service involved, such as inspections, "is a very important factor.

"We are basically looking at the cost aspect, considering when the fees were last reviewed and also trying to keep in mind where we stand in relation to other states. Some states charge fees where we have not been," he said, using the new charges against health institutions as an example.

Additional increases will be forthcoming in the next three weeks, Asadoorian said, adding he couldn't be specific at this time.

Asadoorian said he did not know how much new money will be raised. But the governor's recommended budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1 anticipates departmental revenue growth of more than $100 million in fiscal 1982, compared to collections in fiscal 1980, which ended before the fee review began.

Rioters battle police in support of IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Hundreds of rioters battled hundreds of police in Belfast and London yesterday in support of jailed IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands, reported at a skeletal 98 pounds in the 57th day of a hunger strike. Prison officials denied widespread rumors he had died.

About 500 Sands' supporters demonstrated at a subway station and near Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's 10 Downing Street residence in London. Thirty-eight people were arrested, and three ambulances carried away an undetermined number of injured.

In Belfast, rioters pitched firebombs at a bus depot in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district of Belfast, then hundreds of youths broke away from some 6,000 people attending a rally for Sands and hurled bricks, stones and lead pipes at a fortified police base.

British troops with armored vehicles moved into the post in the heavily Roman Catholic Andersontown district but made no immediate attempt to disperse the rioters.

Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, the Rev. Daniel Berrigan and Marie Howe, a state legislator from Massachusetts were in the crowd.

The rally came at the end of three-mile march led by Sands' sister, Marcella Kelly, who held aloft a poster-sized photograph of her brother.

The IRA quoted doctors as saying the 27-year-old Sands nearly died Saturday night at Northern Ireland's Maze prison after rejecting a last-minute mediation effort. His family was at his bedside and said after a visit yesterday morning he was "extremely weak."

Evidence may be presented in slaying of Buffalo men

BUFFALO, N.Y.—The Erie County attorney says he will decide today whether to present evidence to a grand jury soon in the slayings of seven Buffalo-area black men, including the so-called "28-caliber killings," the Buffalo News said yesterday.

Investigators worked all weekend to compare evidence in the deaths to bullets and weapons found at the Buffalo home and family hunting lodge of a white Army private, identified as Joseph G. Christopher, and Erie County District Attorney Edward Cosgrove told the Buffalo Sunday Courier-Express he expected a full report today.

Buffalo police went to Georgia last week in an unsuccessful effort to interview the soldier, who was in custody on charges of trying to stab a black soldier at Fort Benning, the newspapers said. New York City detectives also went to Georgia to look into "any possible connection" to four fatal stabbings in their city.

The News quoted Cosgrove as saying he would "make a judgement on Monday" about the whether or not a grand jury will review the evidence as early as this week.

The items found in police searches of the soldier's home and hunting lodge, according to papers filed by Eric County investigators with Justice Theodore S. Kasler of the state Supreme Court, included knives, .28-caliber ammunition, a 22-caliber shell casings, two sawed-off gun stocks, a 22-caliber gun barrel, and a jacket with a stain believed to be blood.

The News reported the Army private drew the attention of officials during the treatment for a self-inflicted razor wound because he bragged to nurses at a Fort Benning hospital that he had killed blacks in New York City and Buffalo.

Cosgrove could not be reached yesterday so comment on the newspaper reports.

Boston police warn tourists as city prepares for layoffs

BOSTON — Off-duty policemen distributed a "survival guide" to tourists yesterday,warning them to hang onto handbags and wallets, in a union protest of layoffs of 202 officers to save money.

Meanwhile, no new talks were scheduled between Mayor Kevin H. White and the City Council over how to bail out Boston public school system, which officials say has only enough money to keep classes going through tomorrow. A state judge has said he'll order classes to continue for the academic year for the 64,500 students even if no agreement is reached on how to fund the sessions.

"Lady, you better hang on to that pocketbook because you're not safe around here," a policeman in street clothes told an elderly woman at Faneuil Hall, a popular tourist attraction.

He was one of about 15 men passing out union newspapers, which carried headlines like "Terror Stalks Hub!" and offered tips on how to avoid "becoming another statistic in our escalating crime reports."

The policeman, who refused to be identified, said he was one of 202 officers who have been laid off effective today. About 200 firefighters also have been laid off, and several police and fire stations have been closed.

City officials say the layoffs are required because of Proposition 2½, a referendum passed by voters that mandates cuts in property taxes and will reduce city tax revenues by up to $118 million next year.

Parade participants march under sunny skies

By JIM KANE
AND RICHARD NAGLE

NORTHAMPTON--American flags, marching bands, and National Guard contingents were in abundance in Northampton yesterday as an estimated 20,000 people turned out to show their patriotism in a Loyalty Day parade. ...,

"Loyalty day is for people to show they believe in their country," said retired Massachusetts National Guard Gen. William P. Hurley, organizer and Chief Marshall of the parade.

Approximately 360 bands, drum corps, community organizations, University of Massachusetts ROTC contingents and veterans groups including the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars marched under sunny skies the 2.5 mile route from Smith Vocational School down the city's main street to Northampton fairgrounds.

A Loyalty Day parade has been held by the VFW in every state and U.S. territory for the past 35 years as a counterpoint to the Soviet May Day. said Raymond C. O'Brian, president of the National Commision of Judges. The Commission judges participants in parades across the country.

About 65 people protesting U.S. involvement in El Salvador marched at the end of the parade while another 20 stood across from the reviewing stand throughout the parade holding signs stating, "Support our country, cut the military not social services," and "No more war."

A 10-foot banner was hung on a downtown apartment building which said, "Loyalty to What? school lunches or cruel junta."

The marches were met with occasional boos and jeers and police had to subdue one man as he charged the group.

"Loyalty doesn't mean all military. I can't believe people blindly accept guns and uniforms as loyalty," said Linda Guthrie, one of the protestors across from the reviewing stand.

The group chants of "No more racism, no more war, U.S. out of El Salvador," as National Guard Units passed were frequently drowned out by the applause and cheers of spectators.

Yesterday's parade follows a march and rally in Northampton Saturday when about 700 people protested American military aid to El Salvador (see story on page one).

As the marchers walked through the center of town, they were escorted by 10 military policemen and an equal number of local police to avoid confrontations with spectators.

Gen. Hurley said the large turnout for the parade was attributable to what he called "a surgency of patriotism and loyalty in the country."

Author launches memorial week

Nobel Laureate author Isaac Bashevis Singer will speak tonight at 8 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall as part of a series of events planned in remembrance of the Nazi Holocaust.

Singer, a Polish novelist and short story writer widely translated in English, will begin a week of commemoration called for by Congress and the Holocaust Memorial Council as "National Days of Remembrance."

President Jimmy Carter and Congress enacted a law in October, 1980, which officially established the United States Holocaust Memorial Council. As part of their charter, the Council was empowered to set aside days of remembrance.

The following events have been scheduled to commemorate the Holocaust on the University of Massachusetts campus:

Tomorrow night at 8 in Thompson Hall, the film "A Shop on Main Street" will be shown. A discussion led by UMass history professor David Wyman will follow.

Thursday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., in the Cape Code Lounge , Student Union, the films "Night and Fog," "The Warsaw Ghetto," "The Eighty-First Blow," and "California Reich" will be shown.

At 11:45 a.m., 1009 Campus Center, Thomas Altizer, a professor of English and Religious Studies at SUNY/Stony Brook, author of Radical Theology and the Death of God will lecture on "God After Auschwitz: An Ecumenical Encounter."

Luncheon will be served ($5 per person). Reservations are required call 545-2554 by tonight.

At 2 p.m. in Memorial Hall there will be open reading on Literary expressions of the holocaust.

In 227 Herter Hall, at 4 p.m. there will be a panel discussion. The panel will consist of:

David Wyman, professor of history, University of Massachusetts: "Why Didn't We Bomb Auschwitz?" Julius Lester, professor of Afro-American studies, University of Massachusetts: "The Holocaust and Racism." Leonard Ehrlich, professor of philosophy and of Judaic studies, University of Massachusetts: "Philosophical Issues of the Holocaust."

At 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall of the Fine Arts Center there will be commemorative music "Kol Nidrei," to an ancient Hebrew melody, Opus 47...Max Bruch. Leopold Teraspulsky, cello, Estella Olevsky, piano. "Baal Schem," three pictures of Chassidic life...Ernest Bloch. Fantasy on "Esch Shalom"...Robert Stern. Julian Olevsky, violin, Estella Olevsky,piano.

Economics prof dies

Sixteen-year veteran of the University of Massachusetts economics department Vaclav Holesovsky died of cancer last Sunday at the age of 56.

Holesovsky, who had been suffering for several months, continued to teach his classes up until his admittance to Cooley Dickinson Hospital several weeks ago.

Private burial services were held last Tuesday morning at the North Amherst Cemetery. A memorial service will be held at the Douglass Funeral Home on Saturday, May 2, at 12 noon, according to Joseph Lake of the department of Slavic languages.

Holesovsky, who was born in Prague, Czechoslovakia, had studied at the University of Paris and received both his M.A. and Ph.D from Columbia University. During his career, he published a textbook and numerous articles in the field of economics.

Holesovsky is survived by his wife, Hanne, his mother, Frances Holesovsky, a son, Thomas, a daughter, Janet, and two grandchildren.

Mazzola, Kolish win in Southwest

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

Ruth Mazzola, along with Theresa Kolish, was re-elected to the presidency of the Southwest Area Government last week, defeating Stephen Wysocki and Kevin O'Rourke.

Mazzola and Kolish received 998 votes, or 69.8 percent of the vote, while Wysocki and O'Rourke received 427 votes, 29.9 percent of the total vote.

In other races, Marjorie Harlow and Andrew Prescott ran unopposed for co-vice president. Also facing no opposition were Alyce Russo for treasurer and Beth Cooney for communications coordinator.

The total voter turnout for the presidential race during Thursday and Friday's balloting was 1,430, or approximately 27.5 percent of all Southwest residents.

All new officers will take office on April 30.

Mazzola, who was re-elected to her second term as co-president, said she was "disappointed with the election turnout. There wasn't enough time, and there wasn't enough money for the campaign," said Mazzola. Southwest election rules will be changed next year to allow more time and money for campaigns, Mazzola said.

Future plans for the government include sponsoring a scholarship fund "to give students an alternative in funding their education," Kolish said. The scholarship would be awarded on the basis of academic achievement and community involvement, said Kolish.

Both Mazzola and Kolish cited increased student involvement and awareness of the goverment as a major goal.

Neither Wysocki nor O'Rourke could be reached for comment.

Conference addresses future

By M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

Tom Stites, assistant national editor for the New York Times, told a group of about 50 people gathered for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's journalism conference Saturday, that no matter what the future is, journalists will still have to find out "what happened."

Stites was the keynote speaker at the conference which dealt with the future of print journalism.

Stites advised future journalists to "learn to be the best journalist in the present and as change happens, evolve with it."

"To be a successful reporter today, you not only have to tell 'what happened,' you have to be able to apply it also," Stites said.

Stites' speech was the conclusion of the conference which began with a panel discussion and included a varity of journalism workshops.

Panelists Mike Short, Associated Press bureau chief for Massachusetts and Rhode Island, Matthew Zawidowski, managing editor of the Holyoke Transcript-Telegram, Frank Faulkner, city editor of the Springfield Daily News, and Howard Ziff, chairman of the University of Massachusetts journalistic studies program, who chaired the panel,discussed what they saw in store for print journalism.

Short noted the decline in the circulation of metropolitan newspapers and mass magazines and the rise in the number of special interest magazines.

"What is happening is a demassification of the media," Short said. "We have to stop thinking of ourselves as newspeople and start thinking of ourselves as communicators."

Faulkner said that peak load pricing, charging more during the daylight hours on electricity, will definitely hurt evening papers because a morning paper would be cheaper to produce.

Zawidowski said that although cathode ray tubes (computer-typewriters), only allow journalists to see 17 lines at a time, good writers and editors will still be able to do their job.

The panel also agreed that jobs will be more accessable to minorities in the future.

Other conference speakers included Kit Rachlis, music editor of the Boston Phoenix, Anna Mayo of the Village Voice, Michael Stanton of the AP, Faye Frail, arts editor of the Valley Advocate, James Boylan of the UMass journalistic studies program, David Ferro, advertising director of the Holyoke Transcript, and J. Walter Green, New England photo editor of the AP.

Springfield Symphony features Mozart

The Springfield Symphony Orchestra,
Robert Gutter, conductor
Rudolf Firkusny, piano

Saturday, April 25, 1981
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

By F.C. WYSE
Collegian Correspondent

I have never before seen a city professional orchestra with as many young faces as the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Conductor Robert Gutter selected four works of Mozart composed within a very short period of time. The program opened with the ballet music from Idomeneo (K.367), a three-act opera commisioned in 1780 (when Mozart was just 24) and composed in 1780-81. It premiered in Munich just two days after his 25th birthday and marked Mozart's first great operatic work. The score calls for muted horns (then an unknown in Munich) and models had to be sent from Salzburg.

Gutter was not faced with this problem for he did not have a full horn section. But, with the ceiling baffles down and the concert stage extended some 20 feet, the small orchestra projected nicely across the vast FAC Concert Hall.

The next work, the Serenade #6 in D (K.239), an evening song intended for outdoor performance, is scored for 2 small ensembles, the first consisting of 2 violins, viola, and bass, and the other with 2 violins, viola, and cello. Gutter altered the orchestration allowing the timpani a bass role. This created a strange and beautiful effect in the large hall and expanded the texture of this piece which is actually closer to a Baroque Concerto Grosso where several orchestra members are soloists playing against the rest of the ensemble.

Next, the Piano Concerto in C (K.467) (listed in the program as 464), composed in 1785, featured Rudolf Firkusny as soloist.

Born in Czechoslavakia, Firkusny showed promise at an early age, (making his debut in Prague at 10), studied with Leo Janacek and, after studying with Arthur Schnabel, toured the U.S., making his Town Hall debut in 1941. The slow movement of this piece (ringing at this very moment in supermarkets and dentist offices across this great land) sounded very beautiful from the second row, but a friend who sat in the rear of the hall said the piano was barely audible, even with acoustical modifications and extended stage. I assured him it was wonderfully lyric and that Firkusny made the most of the simple dream-like theme.

The program closed with the Symphony No. 41 in C (K.551), The "Jupiter," the last of Mozart's 41 Symphonies, was composed (along with the E flat and the G minor), over a six week period in the summer of 1788. (And you thought last summer was rough?) The fugue finale with its strange 4 note theme—one which appears in several of Mozart's works—was as exciting as this young orchestra.

Greeks celebrate all week

If you reside in the University of Massachusetts Greek Area, this is your week. Starting today, you can partake of the week long festivities in celebration of Greek Week 1981.

Greek Week is a week of Interfraternity and Panhellenic Public Relations Coordinator Janet Seekell.

Beta Kappa Phi fraternity will start the week off today at 3 p.m. in their parking lot adjacent to the fraternity with a junk car smash

A Greek Sing is being sponsored tonight 7 in the Campus Center Auditorium. The Sing is being judged on the theme presented by each house, costume, spirit and talent, according to the Greek Week handbook.

The annual awards banquet will start at 5:30 p.m. Wednesday in room 1009 Campus Center. The awards banquet commends those individuals and houses contributing something unique to the Greek System and the University, said Seekell.

Awards are scheduled to be distributed at 8 p.m. followed by a party for Greek Area members.

The finale will be held Saturday May 2, by the Campus Center Pond.

Relay teams of five will compete in the Greek-A-Thon, an obstacle course structured for the athlete and non-athlete alike.

Proceeds for this events will go towards the Muscular Dystrophy foundation.

Attempted suicide reported

University of Massachusetts police recieved a report of an attempted suicide at 1:59 a.m. Saturday from Grayson dormitory in the Orchard Hill Residential Area. When police arrived on the scene they found a man kneeling by the side of the road holding his left wrist, police said. There was a moderate amount of blood flowing from the wound, police said.

The man, a University of Lowell student, said he had cut his wrist when he fell on broken glass, police said. Police said the cut was a single slash across the radius pulse of the man's left wrist. The man was taken by ambulance to UMass Health Services. No information was available concerning his condition last night.

In another incident, police received a report of clothing valued at more than $500 stolen from a locked car parked on the Sylvan access road, police said. The items included a pair of riding pants and a riding jacket valued at $400, they said.

Police also received a report of a gold ring, valued at $300, stolen from an unlocked room in Leach residence hall in the Northeast Residential Area at 2:27 p.m. Friday, they said.

Peace activist to visit campus

Northern Ireland peace activist Betty Williams will speak tomorrow night at 8 in the Student Union Ballroom of the University of Massachusetts on the problems facing the strife torn province of her native Ulster.

In 1976, Williams co-founded the Community of Peace People organization, which has worked to promote peace in Northern Ireland, where sectarian violence has resulted in over 2,000 deaths since 1969.

Williams and Mairead Corrigan founded the peace organization following the August 1976 deaths of three young Belfast children who were struck and killed by a car whose operator, a member of the provisional Irish Republican Army, had been shot and killed by British soldiers.

A door-to-door campaign by Williams and Corrigan, the aunt of two of the slain children, got thousands of Belfast women to march through the streets of Northern Ireland's capital to protest the violence in Ulster.

Williams and Corrigan were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977, the first time women received the award in 31 years. Williams and Corrigan also received the Carl Von Ossietsky medal in 1976 from the Berlin section of the International League of Human Rights.

Williams, a Catholic and mother of two children, is making her second lecture tour in the United States. Williams last toured in 1979. The lecture, sponsored by the UMass Distinguished Visitors Program, is free to UMass students, faculty and staff.

Williams' appearance comes in the midst of IRA prisoner Bobby Sands' hunger strikes and is expected to be greeted with some local hostility.

Members of the Irish Solidarity Committee plan to protest Williams' appearance. Committee members claim Williams supports the British occupation of Northern Ireland by considering British troops a peacekeeping force.

British troops have occupied Northern Ireland, part of the United Kingdom, since August 1969, when sectarian violence brought Ulster to the brink of civil war.

Stress examined tomorrow

Tomorrow is Stress Awareness Day sponsored by the Health Education and Mental Health Divisions of University Health Services.

A series of workshops on a variety of subjects such as "Women and Stress," "Academic Pressure," "Time Management," "Nutrition and Exercise," and "Stress and Money" will be held from 9:15 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. in the Campus Center.

The film "Managing Stress" will be shown at 8:30 a.m. tomorrow and 4 p.m. Wednesday.

Pre-registration will be held this afternoon and all day tomorrow on the Campus Center first floor.

Looking back

By Carla Lesh

The major event covered by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian the week of April 26, 1971 was the anti-war demonstration in Washington, D.C. One thousand of the 500,000 people at the rally were from the University of Massachusetts area. The rally was one of the first not specifically student run and speakers included Coretta Scott King, Sally Davis, Angela Davis' mother and Congresswoman Bella Abzug as well as representatives from the Teamster's Union, the Socialist Workers Party and Vietnam Vets against the War.

Former heavyweight champion and Muslim minister, Muhammad Ali, spoke to a crowd of about 4,500 people at the Curry Hicks Cage about the importance of having a purpose in life, which he called "the greatest discovery in life and until one finds his purpose in life he is dissatisfied.' During the question and answer period following the lecture, he defended his apparently conflicting support of non-violence although he fights in the ring saying, "The intention of war is to kill. My purpose is not to kill any person." He went on to say "Nixon should challenge Ho Chi Minh with the gloves on to decide the Vietnam war.

The Massachusetts State House approved a bill that would lower the drinking age to 19. The bill was then to go to the Senate for approval.

Seven residents of Grayson residence hall in the Orchard Hill Residential Area were found guilty of operating a bar illegally on campus. The men involved received a letter of censure which was to stay on their record until their graduation.

Six residence halls had been approved for coed residence, increasing the number of of coed dormitories to 19. The new coed dormitories were Johnson and Hamlin House in the Northeast Residential Area, Brett House in Central, Grayson and Field in Orchard Hill and three Sylvan area Dormitories.

An advertisement for available positions on the Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors read, "Don't you hate the Campus Center? Well...Do something, dammit!!"

Know the law on auto service

Getting your car repaired can be a frustrating experience. If you know your rights under Massachusetts General Law, Chapter 93A, Section 2(c) you can avoid many of the problems which may arise. The law applies to all auto repair shops and retail stores which offer automotive services. Not all rights under Chapter 93A, Section 2(c) are included in the following list:

1. Right to an authorized written estimate—Before the work on your car is started the auto shop must give you a written estimate listing the specific repairs to be made. The estimate must include the total price to be paid in terms of parts and labor unless posted.

2. Right to know storage charge conditions—Prior to obtaining your authorization for repairs the shop must inform you of the conditions under which storage charges will be made, unless this information is posted.

3. Right to old parts—At the completion of the repairs you have the right to any parts which have been replaced.

4. Right to same day repairs—A repair shop must complete work on your car the same day you deliver it unless you are notified to the contrary.

5. Right to an agreed upon price within $10.00—If repairs exceed the original estimate by more than $10.00 the shop must notify you before continuing the job.

6. Right to have shoddy repair work corrected at no extra charge—The shop must repair promptly any repairs made which were not performed properly in accordance with accepted trade standards.

7. Right to an itemized bill—The shop must give you a written dated bill containing the following information:
   - —Name and address of both you and the shop.
   - —Date the car was received.
   - —Odometer reading on date received.
   - —Itemized list of repairs.
   - —List of parts supplied, by name and number.
   - —Cost of each part.
   - —Number of labor hours.
   - —Total charge for labor.
   - —Total charge for parts and labor.

If you are billed a flat charge according to a schedule of charges posted clearly in the shop, your bill is not required to contain detailed itemization of parts and labor.

Choosing an auto shop

A good way to choose an auto shop is through the recommendations of friends and relatives. Then contact the Better Business Bureau and local consumer groups to determine the nature and extent of complaints which have made against the shop. You may even ask the shops you are considering to furnish you with some consumer references.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

This place is crazy

You tell me this place isn't crazy. Just tell me that.

Two weeks ago, kids in Southwest got a letter from the Office of Residential Life telling them they had five days before Physical Plant guys started coming in to paint their rooms. Closets had to be emptied, bookcases moved, beautiful messes that had taken two months to build had to be cleaned up, all with the threat of a fine if the student didn't cooperate.

Every dorm in Southwest is going to be whitewashed, all with some sterile off-white color. They're even going to paint over the dots on the third floor of Pierpont, and all the other murals that adorn the walls of Southwest dorms. Everything, gone, just like that.

And, if you don't like it, tough.

Tell me this place isn't crazy.

And then there's that woman from the John Brown Anit-Klan Committee who said they supported the right of anyone who wants to kill the policemen. Just like that. Shoot cops, kill them, just like that.

Two kids got stabbed last week in Southwest, one in the stomach, the other in the head. In the head.

Two professors signed their names to a full-page ad in the New York Times supporting U.S. involvement in El Salvador. Tell me this place isn't crazy.

And, now, the latest. Last Wednesday night, former hostage Victor Tomseth spoke before a UMass crowd at the Student Union Ballroom. Instead of lecturing on his 444 days of captivity in Iran, Tomseth spent most of the night denying charges from hecklers that he is a member of the Central Intelligence Agency.

There is something grand and self-satisfying about calling someone a member of the CIA. And, so, people called Victor Tomseth a member of the CIA. What's perhaps worse than some of the crazy left-wing stuff that's coming out of all this is some of the crazy right-wing stuff. While condeming the actions of Tomseth hecklers, some people are throwing around that "love it or leave it" baloney which supposedly went out with Archie Bunker reruns. It's back with "Bedtime for Bonzo" reruns.

This place, this university, is something of a nuthouse. There is a representative of every point of view, every train of thought. Somebody who is for or against every possible thing you can think of. Inane philosophies are challenged by inane philosophies.

I am right, you are wrong.
You are wrong, I am right.

Consequently, because there is no real right or wrong, no one is right and no one is wrong; instead, everybody is just crazy.

Nuts.

If you missed the Tomseth speech, you can catch some real UMass craziness when Northern Ireland peace activist Betty Williams lectures in the SUB tomorrow night. The Irish Solidarity Committee has madce it known that they intend to protest Williams' presence, so if you want to hear some good juicy heckling, get there early.

The bathrooms, the tuition, the mini-store, the library, the garage, the room painting, the stabbings, the CIA. Okay, you tell me this place isn't crazy. Just look me in the eye, tell me that, and I'll be fine.

An ugly display

On the evening of April 22 I attended a speaking engagement at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst by former Iranian hostage Victor Tomseth. .

In my four years here at UMass I have never been so disgusted with the actions and attitudes of my fellow students. Mr. Tomseth was asked to speak at the university in regards to his experiences as a hostage but was met with a barrage of insults and innuendos. As he described his 444 days of captivity, slurs were continually being shouted from the sides of the auditorium where banners were held stating Mr. Tomseth was a "torturer," "killer," and "CIA collaborator."

I do not defend any possible CIA covert action in Iran that violated human rights. However, when the accusations are pinned on Mr. Tomseth just because he speaks Farsi, the language of Iran, which could have made him a "highly desirable asset for CIA liaison and translation work," I defend Mr. Tomseth's right to deliver the address he was invited to give. It sickened me to think this man, who returned to the United States just three months ago after over 13 months a hostage in service to his country, was greeted as a criminal rather than a victim by a surly group of hecklers. I am saddened to think that such actions will reflect both on our state university and the Commonwealth itself in the minds of Mr. Tomseth and others who were present at this ugly display. It is too bad that such a vocal minority has to press their thoughts and beliefs into the public eye in such a rude and undignified manner.

Francis X. Wright, Jr.
Amherst

On April 22, the Collegian printed a guest column written by the two misguided members of that world renounced strategic think-tank, the Ad-Hoc Coalition on the CIA, reporting on alleged atrocities in Iran. That night we were in the audience as Victor Tomseth spoke on his experiences of being held hostage for 444 days at the hands of Iranian terrorists. Again the main impetus of questions asked by the audience was on alleged CIA activities. Daily, the Campus Center and the Student Union resound with the maniacal and ideologically distorted ramblings of a half dozen or more farcical groups with absurd names and even more absurd ideas. Enough is enough.

We do not question the right of those people to express their opinions, however misguided they may be. As former Supreme Court Justice Jackson once said, "We can have intellectual individualism and the rich cultural diversities that we owe to exceptional minds only at the price of occasional eccentricity and abnormal attitudes." What we would like to know is why such groups continually exhaust themselves in a ludicrous assault upon the only nation in the world that would tolerate their acerbate protests.

The world is not a perfect place and foreign policy can not be dictated by the idealistic aspirations of those who either ignore or cannot comprehend harsh reality. No country wants war, especially a nation which watched a generation of young men perish in the steamy jungles of a far off land in a war they were not allowed to win. As a result even beyond the super-power bilateral muscle flexing, the seemingly pragmatic agreements and recent jingoistic saber-rattling, the main objective of United states foreign policy is one of institutionalized peace coupled with an opportunity to promulgate self-determination.

In a world filled with countries and organizations vehemently opposed to the proposed goals of the United States there exists an urgent need for an organization such as the CIA. As it was once said, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." In today's political climate, the need for a powerful intelligence gathering organization is of paramount importance.

To those who would question either the role of the CIA or the principles upon which America bases its foreign policy, we have but one suggestion:

Rent a table in the campus center of Teheran University or Moscow University or Havana University, and protest against their government. Just have them reroute your CounterSpy subscription to the local penal colony or gulag. God bless America.

Nuts and bolts

This is in response to the declaration made by Beth Ruck of the 'John Brown Anti-Klan Committee' as quoted in the Collegian of April 23 ("We support the right of whoever it was...to murder any cop they please"):

Nobody can argue with your right to protest, and many people agree with the essence of your various causes and struggles, once the usual pejoratives and Leninist hallelujahs have been weeded out.

But lady, when you stand on a sidewalk with a bullhorn and openly advocate the killing of policemen, that's going too far. We can tolerate chants about mercenaries and CIA genocide because we've heard it all before. Your proud proclamation of solidarity with cop-killers, though, proves that you're missing more than a few nuts and bolts, and further, shows that you're no better than the nasty villains you hate so much.

Genocide is genocide

I am writing this letter in response to George Krikorian's letter of April 24 regarding the genocide of the Armenian People.

I wish to praise Mr. Krikorian for the commitment he has to the Armenian people He is also praiseworthy for his requests of all non-Armenians that we ackowledge the genocide of his people almost thirty years before the term was coined.

The Armenians, who have lived around Mount Ararat since before recorded history, share a common language, culture, and church. Although they were conquered by many empires, they were especially oppressed—and many times massacred—under the Ottoman Empire (now Turkey). The Turkish government, soon after it entered World War I, ordered the extermination of the Armenian minority. There was never any doubt as to who the victims were. But still the Turkish government denies the massacres.

I find it troublesome though, that Mr. Krikorian refers to the massacre of the Armenians as "more vicous and terrible than the Jewish genocide of World War II." That type of statement cannot and should never be tolerated! It is not my purpose to argue the point he made, but rather it is to remind him that genocide is genocide.

Especially on this eve of our remembrance of the Holocaust we should not try to compare whose wounds are greater. It is not necessary to denigrate or minimize the suffering of one people in order to recognize the suffering of another. Rather than become adversaries in viewing our people's genocides I join with Mr. Krikorian and the Armenian people in remembering. I hope they shall do the same.

This Thursday (April 30) is Holocaust Memorial Day. It is a very important day in which every Jew and non-Jew should actively remember what happened to the Jews in Europe...lest it should happen again.

Finally let me quote part of Mr. Krikorian's letter and join with him in remembering. "Pass the crime committed against us from generation to generation," so that we shall never forget and never let it happen again.

A YEAR OUT OF COLLEGE, ANDA STRAUSS IS MAKING AVIATION HISTORY IN THE ARMY.

"I'll be seeing Germany a way no tourist can. From the cockpit of an Army Chinook helicopter.

"I'm being assigned to a Chinook helicopter unit in Germany as a test pilot and maintenance officer, and I'm proud that I'll be the first woman to have that assignment over there. It's a real thrill for me.

"So was learning how to fly a helicopter. It takes a lot more skill than an airplane. If you think college is demanding, flight school is even tougher. It's not only academically demanding, it's really mentally demanding as well as physically.

"In Germany, I'll have a chance to use some of the leadership and management techniques I learned in ROTC. It's going to be a real challenge having command responsibilities.

2nd Lt. Anda Strauss was a political science major at Wake Forest and a member of Army ROTC

"I'm also excited about living in Germany. I'm looking forward to travelling and doing some skiing. And I really want to learn the language and get to know the people.

"I got into ROTC really just to see what it was all about. For me, it all couldn't have worked out better."

Army ROTC got Anda Strauss off to a good start. Maybe it can do the same for you. To find out, stop by your Army ROTC office on campus. While you're there, ask about our scholarships and $1,000 a year spending money you can earn in your last two years.

And begin your future as an officer.

"giving the impression that external powers are causing the situation in El Salvador.

"The social and economic conditions in El Salvador have nothing to do with Cuba, the U.S.S.R., or Vietnam," Duran said.

"They have a lot to do with the friends and allies of this (the U.S.) government. They have a lot to do with the governing junta, part of 50 years of dictatorship in El Salvador," he said.

He charged the U.S. government with providing "constant support" for that dictatorship.

The line or marchers was peppered with signs of protest along with a six-foot long black cardboard coffin and mock body carried by two men dressed as soldiers, one wearing a gas mask.

Coach Elaine Marasco was impressed with h er team's play, "Kathy did a great job pitching in the first game. She really put on a good show. We played well in the second game, but just sat on the lead too long."

Against Temple, the mittwomen lost the first game in extra innings. In the eigth inning, pitcher O'Connell walked lead-off batter Jan Williams. A wild pitch moved Williams to second, and first baseman Shirlee Tremont's sacrifice scored the winning run for Temple.

UMass scored their lone run in the first inning on throwing errors by Temple pitcher Kim Gray and Tremont. Temple's Terry McVaugh scored when an attempted pick-off throw sailed by thirdbaseman Chris Coughlin. The score remained tied at 1-1 through seven innings of play.

The second game of the doubleheader was a pitching duel between UMass' Karen Poirier and Temple's Mary Davis. O'Connell's towering homerun to centerfield in the sixth inning was the only score of the contest. Roiux had the only other hit for the mittwomen, a single in the first inning.

Poirier scattered three hits to give UMass the victory.Temple's only scoring opportunity came in the second inning when leftfielder Terry Koff slammed a triple with no one out. Great defense by the UMass infield coupled with Poirier's outstanding pitching effort, allowed the mittwomen to prevent the run from scoring.

UMass vicariously held their 1-0 lead for the remaining four innings, thus gaining the victory and a split of the doubleheader.

But Harvard came back quickly with a try of its own, taking the lead back, 4-7. Nothing could stop the Crimson now; they upped the lead by another two with a good kick after the try, 4-9. UMass came up with another three-point penalty kick sending the game into overtime.

In the first game of quarterfinal action, Saturday, the UMass A-side team came up against the University of Maine/Orono. UMass started out strong and took the lead early in the game with a Bruce Simmons penalty kick scoring all 12 points in the 12-3 win.

From this game, the A-side went on to face the University of Rhode Island, who they crushed 28-3. UMass got the lead kick- off that went out-of-bounds and led to a scrum. URI won the scrum but got called on a penalty. UMass went for the penalty kick; and it was good for the first three points of the game and a UMass lead.

From this point on, the Minutemen kept the lead with consistent scoring and great ball handling by the forwards. UMass came out of the game with two tries, one by Stephan Rutherford in first half, and Mark Olbrych, in the second half.

"We got superb support from everyone," Simmons said. "We were 15 players at our best. It was great!"

Gorillas win ninth by TKO, 18-15

Walters shines, Weller scores 6

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

Usually it would be difficult to pick one particular play which could be deemed representative of an entire game. But, one brief stanza of action in the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's hard-earned, physical 18-15 decision over the University of New Hampshire's Wildcats Saturday, does the trick rather well.

The second quarter's opening faceoff was held and the ball popped up in the air. Massachusetts senior midfielder Tom Walters jumped up to snag the loose ball. While Walters was up in the air, three UNH hitmen converged on the Albertson, N.Y. native to make a Wildcat sandwich with Gorilla filling. The ball squirted loose once again and a New Hampshire middie scooped it up. He wheeled toward the Gorilla zone only to be labeled and seated by a Jim Weller flying bodycheck. And so it went.

"It was really physical out there today. Both teams were hitting all game long," Walters said. "They (UNH) thought that by playing the physical game, they could take it away from us."

So far this year, Massachusetts has been able to combine its pressure offense and aggressive defense with a mix of finesse and a little luck to produce its wins with New Hampshire being the ninth consecutive victory for the unbeaten, nationally ranked fifth Gorillas.

A few alterations were made against the Wildcats to produce the latest success. The usual dominating Massachusetts attack unit was there. The Gorillas outshot UNH 20-5 in the first quarteer, 55-32 on the game, but even though they scored 18 goals, 7 short of the season-high, they couldn't buy a goal when they wanted one.

The defense was there also, holding the Wildcats to five shots in the first period and shotless for the final eight minutes of the third. Senior defenseman Mark Fierro introduced himself early to New Hampshire's leading scorer Steve Glover, holding him to three goals, although two of those tallies came in UNH's late fourth quarter run.

The problem was that when UNH shot, the ball went in. All five shots in the first period were for goals, 1.000 percent.

All in all, this game was won in the trenches, at midfield. Walters gave away six inches and fifty pounds to 6'3", 220 lb. Wildcat freshman Don Brown at the faceoff circle, but it didn't stop Walters from playing his best game of the season for the Gorillas.

The faceoff-king won 25 of 33 of his specialties and gave out as many sprawling checks as he received. He also grabbed 24 ground balls and controlled the offensive flow for much of the second half.

Walters was complemented by the standout play of the other Gorilla middies, Mike Lavin, who had two goals and an assist on the game, Ray Cozzi, who matched checks with the Wildcat beefsters and Tim Cutler, who administered some hits of his own in the Massachusetts cause.

What was even more remarkable about the middies' game was the fact that tri-captain Pete Schmitz was unable to play due to a knee injury sustained in pregame warmups.

Weller continued his assault on the national scoring lead with a not typical six goal performance, and senior attacker Skip Vosburgh led the offense with a seven assist, four goal effort, one second quarter tally comming on a no-look, over-the-shoulder, behind-the-back scoop-in.

Rutgers sweep Mittmen, for fourth straight loss

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

The sun never did shine on Earl Lorden Field Saturday afternoon.

Nature's provision of cold and rain was the perfect setting for the UMass Minutemen's descent into their lowest point of the season, a place between inconsistency and misfortune called the Barren Valley of Desparation.

For the second time in four days the Minutemen were swept in an Eastern Eight doubleheader, (the first back to back sweep in UM history) the assailants this time being the hitherto pushovers called the Scarlet Knights from Rutgers, the New Jersey State University; 8-4 and 5-3.

With the help of one piecemeal inning and an all-business lefthanded hurler, the Scarlet Knight batters punched sliced their way to revenge, countering their sweep at the hands of UMass last Saturday in Piscataway, N.J.

The Minutemen's great expectation of an Eastern Athletic Association championship and possible deliverance into post-season Fantasyland were severly cloded with the double kill, which leaves coach Dick Bergquist's charges with a 2-4 record in the EAA, and a sub .500 mark for the third time this season at 13-14.

And the agonizing thing is, it happened too quickly for all the locals concerned.

In the first game, starting UMass pitcher Steve Cramer (3-3) was breezing into the sixth inning with a 4-2 lead, trailing a strong of ten consecutive retired batters. But with one out, all hell broke loose. After two walks, four singles, two errors and an impromptu relief appearance by Chuck Thompson and the Scarlet Knights had scratched together a 7-4 lead.

In the nightcap, Rutgers scored two runs in the first inning and then braced behind the hardthrowing Jim Lawlor, who allowed just three Minutemen hits through five stanzas. The Knights braved the only display of valor this day by the Minutemen, a two run sixth that made the score 5-2.

The Minutemen weren't outhit (14 safeties for each team) or outslugged (two UM Homers), they just lost the contest of selfconfidence. The Scarlet Knights, 14-9-1 rolled into Amherst and made believers out of themselves with each hit, each run, and each UMass out.

And the Minutemen, despite entering the twinbill hitting .285 as a team, could only muster small, small, spattering of offense; lacking the big inning that, especially in the first game, would have put Rutgers away.

In the first inning of the first game, UMass stranded runners on second and third base. In the second inning, Rob Applegate's (3-2) first delivery to Mark Litano was turned into a slow roller to third for a force out that ended the inning with two more UMass runners in the lerch.

The Minutemen however, had built a 4-2 lead through five innings with single tallies in the first and fourth innings plus two solo homers by Warren McReddie (his seventh) and freshman Keith Lovellette (his first) in the third and fifth.

Cramer had yielded just two hits before the disasterous sixth in which ten Knights came to the plate. The clincher; a two-out single by Rick Federico off Thompson that made the score 7-4. UMass hurlers Adam Grossman and Vin Todd made appearances in relief in the seventh.

In the second game, Lawlor's fastball and curve caused silence from the Minutemen bats through five innings, outshining a decent performance by UMass' Steve Drelick (0-3) who was touched for two runs in the first and two single tallies the rest of the way. UMass' inadequate two-run sixth was sparked by a two-out single by Barry Bennett that scored John Kraham.

Trackmen excel at Penn Relays

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

"They ran as well as they have all year," commented Ken O'Brien, coach of the University of Massachusetts men's track team, of the Minutemen's performances at the 87th Penn Relays, on Apr. 23-25, at the University of Pennsylvania.

John Wright ran 14.2 seconds in his trial of the 110 meter high hurdles, breaking the UMass standard for the second time this year. Wright placed fifth in his heat of nine runners, with only the top two qualifying for the final. "He belonged there, he ran very well," said O'Brien.

Bill DeVarney equaled his best effort in the 100 meter dash this season, hitting the century mark in 10.7 seconds.

Wright and DeVarney teamed up with Rick Cady and Rick Trunfio in the 800 meter relay, the foursome placing third in their heat in a Minuteman record 1:29.0 performance.

Paul Beaulieu placed 15th in the seeded section of the 5000 meter run. The junior from Granby hit the first two mile marks in 4:26, and 9:08, before slowing to a 14:43 run for the 3.1 mile distance.

Chris Omeltchenko ran 9:23.4 in the 3000 meter steeplechase, while Dale Whiting, Brian Osborne, Cady and Trunfio placed sixth in their heat of the 1600 meter relay. The freshman Osborne ran the fastest of the four, his split for the 400 meters being 49.5 seconds.

The Minutemen will host two New England collegiate track powerhouses next weekend, in a trimeet against Northeastern University and the University of Rhode Island at the Llewellyn Derby track.

Mittwomen have winning weekend

By ELIZABETH McGOWAN
and SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

A combination of superb pitching and spectacular defensive play sparked the University of Massachusetts varsity softball team to victory in three of four games this weekend. The mittwomen, now 12-4, swept both ends of a doubleheader from Adelphi University, 1-0,3-0 and split a twinbill with Temple University, 2-1,1-0.

The first game on Sunday against Adelphi was a pitcher's duel which UMass eventually won in extra innings. The mittwomen launched a six-hit attack, while pitcher Kathy O'Connell gave up only two hits in upping her record to 5-3.

Although the mittwomen threatened to score in the fourth, they could not push a run across the plate. After O'Connell singled and was sacrificed to second by catcher Jacquie Gaw, an error put runners at second and third. With two outs, firstbaseman Fran Troy grounded out to end the inning.

The winning run in the bottom of the eighth was ignited by shortstop Allyson Rioux's single, Panther pitcher, Laurel Vanderindy issued free passes to O'Connell and Gaw to load the bases. With one out, relief pitcher Linda Gurevitz walked third baseman Chris Coughlin to let O'Connell score the lone run.

In the nightcap, Karen Poirier pitched her way to a four hit, 3-0 shut-out. Poirer's consistent fireballing dominated the game. The only scoring threat the Panthers (14-10) could muster came in the seventh when two singles sandwiched a fielding error to load the bases. An infield out ended the game and preserved the shut-out.

The mittwomen did all their scoring in the first inning and then held the lead. Gaw smacked her third round-tripper of the season for the first run. A triple by Coughlin scored centerfielder Brenda Simmons from third. Troy smacked in the final run with a single up the middle.

Triple OT knocks ruggers out of tourney

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

The host team University of Massachusetts Rugby club was downed, 11-9 by Harvard University in triple over-time action yesterday in the semi-finals of the New England Rugby Football Union College Championships.

With an outstanding day of play Saturday in the quarterfinals, it was a tremendous blow to the UMass A-side team to lose in the semi-finals.

The two teams played the first two 5- minute over-times with not much action taking place. It was in the third 5 minute over-time period that Harvard got its chance. UMass was called on a penalty and the Crimson went for the three points on a penalty kick. Harvard took the lead at 11-9. And the Minutemen could not forge their way back. Harvard took the semi-final title.

"They are the same people, but not the same players (as yesterday)." said Paul Morrison, a member of the UMass RFC.

For the first time in the entire tourney, an opposing team had a lead over UMass. Harvard came up with an early penalty kick in the first half of regulation time, and they kept the lead until the second half.

UMass came close to scoring in the first half when kicker Bruce Simmons booted for yardage and a scrum. Tim "Mr. Hollywood" Durepo got hold of the ball on the scrum and UMass with possession on a line-out. The Minutemen went for a ruck on the line- out and drew a penalty from Harvard.

Simmons went for the penalty kick, but the wind took it away and the men were still down.

Action picked up early in the second half with UMass kicking off to Harvard. UMass capitalized on a Harvard fumble and moved down to the Harvard end zone for a scrum.

UMass got hold of the ball out of the scrum and Mark Bricker went in for the try for UMass, taking its first lead of the game, 4-3.

Latin American Week

MLN Pinpoints Goals

by Debbie Sicilia Nummo Staff

A series of activities marking the opening of the Latin American Week began on Thursday April 23rd and will continue thru Saturday May 2nd.

The Latin American Week comprises a series of conferences and cultural affairs which seeks to enlighten both students and community members about the different Latin American countries.

This year AHORA, the head organizing group, has dedicated this week to all the compañeros in El Salvador who are struggling for their land.

The first activity held was brought forth by Mr. Julio Rosado, a member of the Puerto Rican National Liberation Movement (MLN). He was precise in his presentation about the nature and organization of the MLN.

The MLN, a movement which is centered here in the U.S. not only works with Puerto Ricans who wish to gain independence from the U.S., but also works closely with organizations which work toward the Liberation of Chicano-Mexican, American Indians and the Black Communities. The fraternal organization in Puerto Rico is the Puerto Rican Socialist League (LSP), which center its tasks in Puerto Rico. Many may ask why the MLN would be centered in the U.S. being that it's labor is mainly focused on the liberation of Puerto Rico• Mr. Julio Rosado explained the importance of the MLN by stressing that there is a large Puerto Rican community in the U.S. that must work to prepare and educate the people for the return to the Island in order for the struggle to succeed. The LSP, on the other hand is the organization on the Island which strives to bring about the conciousness of the Puerto Rican plight by stressing the need for Revolution.

Mr. Rosado clearly stated the organizations belief in armed struggle as one of the tools to be used to gain the in dependences of Puerto Rico. He continued to explain why this was necessary.

In 1898 the U.S. took over the Island and in 1900 the Puerto Ricans expressed their desire for independence and were answered by the U.S. government with the Foraker Act. In this act the U.S. harnessed the hold on Puerto Rico by initiating the following policies for the Island: The appointment of a governor by the President of

Northampton Rally Criticizes U·S·

by Frank Ogelsby Nummo Staff

On saturday April 25 about 600 protesters met at the Bridge St. School in Northampton. The purpose of this rally was to march in opposition of the U.S. governments support of the military dictatorship in El Salvador. Organizers announced the route of the march which would direct them to Pulaski Park on Route 9, just down the road from Smith College.

Once the protesters reached the destination, Pulaski Park,a series of speakers were heard. The first was sister Maria Russo who is currently missioned to the Office for Justice and Peace in Maryknoll,New York. This office is mainly concerned with human rights, disarmament, and end hunger. Sisters in Central America are in close touch with the office to insure that it is well informed about reporting their events. Sister Russo discussed the lack of rights of the poor in many countries and that the U.S. is perpetuating oppression all over the world. She criticized the labelling by the U.S. government of the IRA as terrorists and Blacks in South Africa being labelled as petty crooks who in their estimation, riot merely for the hell of it. Palestinians , are looked upon as terrorists. Sister Russo pressed the people to question why the U.S. government perpetuates these myths and propagandizes the efforts of oppressed people trying to gain things which are rightfully theirs such as land, and wages.

Sister Russo attacked the governments domestic policies."They say our big problem is infaltion, but Reagan gives money to the single most inflationary department,Defense".The current administration is unfair to women also. Sister Russo stated that the government wants to take all women off welfare and send them to work, but reject the ERA and close all day care services, thus creating a doulbe bind for women. She said it was up to us to save our rights, we are many and strong and power to the people every where. The speech charged up the crowd immediatly.

The next speaker was David Cohen, president of United Electrical Workers Local 264. He has a long record of union activity in helping to organize unions in the Western Mass. area. His union supported the struggle of El Salvador. Mr. Cohen illustrated the way that the government has inflated the defense spending even though it expounds the virtues of cuts. Cohen made a point of explaining how government cuts everything else and how defense seems to be systematically augmented in return. Cohen explained how this trend has come to pass and has been perpetuated since the Vietnam war. Cohen stated that the U.S. support the military in El Salvador because it's haven for U.S. corporations like Texas Instruments.

Cohen excited the crowd with the fact that the KKK and the Nazi Party resurgence commensurate with the killings in Atlanta and lack of real government help in the crisis shows that the government doesn't really care for their main interests lie in other countries supplying cheap labor for the renegade factories and U.S. corporations.

It's in the U.S. best interests to perpetuate the racism and dictatorship in other small countries according to Cohen.

The third and last speaker was Americo Duran a member of the Committee for the Unity of Salvadorean Labor Unions, an organization that is part of the Democratic Revolutionary Front (FDR). He's been living in the U.S. for about eight months. Duran stated that there was much more support from people in the U.S. although it's down played and falsified by the press. Duran, with the help of the interpreter wanted it known that Salvadoreans are peace lovers but have no recours but to fight for what they want at this time.

The people tried to change things by peaceful means but they were denied the right to unionize. They have won political elections in the past, but were jailed, oppressed and bloodied instead. They fight for economical and social reasons that have nothing to do with the U.S.S.R. and Cuba, stressed Duran. There is a grossly unjust

Racist Violence i.e. Political Terror

by C. Zulu Nummo Staff

The ideological hold of racism on whites is one of the key obstacles to developing a true class consciousness.

Racism as a practice and a concept belongs in the garbage can of history, this is especially true now with cultural enlightenment brought by decades of penetrating scholarship and with modern techniques of influencing public opinion.

Instead it is an extremely useful 'psychological' tool at the disposal of the ultra-right and other racist propagandists. Racist hysteria can be whipped up now the same as political hysteria was whipped up against Communists in the 50s.

Secondly racism is a very useful way of copping out and avoiding true class struggle. So long as they can blame their problems on Blacks and we remain unorganized and defenseless against this scapegoating (and the white left remains indecisive and unable to uncan the revolutionary potential of the white working classes) they can and will avoid struggling against the outrages of white workers as well as struggle against the banking/corporate/government power structure.

The Black struggle against the banking/corporate/government power struggle is an unconscious class struggle. No one is calling for the overthrow of the power structure. Blacks are asking for decent housing, equal education, fair consideration in legal matters, equal opportunity to compete (which has been restricted and is still being restricted even with affirmative action), and the ability to pay for these things with our own work. But when we organize ourselves and resources for this task, we are met with police bullets, clubs, tear gas, and jail sentences. Our leaders are killed and our organizations are infiltrated by intelligence agenices. Why?

History Holds the Answer

(The biggest mistake political activists make is in regarding history simply as an academic subject without realizing the practical advantages an historical analysis can give to practical activity.)

The economic and democratic demands listed above are in essence the same demands that blacks have always made on the system. The form is different now in the 80s (and the past 20 years) because now African-Americans are largely an urbanized population and essentially working class, instead of an rural agrarian working class (sharecroppers or peasants).

Instead of a fair price for cotton and other agricultural products, increase of privately owned land units (acreage), fairer credit terms and easier marketing conditions Blacks now require and request higher wages, better working conditions, no discriminatory treatment in hiring and promotion policies, access to better housing etc...

These types of demands are not revoultionary in essence but they are revolutionary when Blacks make them so because if the system granted these demands to Blacks it would lose its cheap, highly mobile and highly exploitable labor force. Entire consumer industries and markets that cater explicitely to Black commodity consumption would be wiped out, or would have to change its production patterns. Scores of manufacturers would be ruined. It would cause more economic chaos than we witness now.

This is almost the same reason for which the South didn't want to free its slaves. Its entire labor force, the source of its very life would disappear.

Secondly, history has demonstrated that the initiative for all social and political movements in this country that have any serious potential for rocking the banking/corporate/government power structure has come from the most politically oppressed and economically exploited class in the country--the Black working class.

History has demonstrated that all successful social and political movements all periods of social and political upheavals have occurred under the impetus or have been sparked by the social, political, and economic struggles of Blacks or the recruitment of Blacks into the class struggles between white workers and the banking/corporate/government power structure. Even the United States government in times of war and the capitalists in times of economic expansion has had to call on the African-american for the manpower, skill courage and strength for that extra necessary decisive thrust.

Whenever Black people rise it is the signal for all oppressed and exploited sectors of this population to throw down the gauntlet of political challenge to the power structure.

The logic and the history of American political repression only dictates that a turn to the right must first and foremost be precipitated by the most brutal repression of African-americans.

Klan and the police terrorism aided by the highest and lowest political offices in this country is the historic form this repression has taken in the past. This same historical form is what we witness today.

Phalangist Collaboration for the Struggle of the Palestinian People

The Imperialist-Zionist-Reactionary conspiracy never ceased from trying to abort the Palestinian Revolution from its Revolutionary contents. One policy is to keep the Palestinian Revolution occupied with secondary battles which will divert the struggle of the Palestinians from its main course.

The Imperialist-Zionist-Reactionary plot is to create "illusionary enemies" for the Palestinian Revolution and bring them into conflict with the Lebanese masses.

The last phase of the Lebanese conflict was manifested in the flagrant collaboration between the Zionists and the "Lebanese Front", the alliance of the militias of the Gemayel and Chamoun clans. It was accompanied by a propaganda campaign in the West orchestrated around the alleged threat of the extermination of "the Christians" in Lebanon. Begin and his consorts didn't hesitate to raze to the ground entire Christian villages of Palestine (for example Ikrit and Kfar Buruim in 1948). Today, they pose as the self-appointed protectors of the Christians in Lebanon. One cannot but ask oneself about the meaning of so much 'generosity' towards the Christian communities in Lebanon. At least it looks incompatible with the Zionist ideology, for Zionism is in essence racism which expresses itself through the rejection of others. In practice it has resulted in the creation of the Jewish state--"as Jewish as Britain is British", as Chaim Weizmann wrote in "Trial and Error" (New York 1949, p.244)-, the spoliation of an entire people and the forced exodus of two million Palestinians, Muslim and Christians.

The "Lebanese Front" Is not Representative

Why then this 'generosity'? First, one has to distinguish between the Christian communities and the "Lebanese Front". If the latter has come to impose itself by force and terror in regions where Christians are predominant, it is however far from representing the majority of the Christians. As a proff, one can cite the communique issued on 20 June 1978 by the inhabitants of Zghorta, a Maronite region in North Lebanon, after the massacre executed by the Phalangists, during which 34 Zghortians were killed, among whom was tony Frangieh, son of the ex-president of the republic, his wife and his 3-year old daughter. The communique denounces the 'Phalangists'" thirst of hegemony". "The massacre of Ehden", it exposes,"is the work of forces which seek to hit essentially the state and its institutions in order to seize upon power and obtain partition in execution of well-known foreign plans." In describing the practices and the expansionist aims of the Phalangists in the Christian regions, the communique recalls one of the slogans written by the Phalangists which proclaims:"we shall continue to soak our emblem in blood till it becomes the flag of Lebanon".

Numerous Christians had to flee from the Lebanese regions which are under fascist domination, in order to escape from such practice. Numerous Christians reject these practices and deny the pretention of Gemayel and Chamoun to preside over the destinies of the Christian communities in Lebanon. Numerous Christians, after all, are conscious that the diktats of the "Lebanese Front" come in fact from Tel Aviv, and not only aim to plunge Lebanon in a bloodbath, but equally harm the very interests of the Christians of Lebanon, and the Arab nation.

In the Pay of Tel-Aviv

Actually, the very survival of Lebanon, the integrity of its territory and its people is at stake. This means that it is an urgent necessity for the country to protect itself against the exclusivism of the Gemayel and Chamoun feudal war lords and to combat their alliance with Israel. It is up to the Christians in particular, to be at the vanguard of this national struggle in order to expose the real plot which is weaved against Lebanon, under the cover of 'humanitarian preoccupations' towards them. Just to recall in this context Begin's statement according to which "Israel won't stand passively and watch the massacre of the Christians in Lebanon."

The new explosion of the situation in Lebanon, bringing into conflict the Gemayel-Chamoun militias and the Arab Peace Keeping Forces coincides strangely with the launching of separate negotiations, which aim at a substitute 'solution' for the Camp Dav id Conspiracy. Israel and the U.S. are determined to make of Lebanon the very ground where this substitute is to be concreticised, with the tacit complicity of the Egyptian regime, and the active one of the agents of the "Lebanese Front". The U.S.-Zionist plan forsees the totasl dismemberment of Lebanon and consequently the creation of a Maronite mini-state and the implantation of the Palestinians in Lebanon.

No need to say--as the PLO has not ceased to affirm--that the Palestinian totally reject any substitute homeland. Indispensable for the implantation plot is the reinforcement of the Gemayel and Chamoun clans which are more and more isolated on the Lebanese and Arab level, and rejected by the Christian masses. Thus we can understand the thinly veiled Zionist threats of direct intervention in Lebanon; not to "save" the Christians, but to come to the help of their agents.

What matters to the protagonists of the Jewish state, is not the interests of the Christian masses, but their own advantage in having a puppet force at their disposal, ready to collaborate for the realization of the U.S.-Zionist plan. The "Lebanese Front" is the enemy of the Lebanese people and the Lebanese Christians even before being that of the Palestinians.

THE ALTERNATIVE

Already at a time, when the Lebanese civil war raged at its worst, numerous Christian organizations and personalities in Lebanon united in September 1976 , to redeem the mode of action capable of countering the sectarian propaganda and the terror of the Gemayel and Chamoun clans and their alliance with the Zionist entity.

Among these groups are: the Gathering of the Committed Christians, the National Gathering of the Zghortians, the Christian Gathering of the Mountains and the Plains of Chouf etc; also personalities such as Michel Ghoraib (lawyer), Clovis Maksoud (author), Albert Mansour (deputy of Akkar), Samir Frangieh (journalist) etc.

During the year 1978, the Gathring of Democratic Christians was created whose objective is to prevent the partition of Lebanon and to establish a national and democratic regime, and to preserve the Arabism of Lebanon. Above all, the Gathring of Democratic Christians proposes itself as a platform which embodies the true interests of the Christian masses in Lebanon, who refuse the political monopoly and the fascist project of the "Lebanese Front". It affirms the necessity to combat racism in all its forms, among it Zionism, and to support effectively the Palestinian people in their struggle to obtain their inalienable rights for self-determination.

Eleven Puerto Ricans were arrested in Evanston,Illinois and charged with being members of the FALN. The eleven have refused to recognize the jurisdiciton of U.S. courts over the Puerto Rican Independence Movement, and demanded that they be treated as Prisoners of War, in accordance with the Geneva Convention of 1949. Puerto Rico's struggle against colonialism is recognized by the United Nations, and freedom fighters in that struggle are entitled to be treated as Prisoners of War under international law. All the 11 prisoners are being held by the U.S. government under common criminal charges, an attempt to depoliticize and discredit the Puerto Rican Independence Movement.

Linda Justiniano, spokesperson for the Puerto Rican Socialist League spoke at U-Mass on the subject of the 11 Prisoners of War. Nummo will feature in its next issue an account of this conference.

February 10,1981-the day of their sentencing.
STATEMENT OF THE ELEVEN

"Those who dare to fight and demand with arms the independence of Puerto Rico shall be treated with the full weight of the law upon them.

This is the message than yanki imperialism under the robes of a judge has practiced against the Puerto Rican revolutionary movement.

Our answer to this practice has been and will be resistance, disobedience and renunciation of the false processes against us. This so called trial where the public prosecutor is the judge and the judge is the public prosecutor, is nothing more than a sign of arrogance, and audacity that extends beyond the fangs of the imperialist beast.

We recognize its audacity and its arrogance. This trial is not necessary to prove it. What this new sedition trial against the armed revolutionary movement has proven is that yanki imperialism has had to admit the threat that the Puerto Rican armed clandestine movement represents for them in Puerto Rico as well as in their own territory.

Today, ten months after our capture, something more important has occured which goes beyond the blow that is inherent in a capture: the clandestine movement has accelerated the process of credib ility before the eyes of the Puerto Rican people. Its authenticity, which ten months ago, was in doubt is no longer. This process of authenticity is irreversib le, and can no longer be over looked. In this manner, what at one level has been a defeat, has been converted into a victory at another level.

The right wingers and colonialists can no longer argue that it is Russian or Cuban agents who are responsible for our actions. Also, the enigmatic doubt of some sectors of the left no longer exists, or has at least been minimized.

The psychological factor of certainty is in our favor.

Understanding this, we make an even greater committment to our struggle. What matters is not the years we serve in prison, but the growth and continuity of our struggle.

We know that the enemy does, and will do everything possible to destroy the continuity of our struggle. today repression is unleashed mainly against the clandestine movement and the organizations that support it. From the fabrication of charges, to the grand jury, to our physical extermination, everything is designed to eliminate the threat. But this repression also extends to all independent sectors, the working class, and the student movement. We therefore need the unity of these forces to wage the battle. For this reason, we call for the formation of a Revolutionary Block to continue the process of unity that the clandestine groups have achieved. Unity also in the concept of Puerto Ricaness.

This is the crucial step in the creation of a strong national liberation front.

Here as in Puerto Rico, we fight as Puerto Ricans. Concepts like: "Neoricans or newricans" only create confusion and divisions that benefit the enemy.

Puerto Ricans in Puerto Rico and the U.S. are integral components of the Puerto Ricar nation. When we state that we represent the Puerto Rican conscience in arms, it is because we do.

Freedom is the acknowledgement of our necessity. In order to obtain freedom, it is necessary to recognize that Vieques is Puerto Rico; it is necessary to acknowledge that Puerto Ricans in the U.S. are a people in exile; it is necessary to acknowledge that Puerto Rico is a country invaded by enemy forces. It is a people under the colonial boot of yanqui imperialism.

In the spirit of the glorious dates of the combative students in the spirit of March 4th and March 11th, we call for unity of forces we also send warmest greetings and our revolutionary love for that great demonstration in our support on Feb. 3, 1981.

No one can detain our decision. Free Puerto Rico or death!

A Review of the 10th Annual Black Musicians Conference

KEEPING BLACK MUSIC ALIVE

F.C. Wyse
Donna Davis Nummo Staff

Jazz: Its Social and Economic Impact

As part of the Black Musicians Conference a panel discussion on jazz music was held last tuesday evening. the event took place in the Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union Building. Illustrious jazz musicians and aficionados such as Max Roach and Benjamin Playthill attended the event. The panel discussion consisted of the readings of papers and ad-lib comments by the aforementioned individuals.

The most entertaining speaker of the evening was Mr. Benjamin Playthill. His paper addressed the issue of the commercial survival of jazz music. Playthill stated that, "jazz music is based on 'blues' and is perhaps 'the great American contribution to the fine arts."

Playthill then outlined in detail the exploitation of many Black music forms of jazz. He also discussed how the mass media plays an important role in today's society. Mass media is a private owned industry. That is, the control of mass forms of communications is in the hands of a very few people.

Those people are businessmen whose main objective is to make money. Therefore in the quest for the almighty dollar "cultural vlaues are subordinate to commerical values."

As an example of this cultural decadence Playthill listed three popular forms of mass media: primetime television, public television and radio. Prime-time TV's programming is "superficial " and ignores all classic art forms (i.e. ballet, symphony, etc.) Public TV is somewhat more enlightening but it's emphasis is on "Euro-American culture" and if jazz music is shown it is "divorced from its African roots."

New York City is said to be "the jazz capital of the world" but it has no radio station that is totally devoted to the playing of jazz music.

Playthill then assigned all music to two broad categories: passive and active. Passive music does not require the full use of one's cognitive power, therefore money-making stations program passive music--Jazz music is obviously at the other end of the spectrum. It also requires a more educated audience to really appreciate it.

From this discussion it can be concluded that jazz music will cease to exist if it is treated like a popular art form. It needs its own forum and the ongoing dedication of its devotees. Activities such as the Black Musicians Conference are instrumental in keeping particular black music forms alive.

The topic was addressed by each of the panel members separately, each approaching the issue from a different perspective but in the end weaving together to formulate a consensus which stated that Jazz has suffered the most violent abuse and repression of any art form in this land, bar none. They blamed the wealthy White financiers who control the media as the key obstacle to Jazz's national acceptance, but cited specifically the nature of our government-which forbids Art the right to a democratic process of development-as the root of the ceuse.

Dr. Frecerick Tillis addressed the issue of Jazz as a "serious" music and cited definitions from various dictionaries, some of which specifically disregard Jazz as a serious art form. Quoting from one source Tillis added, "If 'Classical' music is that which is 'lasting' complex in harmonic, rhythmic structure as opposed to 'popular music' ", then by this very definition, Jazz is a 'classical' music. the term Jazz was then ousted as they agreed on the term "Black Classical" music, for "Jazz". Jazz, as we know it, refers to the act of sexual intercourse (the music having its first appearance in brothels of New Orleans) and not the wealth of culture that produces this art form.

Tillis said the U.S. is blind to its own wealth of creative art and rather than explore it they exploit it keeping those who deserve credit silent, denying them the democratic process the constitution promises. Instead they support merchant musicians who produce a washed-out, half Jazz suitable to a middle-class palate.

J.R. Mitchell elaborated on the Black music industry, saying that Black music could compete if it only had more sway over the media. "We can make a great record," he said, "but we haven't got the White man's budget to distribute the finished product." "This is why Black musicians die hungry and anonymous," he said, "and those who do make it have to sell out and cheapen the product for 'pop' consumption."

Playthell Benjamin spoke on the gravity of Reagan's cutbacks in the humanities, suggesting that this very act would produce the "killers" the new office wants. "This is the only thing that separates us from animals", he continued, "and this office wants to take it away' Isn't any one suspicious of this",he asked. He spoke of the inner city plague of ignorance and how it must be stopped immediately. He also indicted the "bourgeous Blacks" who have sold out their culture, accusing them of "superficial lip service" to their people.

Max Roach stood and addressed a number of questions including reform in the 80's, citing drugs as the primary hinderance to resolving social ills. He spoke solemnly of his own involvement with heroin and his subsequent "fortunate" victory, recalling how drugs have left "mere hollow shells"of his friends, "men whose creative genius this world will never again see." He warned young people to be careful so that the world doens't slip through their fingers to the point of no recovery, reminding the audience that liberites can be maintained but never regained

Keynote Address

The keynote address of the BMC was delivered at Amherst College by Oscar Brown, Jr., singer, composer, educator who recently finished a 13 episode PBS series entitled "From Jumpstreet," a series dedicated to a progressive understanding of Black Americans and their unique contributions to our culture.

Brown offered first a summary history of the Black experience in the New World citing the many instances of Black influence in language, art and social awareness that have so far been taken for granted. It brought on a radical change in Western thought, he explained, and it threatened 300 years of complacency-hence the violent oppostion."

"It was the sheer power of the music, he continued, "how it grabbed the audience and demanded that they participate. And it was welcomed with open arms as it took the people out of their chairs--as the Western tradition forbid--and involved the audience, allowing them a role in the performance, killing the history of stifling passivity." "It swept the world, for that matter," he said, for they were doing the Cakewalk in Paris and playing rags on bagpipes in Scotland."

He explained how Joplin's "Maple Leaf Rag" became the world's first "million seller." Brown suggested that the true achievement of Black music lay not in what the world did for it, but in despite of everything done against it." He accused the music industry's primary interest in economics as the major factor in the halt of musical progress The cost-benefit analysis is yet another leash "that keeps people within definable, predictable roles." Himself a victim of the second rate contracts that swindled so many Black performers he had little to say about the future good of America but addressed all listeners of music in the spirit of the great Booker T. Washington when he said there was a time and a place for silly nonsense music but cited the evils of music listening on a sensual plain as it would eventually dull our sense of reality and now we must unite to solve the many social ills that plague this land and use serious music to attain this end."

He accused the media of butchering the minds of children and challenged the elders to stand steadfast against this downpour of mercenary nonsense," this panacea to the mounting social ills."

The New Black Eagles/ Max Roach Quartet

This concert, part of the 10th Annual Black Musicians conference, was a benefit performance for the Fletcher Henderson Memorial Scholarship Fund. Conceived by Max Roach, this program hopes to gather talented young musicians who whould other wise be unable to attend the University.

The New Black Eagles, a seven piece Boston-based group, opened the show with selections of 20th Centrury New Orleans, music, revitalizing such classic compositions as Jelly Roll Morton's "Kansas City Stomp," Duke Ellington's 1927 hit, "The Mooch," and Louis Armstrong's lesser known "Skeleton In the Closet."

On clarinet and soprano saxophone, Stan McDonald soared through the register-and then some- in the style of the great Sydney Bechet, taking daring solos which were as melodic and beautiful as they were technical. On cornet, the band leader, Tony Pringle, explored every variation in tone from soft mute to raunch and cry baby and everything in between.

Stan Vincent played a fine trombone, taking many interesting, upbeat solos and Eli Newberger's tuba solos were as brilliant-and often humorous- as his stage antics.

The pianist, Bob Pilsner, looking like Brahms (before he had thought twice about Clara Schumann) took solos that were not nearly as daring as his exaggerated technique made them appear. Nor were they audible for though it was a concert grand it simply didn't project throughout the vast FAC.

They closed their short set with "Sweetie Dear,"an up tempo composition by Sidney Bechet when his band was in residence at the Savoy.

After a brief intermission Dr. Frederick Tillis took the stage to award Max Roach a plaque from the University community expression their gratitude for his work in the field of Black Studies.

On stage alone, Roach announced that his first solo piece of the evening, "South Africa God Damn," would be dedicated to the slain children in Atlanta, Georgia. The piece, recorded originally by Archie Shepp in Paris, France, was a haunting dirge which played violently against a foreboding, droning bass drum and high hat.

Roach then introduced his band which featured Cecil Bridgewater on trumpet, Calvin Hill on bass and Odeaon Pope on tenor saxophone.

The ensemble opened with a Bridgewater composition entitled, "Chattahootchie Red," which displayed their flawless unison work and each man's virtuosity. Bridgewater's solo was melodic with thoughtful variations on his own theme while Pope's tenor solo was powerful and tense with dissonance set against Roach's lightning cymbal work. He kept time with the high-hats and mesmerized with individual stick work on drums and cymbels, a trademark of Roach's, which I first learned from his "56 at Basin Street" album with the original Max Roach Quartet with Ritchie Powell, Bud's younger brother who died a tragic early death with Clifford Brown in a car crash.

Calvin Hill and Odeaon Pope played a duo to the legendary Clifford Brown entitled, "I Remember Clifford".

Roach treated the audience to a solo encore, a tribute to count Basie's drummer, Jonathan Samuel David Jones, a man whose drum styles, as Roach put it, "revolutionized percussion work."

With just a high hat, two sticks and one foot Roach mesmerized the audience with 3 minutes of variation in high hat technique. He delivered a brief closing address thanking all who made possible the 10th Annual Black Musicians Conference and took his leave to thunderous applause.

Marion Brown/ Dave Burrell Saxophone/Piano Duo

This performance, the opening act of the week-long Black Musicians Conference, had originally billed Hilton Ruiz on piano but, unable to make a show, was replaced at the last minute by Dave Burrell, Brown's long-time friend who toured Japan with him in 1980.

After a brief address by Charles Greenlee they took the stage, opening with a slow ballad featuring Brown's own unique style of improvisation, tapping all the possibilities of his horn from sweet and sensual melodic to the primitive guttoral in the true African instrumental tradition.

His stage presence was subdued and introspective and when deep in this ethereal state he bore none of the affectations of stage performer but rather was crafting a complex thematic structure only, a sort of gentle giant.

Burrell's piano work was another thing altogether. He is from the more traditional and tonal stride and rag Black Calssical vein. It was a strange meeting of two ages of music. Burrell's unerring stride left hand and delicate melodic right coupled with Brown's mesmerizing solos weaving in and out of tonality provided a condensed history of the 20th century Black experience, a whirlwind cultural tour.

Brown closed the evening with an eloquent address thanking all the many organizations who made possible another successful Black Musician's Conference.

Oscar Brown Jr. An Evening of Song and Storytelling

Before an audience of 150 people, Oscar Brown, Jr. delivered an evening of song and folklore accompanied by Floyd Morris on piano. this 3 hour performance of brilliant wit ranged from risque minstrel to classic blues and folklore straight from the African tribal master-raconteur tradition. The show was a jorney through a culture embracing the full rich history of Black entertainment as it developed through the years. His stage presence was awesome as he led the audience in and out of emotional poles with his carefully crafted tales. Using the endless possibilities of the "trickster" persona--a classic Africa theme--he tapped the fears of the human experience forcing us to see our selves in him as he donned the various public masks in the style of mime poet.

There were no sacred cows. He poked at every possible variation on deceit and treachery, closing each tale with a clever twist that offered a kind and genuine moral to each human flaw. His was an argument for brotherhood and he called on the human experience as the first and only solution.

In short, it was a daring performance without the use of props save for his outrageous facial controtions and the power of truth as delivered by a truly soulful, dedicated entertainer. He answered the call for three encore performances taking humble bows and sharing the applause with his pianist who is a long-time friend from his hometown of Chicago.

Suzy Wong and Bruce Lee

by Jane Nakagawa

To the average American, a certain mystique surrounds every Chinese. Due to the often inaccurate account of Asians and their contributions to the history of this land, the Chinese people have long been met with misunderstandings and at best, curiosity. Compounded by this historical misrepresentation, age old stereotypes and racism have influenced most into conjuring up grossly misconstrued images of a people upon the mention of the word, "Oriental". We are all too familiar with the overabundance of stereotypes that Hollywood moneymakers have turned out; the Irrisistably erotic Suzy Wong...wild and powerful Bruce Lee who glorifies a kind of action and violence hardly existing in any society anywhere...and the mysteriously cunning Charlie Chan, most memorable for his fortune cookie jargon.

As a refreshing and certainly most welcome change from all of this, the movie From Spikes to Spindles will be shown at Smith College on May 4th at 7:00 pm in Hillyer 117. From Spikes to Spindles accurately and sensitively portrays the realities of the Chinese people in this country, particularly the working people. Beginning at the turn of the century, the film asks these questions: Why did 50,000 Chinese leave their home in search of gold in California? What became of their lives? Why couldn't they go back? The link from the Initial immigrations to those of today is the pursuit of happiness, more money, and the guarantee of a job. Politically impotent, they take jobs at the base of the economy and live in communities that they do not control. The realities of Chinatowns are unveiled; the people are seen in conflict with the established leadership of the community, and the supposedly docile Chinatown is seen in an uproar, protesting discrimination, police beatings, closing hospitals, sub-standard, overcrowded housing.

From Spikes to Spindles will be co-sponsored by the Third World Moving Images Project of the Department of Afro-American Studies at Smith, and the Smith Asian Students' Association. In addition to this film, Bush Mama (produced/directed by Harile Gerima), a movie about the struggles of one Black woman in urban America, will be shown. We are honored to be able to have Christine Choy, producer/director of From Spikes to Spindles, as the evening's guest filmmaker. Ms. Choy, who presently works with the Third World Newsreel in New York City, will be available to answer any questions people may have. This even should be both a learning and enjoyable experience for all those who attend.

I Would Like to be a Black Woman

by Wanda Lai

"I would like to be a black woman to see how it is!"

It was said out in a very clear, crisp tone of voice from one of my classmates in a Woman Studies class. She is white. The manner in which she made the statement suggested an interesting or new exciting game. Maybe that statement was out of sincerity; or maybe it was from curiosity or simply a lack of understanding of the whole matter. After all, it was not the first time I have heard such a statement.

A female minority in this society faces not only sexism but also racism. It is not a game that anyone would want to play, especially in this America. If the woman who made the statement were black, she would be sorry. Being a minority woman means life-time struggle. Of course to white people who can never quite understand what they are talking about, it doesn't really matter; they can never be minorities in this country anyway.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not trying to imply that it is unfortunate to be non-white. I am Chinese and proud.

Simply more and more people should be aware of what they say and be sensitive to the consequences.

the U.S. The governor's powers consisted of:

1) Comanding the military
2) Grant Amnesties
3) Appointing of all funtionaries under his law
4) The power to veto
5) Proclaim the martial law, etc.

It was also during this act where the U.S. started its stronghold on the economy of Puerto Rico by regulating the commerce on a "provisional" basis by imposing a 15 percent tax on all imports and exports on Puerto Rico. Through this act also the U.S. citizenship was "offered" (imposed in 1915) on the Puerto Rican people.

We must make clear that the governors ruling in Puerto Rico until 1946 all were Americans. This was then followed by the Jones Act which anchored the U.S. power in Puerto Rico much further. Mr. Rosado expressed," We have tried to obtain our independence through this colonialist system, and history made it clear. We cannot gain our independence through this system; we cannot have a peaceful election for we will not acknowledge this system as a tool used by our people, a representation of the peopies will". The electoral system on the Island was imposed by the U.S., for the benefit of the U.S. government that is enhancing the exploitation and repression of the Puerto Rican people.

His ending statement was," the Puerto Rican people have been forced to assume the armed struggle position and will not be appeased. The Puerto Rican Revolution will Succeed!"

VIVA PUERTO RICO LIBRE!

The Latin American week continues with a special show dedicated to the Latin American struggles for liberation. The show will be aired today Monday April 27 on Concepto Latino at 6 to 10 P.M. in WMUA 91.1 FM.

A staggering 80 percent lack housing in the country side. Duran said that their poverty has lot to do with alliences of the governing Junta, and their 50 years of dictatorship. Duran made a point of noting the U.S.A. gives constent support to the Junta. Through his fiery speech the protesters listened intently and cheered when Duran said, " It is better to die fighting, victory will be ours".

This march and it's speakers brought out many thought provoking issues concerning the motives and actions of the government and it's agencies. The main idea seemd to be to learn as much as possible about the issues so that propaganda won't be effective and falsified reports can be disregarded for what they are. Let us hope that in the end the people will acknowledge wrongs and unify in some way to rectify them. Let us also hope that "our" government finds it conscence,.....if it still exists.

I Used to be a Negro

I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember when I was on the (PVTA) bus talking real loud and you said to your friend, look at that brother he's acting just like a damn Negro
I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember that time when I was at Earls trial, watching a racist judge give him a from now on!
because he was too innocent, to be found..Not guilty!
Where you there?, of course I was there
Why I even partied with the Negroes that committed the crime...As a matter of fact if they came back to town we'd still be hanging around.
Those were the good old days.
I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember my feelings when I heard that Seta Ramperstad had been killed in a motel, I was so shocked I couldn't react..... I had the same reaction when they half murdered Jill and when they lynched Jose.
Yea, I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before!
Remember when I was outside the X acting real absurd, and you were afraid to walk by because I had that crazy look in my eye. You remember that, Don't you?
I used to be a Negro and I know you've seen me before
Remembeer when I used to blast my radio in your ears when you were trying to study. I thought that was real funny....I was really sick
I heard you say to your girlfriend, what's wrong with that brother? Has his love of self and kind come to an end?
I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember me when I was coming out of Hangar 1 talking a whole lot of non-sense to anybody that would listen. I was dressed up like Gene Autry and my woman looked like Dale Evans without a horse.
Yea, I remember that night!
You said a half hour goodbye to everyone and got into a car that you both couldn't pay for.
You're right my woman was on the pancake box too.
I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember that night when my head was full of curls and waves I thought I was the whitest Negro in Amherst, a real H.N.I.C.(Head Negro In Charge)
Remember that same night when I cursed you out in the Drake because Philly made a mistake, they kept the Doctor in too long
Remember when I used to disrespect you all over the campus and you would disrespect me all over the street?
I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember when I was so filled with self-hatred, I tried to destroy everything that didn't destroy me first!
Remember that time when I was in class with Dr. Bob Daniels, acting like a mongrel of unknown origin, he actually had to put a straigtner on me, to save me from my own insanity. (Thank you Professor Daniels)
Yes, I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember that time when I had to go to the infirmary to stay for two weeks The doctor dignosed my case as acute nervousness due to repressed desire. I had leprosy of the mind (white mindeness). I wanted the best of both worlds
I used to be a Negro and you've seen me before
Remember when I used to bust my ass to show disrespect to anyone who was trying to be nice to me. Especially you!
Yes, yes, yes, yes.
I used to be Negro. And you've seen me before, but something has changed
I'm Well Now!

CAR SMASH—Vahan Hanedanian of Beta Kappa Phi fraternity opened Greek Week with a smash yesterday outside the fraternity. The Vega, which was obtained from a local junk yard, sustained major injuries to its windshield, hood, fenders, and roof. Hanedanian sustained a minor cut when glass from the read window hit his hand. He was not hospitalized.

Singer talks of God; kicks off memorial week

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

Isaac Bashevis Singer, novelist and winner of the 1978 Nobel prize for literature, spoke in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium before a 300 person audience last night giving the audience his personal concept of religion and reading from his novel Shosha.

Singer kicked off the National Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust, established by an act of Congress in 1980. The University of Massachusetts planned for Singer and other events this week, said emcee Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Loren Baritz.

Shosha is a love story that occurs in a Warsaw ghetto of Poland during the 1930's and 40's. The novel focuses on the destruction of a culture, Baritz said.

Singer read chapter 14 from the novel with the expression, wit and sadness he originally intended to convey with his writing.

Immediately following his reading, Singer gave a speech on "Personal Concept of Religion."

"You can read Shosha anytime, but this is from unpublished work," he said of his speech.

"I fashioned him to suit my tastes, and there are many questions present," he said. "I do not see God as a product of my imagination."

"My God is the most dynamic with infinite wisdom," he said.

Kabala, a mystical method of interpretation of the old testament from the 7th to 18th centuries by rabbis were holy souls of a divine love, Singer said.

"Every artist is an experimenter. Every (celestial) star is an art experimentation. True art is not chaotic. God is not chaotic," Singer said.

Like an artist, "God is pleased by achievement, but grieved by mistake," he said.

"He is not only the painter, but he must provide the canvas," Singer said.

Singer mentioned the ten commandmants.

The ten commandments are "true justice and beauty and I can not imagine a religion on another principle," he said.

"I want to believe in free will. The Torah is a guide book to follow our role to the best of our ability. Man by nature is a creator, an inventor. Man is a creation of God," he said.

A brief question and answer period followed Singer's lecture.

A student asked, "Why do you write."

"And let me answer you in Yiddish. Why shouldn't I?" Singer said.

"It is a great privilege to know hundreds of thousand will read you. As long as I can hold a pen and see I'll continue to write," he said.

Tuition hike leaves students pessimistic

A recent Collegian poll indicates that the 27 percent tuition increase for the University of Massachusetts, approved by the Board of Regents last Friday, has generally left UMass students with negative outlooks on the future of education.

Michael Zalkin, a graduate student in economics and one of 20 students interviewed expressed his concern in this way; "I think it's part of an attack on the working class. It goes part and parcel with the new Right, and is something the people at the University should organize against. Education is a right, not something to be purchased."

Zalkin's theme was voiced by other students against the tuition hikes. "It's a shame that the increase will act as a type if de facto education," said Joel Mode, a graduating senior.

"Less and less minority and lower class students will be coming here. Along with that, education will be going down. It seems to be going along with everything else in the country," Mode said.

Sophomore Beth Robinson, recognized the economic forces behind the increases. "It obviously went up for a reason—inflation. It's all part of the economy; that's going to hurt a lot of students."

A number of students felt that the economic blow of the tuition increases will be intensified because of Reagan's proposed financial aid cuts.

Said Larry Gallant: "As far as tuition goes, in a sense it's not going to matter. If Reagan's budget goes through, education is not going to mean an awful lot. When programs are cut and money is funneled into defense and hard sciences, we'll have the power to rule the world with money but without the wisdom and knowledge needed to do it efficiently."

Freshman Ralph Titone, said the raise in tuition is "unfair, basically because along with it is Reagan's cuts in financial aid. That's going to compound the problem. It's just going to make it a lot easier for the affluent to go to school."

Ronni Dunn, a sophomore Spanish and psychology major, expressed perhaps the most basic and prevailing attitude: "I think it stinks and is unfair. If the government took money from more appropriate places, the wouldn't be taking it from state schools."

The following shows current and future tuition rates, with increases included. The new tuition rates were approved Friday.

Undergraduate	Current semester	Fall 1981	Spring 1982
Resident	$375	$439	$513
Non-resident	$1375	$1675	$1675

Spring concert set for May 17

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

Yes Virginia, there is going to be a spring concert.

UMass Program Council officials announced last night that May 17 will be the date for this year's Community Day, and an announcement of a complete talent package will be given within 24 hours.

The UPC Executive Committee members met last Friday night to determine if they would go ahead with the show and voted unanimously in favor of it.

"We've been under a lot of pressure, and there was the possibility of not having a show," said Frank Gironda, talent coordinator for UPC

UPC has asked three different bands, whose names UPC would not disclose, to play at the concert. The availability of those bands, as well as the fact that Malcolm X Day falls on May 16, were the council's reasons for choosing May 17 for the concert, Gironda said.

"We're really optimistic. We're going to make it the best event possible," Gironda said.

Tickets for UMass students with valid student I.D. cards will be free, and may be available as early as Friday, Gironda said.

Tickets for others in the Five College community, including students, faculty and staff members, will be for sale. Prices and sale locations will be announced. Tickets for UMass alumni will be sold at the concert entrance on a first come, first serve basis.

Supreme Court issues abortion decision

WASHINGTON — States may outlaw abortions performed outside hospitals on women more than three months pregnant, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

The decision was a significant victory for the "pro-life" or anti-abortion forces in the heated legal and political battle sparked by the Supreme Court's 1973 ruling that legalized most abortions.

Without waiting to conduct oral arguments or to write an opinion, the court voted 6-3 to uphold an Indiana law that makes it a felony for a doctor to perform an abortion, other than a first-trimester one, away from a hospital.

A doctor who runs a Gary, Ind., abortion clinic and three women identified in court records only by fictitious names sought to block enforcement of the law.

In separate action yesterday, the court left intact Patricia Hearst Shaw's 1976 bank robbery conviction, turning away arguments that famed trial lawyer F. Lee Bailey gave her "insufficient" legal help.

The justices refused to consider ruling that defense lawyers always fail to provide adequate legal help when they contract for the exclusive rights to write a book about a trial before it begins.

Mrs. Shaw, now represented by San Francisco lawyer George Martinez, asked the justices to rule that F. Lee Bailey's involvement in an exclusive publishing contract about her case automatically deprived her of a fair trial.

Yesterday's denial, however, does not end Mrs. Shaw's attempt to overturn her bank robbery conviction. Her new lawyer now will have a chance to convince a federal judge that Bailey's conduct "adversely affected" Mrs. Shaw's chance of acquittal.

The daughter of newspaper publisher William Randolph Hearst and his wife, Catherine, Mrs. Shaw was convicted of participating in the 1974 armed robbery of a San Francisco bank.

In other matters, the court:

—Agreed to decide whether a list of street addresses compiled by government census takers falls under the federal Freedom of Information Act.

The court's ruling will resolve one part of a dispute between the Census Bureau and Essex County, N.J., and may play a role in several other communities' challenges to the 1980 census count.

—Left intact a ruling in an Ohio case that states can be ordered to enforce a clean air program imposed by the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

—Agreed to study the constitutionality of two laws aimed at helping workers put out of work when the Rock Island railroad ceased operations in 1979.

—Agreed to decide in a Texas case whether states may require mothers to file paternity suits aimed at collecting child-support payments from asserted fathers before the children reach their first birthday.

—And, by refusing to consider tearing up a couple of traffic tickets, passed up the chance to establish a constitutional right to drive a Sherman tank through the streets of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Reagan prepares budget for Congress tonight

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, readying his return to public life, yesterday fine-tuned his speech to Congress, preparing to tell the nation that "the day of decision is near" for his economic program of tax and budget cuts.

He worked on the speech yesterday morning at the presidential retreat in Camp David, Md., before returning to the White House in the afternoon to meet with his chief speechwriter.

Entering the executive mansion after the 30-minute flight home aboard a U.S. Marine Corps helicopter, the president carried a thin briefcase bearing a red tag. He uttered a one-word response to a shouted question about how he felt, four weeks after he was shot in an attempt on his life: "Good."

The president's speech to a joint session of the House and Senate at 9 p.m. EDT today is intended to apply increased pressure on Congress, which returned yesterday from the two-week Easter recess and turned to important votes on the budget and tax proposals.

By the end of the week, the full House is likely to take up the budget. The House Budget Committee approved a $714.5 billion budget, and Rep. Delbert L. Latta, R-Ohio, and Rep. Phil Gramm, a conservative Texas Democrat, have proposed a $689 billion alternative that the president is likely to endorse.

The president is also likely to make a personal reference to the assassination attempt, said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes.

The address, which is expected to last no longer than 15 minutes, will be the president's first public appearance since he was wounded in the shooting March 30.

Soviet Union warned that "detente is all but dead"

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Much of the first 100 days of the Reagan administration's foreign policy was spent relentlessly driving home one simple message to the Soviet Union:

Detente is all but dead, and unless Russia stopped "fishing in troubled waters," a new cold war was sure to replace it.

Now the administration appears confident that the Soviets have gotten the message, and it is pausing to see if they will moderate their behavior. Senior officials see hopeful signs, reflected in the diminishing Soviet threat to Poland and a shutdown of arms smuggling to El Salvador rebels.

For his part, President Reagan lifted the grain embargo against the Soviets and his top foreign policy advisers have generally muted their criticism of the Soviet Union. The administration also is preparing to enter negotiations to restrict nuclear missile deployment in Europe.

While the White House declined to characterize Friday's decision to lift the 15-month-old grain embargo as a reward to the Soviets for better behavior, it was certain to be interpreted that way around the world.

Coming up is a decision on a possible summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet Premier Leonid Brezhnev, which Brezhnev wants, and whether to negotiate a new arms limitation treaty to replace the never-ratified SALT II treaty.

"There certainly is an obvious coincidence of events here that makes it easier for negotiations to proceed," said one high State Department official, referring to overall relations. He didn't want to be identified.

Court rules Agnew broke trust, must pay state for kickbacks

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew accepted kickbacks from engineers while he was governor of Maryland and must pay the state $248,735 for violating the public trust, a circuit judge ruled yesterday.

"There is no question that Mr. Agnew violated his public trust," said Judge Bruce Williams.

The judge said evidence presented at a civil trial proved that in 1967 and 1968 Agnew was engaged in an unlawful relationship with two associates, I.H. "Bud" Hammerman and Jerome Wolff, to solicit kickbacks from consulting engineers who were awarded highway contracts.

The evidence also showed that Agnew accepted money directly from two engineers, Lester Matz and Allen Green, the judge said.

Belfast bomb kills policeman; Bobby Sands inspires protest

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — A booby-trap bomb planted in a hijacked truck exploded in Belfast yesterday killing one policeman and injuring three others. The bombing, claimed in the name of the Irish National Liberation Army, followed the arrest of 20 prominent supporters of jailed hunger striker Bobby Sands.

Sands, 27, a convicted Irish Republican Army guerrilla recently elected to British Parliament, was reported drifting nearer to death on the 58th day of his fast at Maze Prison.

Northern Ireland's security chiefs canceled all police leave as the British province prepared for widespread violence if Sands dies.

Gerald Ford predicts Congress will approve Reagan's program

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—Former President Gerald R. Ford predicted yesterday that Congress likely will approve most of President Reagan's economic program.

"My best estimate is Reagan will probably get 75 to 80 percent of what he asked for," Ford said as he toured the new Ford Presidential Library on the campus of the University of Michigan, where he was a graduate in 1935.

Controversial ambassador to join Carnegie Endowment

WASHINGTON—Robert E. White, the career American ambassador who claimed President Reagan fired him for his views, is joining the Carnegie Endowment on Friday.

White was recalled in February from El Salvador. In congressional testimony, he questioned the administration's decision to send arms to the ruling junta and whether it was actively investigating the murder of three Catholic nuns and a church worker.

First American film festival will present 5 movies in China

WASHINGTON—The first American film festival in the People's Republic of China will open May 6, the U.S. International Communication Agency announced yesterday.

Five American movies will be shown in a total of five cities, including Peking. The films are: "The Black Stallion," "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," "Shane," "Singin' in the Rain," and "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner."

A Chinese film festival will be held in the United States this autumn.

A U.S. film delegation, including actress Cyd Charisse, will attend the American festival in China.

Evidence ends in Kelly trial; jury could get case tomorrow

BOSTON — Evidence in the extortion trial of ex-Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. concluded yesterday with testimony by a Worcester lawyer that his client did not tell him what she told the jury.

Judge Joseph L. Tauro, who has ruled repeatedly against the prosecution in proceedings that commenced March 19, said the jury might get the case by tomorrow noon, following arguments.

Funeral services held for accident victims

Funeral services were scheduled for this morning for George M. Rich of Provincetown, a University of Massachusetts junior who was killed in an automobile accident Sunday morning.

Rich, 20 an economics major of Washington Tower, in the Southwest Residential Area is survived by his mother sister Sandra, and a brother, Craig, of Provincetown, and a brother, Philip, of Cranston, R.I.

A memorial service will be held by friends of Rich tomorrow at 7 p.m. in the Chabad House, 30 N. Hadley Road.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be sent to the George M. Rich Hockey fund, P.O. Box 207 Provincetown, Mass., 02657.

Funeral services for Jeffrey W. Barcomb, 23, also killed in the accident, will be held tomorrow at 7 p.m. at the First Parish Church in Cohasset.

Barcomb, a former psychology student who had left UMass in December is survived by his parents Wayne A. and Virginia, a brother David A. and Sister Melissa L. of Cohasset, and brother Scott C., a UMass student.

In lieu of flowers, Barcomb's parents suggest donations be sent to the Burn Center, Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Also injured in the accident were UMass students Susan Ellis, a passenger with Rich in a car driven by Barcomb, and Ayodele O. Mobolurin, driver of the car which struck Barcomb's.

Ellis, a senior public health major, was listed yesterday in serious condition with a fractured pelvis at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, according to a hospital spokesman.

Mobolurin, an industrial engineering graduate student and Prince dormitory resident was listed yesterday in satisfactory condition at the same hospital.

Support is needed to fight budget cuts

Representatives from the Anthropology Department at the University of Massachusetts are trying to generate student interest and support against certain budget cuts proposed by Reagan Administration.

The representatives, both undergraduate and graduate students, hope to make students more aware of the ramifications of these budget cuts will mean to them. A table is set up in the Campus Center concourse this week where students can get addresses of state representatives who could lobby against the cuts.

The White House does not view the study of... the human condition as important enough to warrant funding.

The budget cuts which would have a national affect on various research programs, are 75 percent in the division of Social and Economic Sciences and 25 percent in the area of Behavioral and Neural Sciences. Approximately 10 percent will be cut for support given for social science research. The National Endowment for the Humanities will be cut 43 percent by fiscal year. 1982, beginning July 1 and the Institute of Museum Services will be eliminated entirely.

According to Richard Wikander, a group member, the White House does not view the study of various aspects of the human condition as important enought to warrant funding.

Contributions to economic growth and public welfare made by the social sciences have a national effect, according to a group statement.

PHOTOS AND STORY BY SCOTT BURKE

...and the effect

DRIP DRIP—Two residents of John F. Kennedy Tower in the Southwest Residential Area were a little more affected by last Friday's rain than most students who were dampened walking to classes.

Roommates Jim O'Neil and Bob Haley got wet even before walking out of their fourth floor room.

A drain on the tower's fifth floor balcony, clogged with pigeon droppings and paper debris, caused water to flood a lounge on that floor and into Haley and O'Neil's room directly below, according to the two students.

"In order to get to my half of the z (-shaped) room, I had to get wet," O'Neil said. He added that the leak starts whenever it rains.

During the last storm, earlier in the semester, O'Neil and Haley emptied six buckets of rain, O'Neil said.

He said that when his resident assistant called Physical Plant to complain of the leaking following Friday's storm, a worker offered "to come and put towels on the floor and mop up (the puddles) the next morning."

Haley and O'Neil would have had to miss class to let the workers into their room, so they decided to let the water drip into a garbage barrel instead, Haley said.

Jim Wallace, Southwest area management director, said he learned of the possibility of water in Haley and O'Neil's room through a Physical Plant official. He said the last time the two students had a leak in their room, they had consulted him, and Wallace had offered to put them in an eighth floor room in Kennedy.

"They decided to stick it out" that time, Wallace said.

Wallace said he has requested that all heads of residence check rooms under balconies during rain storms. He added that all Southwest dormitory maintenance problems should be reported to himself or to a students's head of residence.

"They shouldn't have to live with it," Wallace said of the maintenance problems. He said the Physical Plant is looking for a permanent solution to the problem.

The Heavy Metal Movie* will be released by Columbia Picures this summer.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

By STEVE MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Art For Art's Sake: Heavy Metal magazine has made a movie! It's entitled The Heavy Metal Movie, of course, and is based on material from the magazine. It promises a weird commercial blend of eroticism, science fiction, fantasy and rock 'n roll. Initially the project was turned down by the major studios as being too hot, then fought over for distribution. Columbia won. It will be interesting to see if the magazine's heavily sexist leanings are transformed onto the wide screen—and even more interesting to see how audiences will react...George A. Romero, who brought us the trashy Night of the Living Dead and its satirical and highly successful follow-up Dawn of the Dead, has released his latest work, Knightriders. It's being hailed as a monumental piece of art by New York critics. The film is described as a modern-day version of King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table, an Excalibur of modern mythologies.

It's only rock and roll: The arts field is really one big circle, one art form reflecting upon another. Certain artistic movements, given time, flow from one medium to the next. Such a movement is punk rock. Film makers are trying to capture, if not cash in on, the spontaneity and power of punk in two current film releases. The first film is one which has been big in England for nearly a year and is only now seeing American distribution—Breaking Glass, starring Hazel O'Connor. The second is D.O.A. which features the performances of The Sex Pistols, Iggy Pop (a real talent who needs more exposure), The Clash, The Dead Boys, and others. I wonder if these films will succeed where Rude Boy, with its mundane plot, failed...Mick Jagger, the original bad boy, has supposedly landed a role in the film production of Gore Vidal's novel Kalki, playing a rock 'n roll villian who sets out to poison the world with deadly flowers. Shattered.

If at first you succeed, try, try, again: Whatever happened to artistic experimentation? Hollywood is becoming truly assembly-like in output, relying far too heavily on tried and true formulas. Sequels and re-makes abound. Nothing is sacred. The largest blasphemy of them all (for the time being anyhow) is Universal's scheduled re-make of the gangster classic Scarface. The only possible update that can be done to this film is the addition of more explicit graphic violence—which is sickly exploitative today...Also nearing completion is a sequel to Charley, the classic 1960's film starring Cliff Robertson as the mentally retarded young man who gains intelligence of nearly genius standards only to sadly regress back to child-like mentality. Charley transcended the other films of its time with its experimental editing techniques and zen-motorcyle philosophies. What possible contribution can Charley II make? Will a middle-aged Cliff Robertson return to adolescence?

The Rings are making it on their own

By David Wildman
Collegian Staff

The Rings
Hangar One Friday April 24,1981

The Rings, from Boston, were last seen in this area opening for the Boomtown Rats at the Fine Arts Center in March. They have a lot of things going for them. A self-produced album on a major label, a lot of high quality record company hype, a rock solid live show, and a secure, realistic attitude about the possibilities and limitations of their musical style.

The Rings are the first to admit to having a heavy-metal sound (they are purported to be a new wave band), and nod comfortably when accused of being commercial. But when you accuse them of being a singles-oriented band, the sunglasses come down, and the defenses are hauled up.

""We are not a top 40 band," says drummer Matt Thurber."The thing that's good about new wave is that people are concerned more with albums as a whole."

I used to hate it," says guitarist Michael Baker, "when you'd buy an album by a group that you'd heard on the radio, and find that everything else on the record is garbage."

So the Rings fired their producer of their first record and decided to handle production themselves.

"Making the record was an uphill struggle," says bass player Bob Gifford, "There is no leader in this band, and we have four different writers. Each of us has our own ideas about how we would do things if it were 'our' band."

Onstage this past Friday night, the four men fit together well as a performing unit. The band played tight, and the sound was full, but there were some problems, the main one being a lack of strong material.

The reggae numbers sounded contrived, and forced Baker to sing in a trendy "Jamaica" accent. The band also relied heavily on musical and lyrical cliches, i.e. overly conventional chord patterns, and a night full of songs about girls.

To the band's credit, though, they played a long, exhausting set, and obviously enjoyed themselves throughout. Any artistic pretentions aside, the Rings put on an enjoyable show.

That's what I hope it's about" said guitarist Mark Sutton afterwards, "good clean fun. If it isn't, then I quit."

The Rings will be releasing a second single, "My Kind of Girl" and have a second album in the works.

Opening for the Rings were the Vandalz, a whirlwind from Westfield.

Leader Mike Huntoon is probably the most distinctive songwriter in the Pioneer Valley. He has an eccentric writing style and he says exactly what he feels.

We are surpised by the sympathetic treatment afforded "scientific creationism" in the editorial pages of the Collegian during the past few weeks.

On April 10, Dr. Allen Beeber presented a slide show on scientific creationism which was indeed ill-received by a generally hostile crowd. It was ill-received because it was both inadequate science and bad religion.

Beeber's doctorate in polymer science seemed to lend credence to his presentation on the "scientific creation" model. He presented himself as a former evolutionist driven by the compelling strength of the creation model to reject the evolutionary alternative. But Beeber (who may have believed in evolution), didn't know very much about evolution. He claimed, for example, that evolution means change by accident, failing to recognize that natural selection is not a random process.

There was no polymer science in the presentation. Indeed, Beeber had neither assembled the slide show (the slides came from the California stronghold of scientific creationism), nor had he written much of the text. It was a "canned" presentation, and judging from the misuse of data in anthropology, biology, geology, physics and mathematics, it was clear that its author (or authors?) lacked familiarity with much of the material cited. Certainly, this was true of Beeber.

Distorting information in our own field, anthropology, Beeber led the audience to believe that Australopithecus was probably some kind of orangutan (or at least, like an orangutan), that Cliff Jolly had demonstrated that fragmentary Ramapithecus was probably some kind of baboon, that Richard Leakey had shown that ER 1470 was essentially modern man.

These statements are gross misrepresentations of what Jolly, Oxnard and Leakey actually said. But Beeber used this very skimpy "review" of the hominid fossil record, plus the well-known Piltdown hoax and the pig tooth which was mistaken for a hominid but quickly recognized, as nonhominid ("Nebraska Man"), in an attempt to destroy the credibility of the human fossil record.

Evolution is an inference drawn from a very large amount of data. Continued research has only served to strengthen our confidence in the evolutionary paradigm; there is little about which we can be more certain. To recognize this fact is to be rational, not dogmatic. Scientific creationists, not evolutionists, are dogmatically defending an old orthodoxy. Indeed, in order to gain membership into the major research organization of scientific creationism (the Creation Research Society), one must sign a statement of belief that the Bible is historically and scientifically true in all details. It is such dogmatism which makes scientific creationism anathema to most scientists, and indeed to most theologians.

From such an inerrant authority these creationists (and allied groups, such as the "Moral Majority") make pronouncements on a range of issues: abortion, sex education, socialism and communism, homosexuality, feminism, nuclear warheads, etc. This is the real issue, as indicated in the creationist tone "The Troubled Water of Evolution." In Pastor Tim LaHaye's preface to this textbook by Institute for Creation Research director Henry Morris, the issue is stated as follows.

"[Evolution] is the platform from which socialism, communism, humanism, determinism, and one-worldism have been launched...Accepting man as animal, its advocates endorse animalistic behavior such as free love, situation ethics, drugs, divorce, abortion, and a host of other ideas that contribute to man's present futility and despair."

The fundamentalist textbook industry is booming. Of course, books prepared for Christian schools openly talk about Jesus Christ within the framework of a particular interpretation of right and wrong. Newsweek described some educational materials prepared for fundamentalist Christian schools as follows:

"The books...tend to take an unliberated view of women and an unsophisticated view of other cultures. A section on families show all the men working at jobs, and all the women working at home. 'God tells fathers to lead their families,' one text says. 'God tells mothers to help fathers.' In another book, the author develops a story line about the Johnsons, a missionary family living in South Africa to preach among the Zulu. The text explains that 'The name Zulu means heaven, but the Zulu do not know about heaven.' In a letter back home, the Johnsons write, 'Many people will not listen when we talk about Jesus. Others listen but do not understand. It may be a long time before any of them are saved...Pray that the Holy Spirit will work in the lives of the Zulu and men everywhere. Then they will know Jesus Christ is God.' "

At Friday night's lecture, Dr. Beeber ended with a short sermon about Jesus. Someone in the audience later remarked that he, as a Jew, was unimpressed by such comments. Beeber replied, "Jesus Christ was a Jew." But, of course, Jews deny the divinity of Jesus Christ. Most people in the world deny the divinity of Jesus Christ. Most follow Muhammed.

Creationist books prepared for public school consumption do not refer directly to passages in the Bible or to Jesus Christ. But a quick glance shows that they parallel the Bible in detail; "creation science" is nothing more nor less than one cosmogeny cloaked in scientific jargon.

Creationists argue that biologists present evolution as obviously true, and that it takes a great mind to recognize its fallacy. They also argue that Darwinism and Christianity are incompatible. Both arguments are false. Evolution is counterintuitive; it took a great mind to recognize its reality. Darwin was such a genius. He was, of course, also a religious man. It was his heritage from the devoutly religious parson-naturalists of England which led to his great scientific discovery. These people took religous delight in studying the world around. Loren Eisely appreciated Darwin's heritage. He concluded Darwin's Century with the following words:

"As a young man...Charles Darwin saw a vision. It was one of the most tremendous insights a living being ever had...None of his forerunners has left us such a message; none saw, in a similar manner, the whole vista of life with quite such sweeping vision. None, it may be added, spoke with the pity which infuses these lines: 'If we choose to let conjecture run wild, then animals, our fellow bretheren in pain, disease, suffering and famine—our slaves in the most laborious works, our companions in our amusements—they may partake of our origin in one common ancester; we may be all melted together.' "

"Darwin was twenty-eight when he jotted down this paragraph in his notebook. If he had never conceived of natural selection, if he had never written the Origin, it would stand as a statement of almost clairvoyant perception. There are very few youths today who will pause, coming from a biology class, to finger a yellow flower or poke in friendly fashion at a sunning turtle on the edge of the campus pond, and who are capable of saying to themselves, 'WE are all one—melted together.' It is for this as much as for the difficult, concise reasoning of the Origin, that Darwin's shadow will run a long way forward into the future. It is his heritage from the parson-naturalists of England."

Cut funding for booze, drugs, pinball...

The time to still the deceptive vociferous noise generated be a handful of radicals (anti-American and foreign guests) intent on destroying our democratic educational process has arrived.

President Reagan, Governor King, the Legislature, Board of Regents, or the University administration are not the only reasons for the present dilemma in higher education. It's about time the "students" take a look at themselves and they will see some of the causes for increasing costs of tuition.

Education is not a free experience in life to everyone. Hard working people who will never get an education higher than the one necessary to gain immediate jobs, in order to support themselves and their families, are being stripped of their earnings (the last elections show they want this stopped) to pay an immoral, prohibitive price for costs created by a handful of students who claim rights to: vandalism, booze, drugs, pinball machines, promotion of homosexuality, third world segregation, useless bilingual education, reverse-discrimination, and anti-American demonstrative political practice—which is not the study of politics.

Elimination of funding for these activities, that serve only a handful of vociferous students, will reduce the student activities fees. The amount saved can then be applied to higher tuition costs without costing any student one dollar more for their education-as a matter of fact, it could save them money!

Let the Turks decide their fate

We are writing in response to Mr. Kaligian's and Mr. Kardjian's letters (Collegian, 4/22 and 4/23).

First, we would like to clear-up Mr. Kaligian's distorted views on Turkey. Mr. Kaligian claims that Turkey has one of the most oppressive governments in the world. Yet, the entire Western world, including the United States, claims Turkey is a free society, with all basic freedoms as well as human rights guaranteed in the Turkish constitution.

As for the use of torture, a full investigation has been initiated. So far, 68 torture charges have been claimed, of which 14 were found to be baseless, 40 are still under investigation, and 14 had basis. Criminal charges have been bought against those involved in the use of torture—a rather generous move by an "oppressive" government. It is the policy of the present government that torture will not be tolerated, and this has been stated by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu many times.

Second, in answering both letters, the people who claim they are oppressed are those who wish to divide a united Turkish nation into separate countries based on national origin. This would be similar to dividing the United States into an Indian nation, a Black nation, a Catholic nation, etc.—a rather absurd idea. When they are denied this request, they claim they are "oppressed."

The letters leave us unsure of the relationship between the showing of ancient Greek historical sites, handmade artwork, and brochures of places to see in Turkey, with the present day Turkish politics. Following Mr. Kaligian's reasoning, the price of tea in China could also be drastically effected.

We would like to make one point very clear, and that is Turkey is a united and indivisible nation. So, in the spirit of freedom, and not of foreign imperialism, let the Turkish people decide the fate of Turkey, and not foreigners like Mr. Kaligian and Mr. Kardjian.

Feminism film series planned; many topics to be discussed

Feminism and film will be the subject of a film and lecture series at Hampshire College from Thursday through Saturday.

Lectures on Psychoanalysis and Feminism, Feminism and Third World Cinema, and Feminism and Modernism are scheduled. Featured speakers include Ruby Rich, critic and director of film for the New York State Council of Arts; Edmundo Desnoes, Cuban writer and film maker; Peter Wollen, British film maker; Joan Braderman, film critic; Cathering Portuges of the University of Massachusetts Women's Studies program; and Mary Russo, assistant professor of literature and critical theory at Hampshire College.

A panel discussion is scheduled on Saturday at 1 p.m.

Films include "Journey from Berline" by Yvonne Rainer; "Thriller" by Sally Potter, the Cuban film "One Way or Another," "Amy" by Laura Mulvey and Peter Wollen, and "Sigmund Freud's Dora."

Detailed information call 549-4600, X-362 or 586-1740.

UM Psychology Department open house slated for tomorrow

The Psychology Department at the University of Massachusetts will conduct tours of its facilities in Tobin Hall and will have lectures on developments in psychology as part of its open house tomorrow.

The first in a series of eleven 30-minute tours will begin at 9 a.m. in Tobin Hall and will run every half hour.

At 9:30 a.m., the first two lectures will begin. Fifteen more lectures will be conducted throughout the day.

For more information on lecture and tour subjects, times and places, call the Psychology Department in Tobin Hall.

Robbers strike 2 local homes; handguns and jewelry stolen

Three handguns, $300 cash, and some jewelry were reported stolen from a South Pleasant Street residence Saturday night, Amherst police said.

A house on Justin Drive was forcibly broken into, and items reported missing were a coin collection, some stamps and three watches, valueing more than $800, police said.

A house on S. Hadley Road was also broken into, and about $400 in jewelry was reported taken, police said. Entry was reportedly made through a window after breaking a lock, police said.

Three cases of bicycle thefts were reported this weekend, police said. Police advise everyone to lock up their bikes because bike thefts are high this time of year.

UM student allegedly knifed; no motive is given for attack

A University of Massachusetts student was allegedly slashed in the leg with a knife at 10:25 p.m. Sunday, UMass police said. The student, a male, was taking a walk after studying at the Newman Center when he saw an unidentified man near Mahar Auditorium police said.

The complaintant told police the man hit and stabbed him, police said. Nothing was said during the attack and the victim did not see the assailant well enough to give a description, police said.

The victim was taken to University Health Services where he was treated and released. The Amherst police department is investigating the incident.

The songs are clever, and fun. In "They Wanna Make Me a Clone" he says, "I don't want to be a robot, in designer jeans." "My Baby's Got Toxic Shock" contains the memorable line "She took a gamble on Procter and Gamble, she tried Rely and now she's gonna die."

The rest of the band consists of Ray Darr, Kevin French, and Scott Blood, all from Westfield. They play with the energy and innocence of youth. The Vandalz are originals, and you'll be hearing from them.

Concerned About Pass/Fail

You Should Be - -

This Thursday in the Faculty Senate it may be ELIMINATED. We think you'll agree that this recommendation IS NOT Pass/Fail:

"A student must earn a letter grade of C or higher to be eligible for a recorded grade of P in the elected pass/fail course. Reported grades of C/D, D, or F in the elected pass/fail course to be recorded without change."

Some Faculty Senators would like to see Pass/Fail even further limited AND THEY HAVE THE POWER TO CHANGE IT!

Ask the following professors how they stand on the issue -- (They're the ones who'll be deciding Thursday):

Elementary Geology for Fall 1981

Some Changes From This Year

Geology 100: Modern Concepts of Geology, will be taught by Prof. Morse rather than Prof. McGill. The emphasis will be on large-scale characteristics of the earth and methods used to probe for the secrets of the earth's interior.

Geology 102: Energy and Minerals for Economic Survival. Intro level course emphasizing the geology of our Energy and Natural Resource base, including oil, coal, minerals. Oriented towards non-science majors. Not taught this year because Prof. Webb has been on Sabbatical.

Geology 106: Face of the Earth, is a survey of physical processes shaping the landscape, with emphasis on relation of geology to landforms in the U.S. (including many national parks). Not taught this year because Prof. Hartshorn has been on Sabbatical.

Geology 101, 103, and 105 will be offered as usual.
All six of these courses are E-core.

Mittmen fall to Huskies for 5th straight

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Conn.—When it ended, this game of crazy games, University of Massachusetts pitcher Tony Presnal shook his head, got in line, and shook some hands.

"It wasn't a bad pitch," Presnal said.

It wasn't a bad pitch; it was a good pitch, up and in on the fists, but still University of Connecticut pinch-hitter Tim Haviland had enough aluminum and even more luck to drop in a bloop single in the bottom of the tenth to score Mike Johnson for an 11-10 extra-inning victory over UMass.

For the Minutemen, now 13-15, it extended their losing streak to five games, and left 25 shaking UMass heads wondering what must be done to win a baseball game these days.

The final score was, in the end, anti-climatic. In a game that saw 33 base hits, four double plays, 21 runs, one head coach heaved, countless ifs and maybes, and some of the best bench-ragging from both sides in recent memory, it was, as is often said, a shame someone had to lose.

The Minutemen, whose offense has sputtered of late, showed their more accumstomed selves, as the first five men UMass sent to the plate got hits off UConn starter Mike McKenna. Dean Bennett (4 hits, 2 RBIi) led off with a double and scored on a Mark Litano single. After Keith Lovellette doubled, he scored on a Warren McReddie (3 hits, 3 RBI) single. Jim Aulenback followed with a single for the fifth straight hit, but a double play got UConn out with just a 2-0 defecit.

UConn, now 15-15-2 got one back in their half of the first, and UMass made it 3-1 after three. The Huskies finally got to UMass starter Chuck Thompson in the fourth, when a five-run inning made it 6-3. As the bench-ragging flew, as much of it directed at home plate umpire Leon Shedroff as at opposing players, UMass got to within one, 6-5, in the fifth.

Then, things got interesting.

Barry Bennett (3 hits, 2 RBI) laid down a surprise two-out bunt bringing in McReddie to tie the game at 6-6 after six and a half, and only a sparkling grab by third baseman Jim Considine or John Kraham prevented UMass from taking a 7-6 lead. But, UConn used five hits, two of them home runs from Johnson and Considine off Vin Todd, who had replaced Thompson, to seemingly blow open a tie game, making it 10-6.

Fat chance.

UMass pulled a carbon copy, banging out five of their own hits en route to a four-run comback, the big blow being a Dean Bennett triple that drove in two.

From there, this three-hour labor of love turned into a two-inning pitching duel between Presnal, who had relieved Adam Grossman in the eighth, and UConn's Larry Keough.

Presnal, now 3-3, had gotten out of a jam in the eighth when he struck out Tom Rossi, up until then perfect on the day with four singles, leaving the bases loaded. Keough, meanwhile, let a UMass runner into scoring position, in the tenth but got himself out of trouble when he induced two pop ups.

The end in the bottom of the tenth came swiftly. With one out, Johnson, whose tenth home run this year in the seventh set a new UConn single season mark, doubled to left, his third straight hit. UConn assistant coach Mitch Pietras, who was subbing for head coach Andy Baylock who got tossed after arguing a Shedroff call in the seventh, decided to lift the lefthanded hitting Mark Grumoli and go with the percentages, pitting righty Haviland against lefty Presnal.

After working the count to 1-2, Presnal came in with a riding fastball that sawed off at the wrists.

Besides the Bennett's seven hits and McReddie's three, UMass got two hits from Lovellette, Aulenback and Litano.

The University of Rhode Island's women's track team overpowered the UMass women's team last Saturday by a score of 97 30 in a meet held at UMass's Llewellyn Derby track.

Threatening clouds and low temperatures failed to dampen the spirits of UMass junior Judy McCrone who won the mile in 5:15 and the 5000 meters in 17:32.8. McCrone was the only UMass winner in the meet. UMass's Cathy Petrick placed third in the 5000 meters with a time of 18:38.8.

"Judy has already qualified for the Easterns and the Nationals, she has to work on improving her times now so that she can improve her seeding in the big meets," coach Ken Banda said.

UMass's Karen Snow set a new school record in the javelin with a toss of 142'10", which was good for second place. "She was the athlete of the day," coach Banda said.

Competing and placing in four events for UMass was junior Micki Callahan. Callahan placed second in the long jump with a leap of 16'10¼" with UMass's Julie Horgan taking third with 15'10¼". Callahan took second in the 100 meter hurdles in 16.2. She also picked up third place in the 100 yard dash in 11.8 and in the 220 yard dash with a time of 28.3.

Placing second in the high jump was UMass's Jill Kennedy with a jump of 5'0". Kennedy also placed second in the 400 meter hurdles with a time of 71.8. It was only her second time competing in the event at a dual meet.

Caroline Gardiner and Iris McDonaugh of UMass placed third and fourth respectively in the 880 yard run. Gardiner's time of 2:22.3 qualified her for the New Englands . McDonaugh finished in 2:25.

UM lands 2 hoop recruits

In his first major move since becoming head basketball coach at the University of Massachusetts last month, Tom McLaughlin yesterday announced he has received letters of intent from two highly-touted New York products.

Don Russell, a 6-foot point guard from Mt. Vernon High School, and Horace Naismith, a 6'6" forward from Jamaica Prep, have signed letters of intent to attend UMass this September.

Russell, the most valuable player in West Chester County this past season, played on a 27-2 Mt. Vernon team that finished second in the state tournament. Russell, who was second team All-State and a New York Daily News All-Star, hails from a high school that has produced Lowes Moore (N.J. Nets), Gus Williams (Seattle) and Ray Williams (N.Y. Knicks), all now professionals in the NBA.

Naismith, who was Private School Player-of-the-Year in Queens this year, was a first team All-New York City selection, and played for New York City in the Las Vegas Tournament last summer.

"I feel that these two (Russell and Naismith) are as good as anybody in the country," said McLaughlin, the former Notre Dame assistant who took over the UMass head coaching job from Ray Wilson last March. "They could be our nucleus for the next four years."

Russell, who McLaughlin projects as a four-year starter was also recruited by New Mexico, Long Beach, Jacksonville, Virginia Commonwealth and Tennessee Tech, while Naismith turned down offers from DePaul, Oregon State, Houston, Texas A & M and South Florida.

Netmen on top in NE's Julian, Jaffe pace win

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team came back from Middlebury College last weekend with more than their equipment bags, they also had the New England Championship trophy to hoist around.

The Minutemen, coached by Steve Williams, took the title by garnering 44 points in the tournament to outlast the fourteen other teams invited. Host Middlebury finished second with 36 points and the University of Vermont Catamounts took third with 32½ points.

According to Williams, everyone played well, but one of the Massachusetts seven who performed over and above par for the weekend was number five singles man, sophomore Nick Julian.

Julian won the C Flight singles title with a 6-3, 7-6 decision over teammate, number six singles Paul Jaffe. Then he teamed up with number one singles Neil Mackertich, and copped the B Flight doubles title, 7-5, 6-4, over the Vermont entry.

Jaffe's play was labeled "monumental" by Williams. He met Julian in the C Flight singles final, and then drove to the finals of the C Flight doubles with partner Dave Kim, where they lost to an MIT doubles team.

As for the rest of the team, number one singles, (and #2 doubles champ) Neil Mackertich lost in semi-final action. And number two singles Sergio Streptman fell in the second round. Mark Huetteman, number three singles, also lost in the semi's, and number four singles, Matt Modlish, was the third Minuteman to lose in a semi-final match.

Modlish did beat the number one seed in his flight, John Chen of MIT. Modlish and Huetteman were also the number one doubles team for UMass and they bowed out in semi-final play.

"It was a long weekend and we played a lot of matches, but everybody played great," coach Williams said. "You have to have a full team effort to win.

"A good example is Bates College. They had both finalists in the A Flight singles and also the A Flight doubles finalists, yet, they only finished in fifth place. Everyone on our team contributed to this win."

Varsity boats win as both crew teams split

Novice boats lose 1st

The University of Massachusetts women's crew team split wins again this past Saturday in South Hadley against Mount Holyoke College and Brown, except this time the varsity-8 boat took first place home, and the novice-8 boat had to face up to their first loss of the season.

"We had flat water this week," said UMass coach Barbara Roche. "But it was really cold and chilly."

UMass did not get a good start in the 1500 meter race. 600 meters into the race, UMass pulled away from Mount Holyoke and passed them easily. The rest of the race was between UMass and Brown.

"From the shore, it looked like UMass was ahead by four seats going into the sprint," Roche said. "When the boats all took the final sprint, Brown caught up and we crossed the finish line one bow ball ahead," Roche said. (The bow ball is a marker at the bow end of every boat for close finishes; a difference of about one second).

The novice-8 race ran into difficulties in the first 500 meters of the race when their boat and Brown's crossed oars. "We wasted about five strokes," Roche said. This gave Mount Holyoke the chance to pull away and then Brown took off.

"Brown was just too strong," Roche said. Brown finished first, followed by Mount Holyoke and then UMass. Roche is not really upset by the novice boat's first loss of the season, "It gives them something to work toward," she said.

This Saturday, UMass travels with the men's team to race their varsity-8 and novice-8 boats on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester, for the New England Invitationals. UMass women rowers have two trophies to defend.

Men win 2, lose 3

The University of Massachusetts men's crew team hosted Williams College on the Connecticut River this past Saturday and posted wins in the varsity and junior varsity eights and losses in the junior varsity four and both freshmen boats.

The varsity eight's race was a real dogfight with both boats running neck and neck with only 300 meters to go. At this point the UMass boat and the Williams boats began their respective sprints. UMass outpowered Williams and crossed the finish line with a norrow victory margin of only 1.8 seconds.

The junior varsity eight had things a lot easier in their race as they cruised to an impressive victory with a 23 second time difference.

The junior varsity four lost their race by 6 seconds but coach Dave Kumlin pointed to a technical problem as the reason for the outcome of the race.

"I feel that the JV four probably would have won but their was a problem with the rigging of the boat and it made the rowing difficult all the way down the course," Kumlin said.

The first freshmen boat lost its race to Williams by the same margin that the varsity eight won its race by, 1.8 seconds.

The first freshmen were winning the race with 250 meters to go but encountered balance problems and quickly fell behind.

The second freshmen boat was entered in a race with the first freshmen boats from Amherst College and the University of New Hampshire and finished second to UNH.

The crew team will now spend the rest of this week preparing for Saturday's New England Championships which are held on Lake Quinsigimond in Worcester. The varsity eight is defending champions in their event.

UPC Confirms four bands for Community Day

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

After four months of negotiations, false alarms, and disappointments, Union Program Council officials announced last night that NRBQ, B.B. King, and Bonnie Raitt and the John Hall Band with John Hall will be appearing at this year's Community Day May 17 in Alumni Stadium.

Student tickets will be available Friday, free of charge to full-time UMass students, in the Student Union Ballroom between 10:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. Ticket prices and locations for five college faculty, staff, and students will be announced in the near future.

The final confirmations came in at 6:00 p.m. yesterday afternoon. "We're very pleased; it's going to be a fine show," said Frank Gironda talent coordinator for UPC.

"It's a real relief. We've been so tense waiting for a decision to be made. It's appropriate that this is stress awareness day," Gironda said.

"This is an isolated date for Bonnie Raitt." She's coming out of the studio to do the show, Gironda said.

"Bonnie said she'd be back next year after last year's spring concert. She really meant it," said Nancy Seraphin, UPC administrative coordinator and production manager.

Alumni tickets will only be available to those who have received a diploma from UMass. No others will be allowed to purchase tickets. Alumni tickets will be sold at the door on a first come first serve basis.

Alumni for the last three or four years will receive a letter informing them they will be allowed to purchase two tickets if they present the letter at the ticket office. The UPC was going to conduct the whole transaction in the mail, but there isn't time for that now, said Andrew Gordon, treasurer for UPC.

Williams cancels, flies to Belfast, violence escalates

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

Northern Ireland peace activist Betty Williams yesterday cancelled an appearance scheduled for last night at the University of Massachusetts and flew back to Belfast, where widespread violence is expected to erupt with the imminent death of Irish Republican Army hunger-striker Bobby Sands.

Williams cancelled the last leg of her three-week six-stop U.S. lecture tour saying she felt "the need to be there (in Belfast) at this time," according to her New York City booking agent.

Lucy Lepage, a spokesperson for the Royce Carlton booking agency, said threats on Williams' and her family's lives have been made. Williams, the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize Winner who co-founded the Community of Peace People organization, is allegedly on an IRA "hit-list."

Williams could not be reached for comment at the Harley Hotel in New York yesterday before flying back to Belfast.

Sophia Haughton, a spokesperson for the UMass Distinguished Visitors Program, which sponsored the cancelled lecture, said the DVP was aware of the death threats, and added that police protection was scheduled for last night.

In New York, Lepage said Williams had been in daily contact with Belfast, where her husband and two children are living. With the increasing tension in Ulster, along with Sands' imminent death, Williams decided to leave immediately for Belfast.

"I don't think the death threat concerned her (Williams) as much as people around her," Lepage said. "She decided to go back now because of the situation and because she thought maybe she could do something about it."

The IRA objects to Williams, saying she supports the British occupation of Northern Ireland by considering British troops a peacekeeping force.

Students urged to support pass/fail at fac sen meeting

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

Widespread student support for the current pass/fail system will be considered by the faculty senate when it votes Thursday on proposed changes in the system, said Student Government Association treasurer Rich Goldman.

Goldman cited a Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) survey conducted last spring showing the pass/fail option as the highest academic priority for students, and the fact that both the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates have endorsed the current pass/faily system.

"I urge students to go to the faculty senate meeting Thursday and support the current pass/fail system, either by contributing to the debate or just by being there," Goldman said.

The faculty senate will vote on a proposal requiring students to get at least a "C" in a course in order to receive a "P". Grades of "C/D", "D", and "F" will be recorded as such.

Currently, any grade over an "F" is recorded as a "P" in a pass/fail course.

The main reason for retaining the current pass/fail system is that students are more venturesome in their selection of classes, said Goldman.

"Students can broaden their base without overly worrying about their GPA," he said. "Pass/fail allows students to experiment outside their majors."

Goldman said another reason for keeping the present system is the way semesters are set up at UMass.

"We're on a 5-3 system (five classes at three credits each) whereas most schools nationwide are on a 4-4 system (four classes at four credits each). This puts a little extra study burden on us," he said.

Goldman questions the faculty's "proof", in the form of an Academic Matters Council Report, that students are abusing pass/fail.

"The Academic Matters Council looked at only a few courses and most of them were freshman courses. It is well known that when it comes to statistics, you can interpret them in many ways," he said.

"In essence, the Academic Matters Council is using statistics to benefit themselves," Goldman said.

Goldman admits that some students abuse the pass/fail option, but he asks if its "fair to penalize all the students."

"This proposal is just a band-aid solution," he said. "It will not solve the deeper curriculum problems."

Recent abortion ruling claimed as victory by pro-life forces

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

The U.S. Supreme Court ruling on Monday upholding an Indiana law which outlaws second-trimester abortions outside of hospitals was claimed as a victory by pro-life forces while pro-choice saw it as a mere affirmation of the present laws.

Henry Luthin, attorney and executive director of Massachusetts Citizens For Life (MCFL), said he thinks the decision indicates that the judges "are seriously rethinking their position on abortion in a free society." He said the ruling could result in the Court's upholding the Human Life Amendment, if it should pass Congress and come before the Court.

Greer Barkley, Massachusetts Organization for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (MORAL) spokesperson, said she felt the decision was merely a reaffirmation of the language of the 1973 Roe-v-Wade ruling which legalized abortions. The decision allows the states to regulate abortion for health reasons after the first-trimester, if it so desires.

Barkley said that pro-life forces are "grasping at straws" when they interpret this decision as a pro-life decision. Barkley said it is really unnecessary for this decision to be interpreted that way since "they are winning everywhere else." Barkley said the decision is an indication that pro-life forces are more politically active than pro-choice forces.

Both Barkley and Alica Dembner, spokesperson for the Northampton reproductive rights group, Isis, said the decision is an example of tactics of pro-life groups. Since pro-life groups have been unsuccessful in outlawing abortion outright they have been working at narrowing access to abortion, said Barkley and Dembner. "They have been successful in making it virtually impossible for women to have access to abortions, especially for poor and third world women," said Dembner.

Barry Averill, executive director of the University Health Services, said that if Massachusetts were to pass a similar law it would have no effect on their present practices. Averill said that second-trimester abortions are now performed in hospitals in accordance waith, what he called, good medical practices.

World and national news

Reagan urges Congress to act on budget plan

WASHINGTON — President Reagan declared in a dramatic return to the public arena last night that while his personal health is much improved, "the fundamental nature of our economic mess is not changed."

In a speech prepared for a joint session of Congress, the president called anew for swift enactment of his tax and spending cuts, saying inaction "will delay even longer — and more painfully — the cure which must come."

"The American people now want us to act, and not in half measures," he said in the nationally broadcast address. "They demand — and they have earned — a full and comprehensive effort to clean up our economic mess."

Reagan, in his first public venture since he was wounded by gunfire March 30, thanked his listeners "for your messages, your flowers, and most of all, your prayers — not only for me but for those others who fell beside me."

Reagan declared that "thanks to some very fine people, my health is much improved. I'd like to be able to say that with regard to the health of our economy. But the fundan ..ntal nature of our economic mess has not changed."

Reagan pointed to inflation continuing "at a double-digit rate" in the nearly six months since he was elected, mortgage interest rates averaging almost 15 percent, and an unemployment count of almost 8 million people.

Pope John Paul II's personal envoy Rev. John Magee was at London's Heathrow Airport last night en route to the Maze prison where IRA activist Bobby Sands is now in the 59th day of his hunger strike. The papal emissary was sent to demonstrate the Pope's personal concern for Sands. Protestant leaders angrily denounced the visit at a time when fears of all-out sectarian violence were rising steadily. Sands' supporters said he was given last rites again yesterday.

Judge orders Boston schools to remain open

BOSTON — Saying students have a constitutional right to an "adequate education," a judge yesterday ordered Boston's public schools to remain open even though there is no money in the school budget to continue classes for the 64,000 students.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Morse Jr. issued his order after 11th-hour negotiations to come up with more money for the nation's oldest public school system ended in a stalemate.

The school system's budget for the academic year ran out yesterday and officials said they'd have to close schools. Morse's ruling followed weeks of haggling between Mayor Kevin H. White and the City Council on how to come up with money for the schools.

"Today is the 142nd class day, we hope it won't be the last day. The protection of the 64,000 students demands no less," said Anthony Sagar, an assistant state attorney general, in asking for the permanent injunction. State law mandates 180 days of school.

A stay of the order was immediately requested by city attorney Stephen Oleskey but Morse refused. Oleskey then said he would take the case to a justice of the state Supreme Court.

Morse suggested the city might use $5.5 million set aside to pay court-ordered tax abatements. He said he was prepared to appoint retired director of the state Bureau of Accounts Arthur MacKinnon to monitor school spending.

State plans tax increases, to balance effects of 2½

BOSTON — While a legislative panel worked yesterday toward fashioning a package of state tax increases, the Massachusetts House refused to take a stand on the issue.

Rep. Bruce Wetherbee, expressing concern about reports that the Taxation Committee is considering tax hikes of up to $257 million, offered a resolution on the House floor expressing opposition to any increase. However, in a 69-12 standing vote, House members refused to suspend rules so that the Pepperell Democrat's measure could be considered.

Haig finds Congress skeptical of arms sale to Saudi Arabia

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., running into a wall of bipartisan skepticism in Congress, urged opponents of selling advanced military equipment to Saudi Arabia to wait for details before labeling the plan a danger to Israel.

Haig hinted to a House panel yesterday that the Saudis will make concessions to U.S. interests in the Mideast in exchange for the sale and said he does not believe the Saudi kingdom will fall and allow secret equipment on sophisticated radar planes to fall into Soviet hands.

Haig's appearance before the House foreign operations subcommittee launched a summer-long campaign seeking Congress' support for the controversial sale.

Senate committee to approve budget for tax, spending cuts

WASHINGTON—The Republican-controlled Senate Budget Committee, hustling to hand President Reagan a victory before his speech to Congress, lined up the votes to approve a White House budget blueprint for big tax and spending cuts.

Committee aides expressed confidence that a problem over deficit spending that led to rejection of the plan earlier had been worked out. They said a final vote would come shortly before Reagan stood on the podium in the House of Representatives to deliver a nationally televised appeal for his economic program.

Hampshire vote calls for nuclear weapons freeze

By JUDI JASUREK
Collegian Staff

Students, administrators, faculty and staff members of Hampshire College voted 934 to 21 yesterday in favor of a referendum calling for an end to the production of nuclear weapons.

The referendum, which is scheduled to be up before the Massachusetts state Senate in two weeks, calls for an end to the production of such weapons as the MX and cruise missiles and the Trident nuclear submarine.

A similar vote will be before the University of Massachusetts student Senate tonight.

"We're the first college to take a stand on the nuclear freeze issue. I don't think we will be the last," said Matthew Goodman, head of the Hampshire Campaign for a Nuclear Weapons Freeze.

Speaking about the upcoming state Senate vote, Goodman said, "We feel that this vote will help persuade them to vote yes on the issue.

"Overall," Goodman said, "we feel that this vote will begin to make the freeze a public issue that will be an event supported by the majority of the country."

Last November, 59 percent of the voters in Western Massachusetts' Franklin and Hampshire counties voted in favor of the referendum question. Fourteen towns in Vermont and one in New Hampshire have also approved the question.

Currently, Goodman said, the referendum is being considered by state legislatures in California and Illinois and "beginning efforts" are underway in 34 other states.

"A bunch of us felt that it was a worthwhile proposal and we felt that the Hampshire College community should take a stand on it," Goodman said.

Since January, about 20 Hampshire College students have been working full-time on organizing the vote, Goodman said. A series of speakers, including Herbert Scott Scoville, former deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, have appeared on campus to discuss the issue. Several films and symposiums on the arms race have also been presented.

The results of the vote were announced at a news conference attended by about 50 people yesterday afternoon.

The motion the UMass senators will vote on says, "Resolved, that the Undergraduate Student Senate vote in favor of a mutual nuclear weapons freeze between the United States and the Soviet Union that would halt all production, deployment and testing of nuclear weapons, warheads, missiles and delivery systems."

Grad. senate hears candidates

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

Unopposed candidates for Graduate Senate President and Vice President addressed the senate last night speaking on a wide range of issues in anticipation of the Graduate elections on Monday and Tuesday.

Incumbent President Jack Delmond said it is essential to get Grad students involved in the decision making process as well as election reform.

"I will seek to get student representation on the Board of Trustees, and will work closely with State Representative Jim Collins on this issue," said Delmond.

He also said he will continue to work with groups receiving graduate funds such as the Arts Council which is having constitutional problems.

Vice Presidential candidate Sanjiu Dugal said he will give his full support to Affirmative Action especially in the area of Third World women, and investigate the margin of profit being made by the University Store and the Textbook Annex.

"I would like to follow up an investigation of the profit-cost of the University Store and Book Store and try and get prices reduced for students," Dugal said.

Dugal has served as a graduate Senator for two semesters, and prior to leaving his native country, India, served as Under Secretary of the Defense, and said he understood issues such as draft, nuclear power, the CIA and military expenditures from his first hand experience.

In other business Ellen Frank of the Legal Services Office requested that the Grad Senate support a motion which would recognize the need for chiropractic services for students on the University of Massachusetts campus. The senate approved the motion, and plans to write letters of support to the University Health Services, and the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

Mary Schatzkamer, editor of Futures Information Interchange, a magazine published by the Future Studies Program at UMass made a plea for $300 to continue the publication of the semi-annual periodical.

With the support of Senator Phyllis Rodin, co-editor of the magazine, the Grad Senate approved the funding on the grounds that it would be a one-time allocation because the magazine would be self-supporting beginning next year.

Stress workshop urges non-chemical alternative high

By DONNA MAGRATH
Collegian Staff

"If you put your mind in the right frame, just about anything can be an alternative high," Dyann Matson, Coordinator of the Alcohol and Stress Peer Education Program at the University Health Services, told students at a stress workshop last night.

The goal of the Alternative Highs Workshop is to promote responsibility in drinking alcohol and to make people more aware of the alternatives to relaxing and getting high, Matson said.

Many students seek ways to get "high" other than through the use of drugs or alcohol, Matson said. You need to set your mind in a different state in order to change your perceptions of time, space and body awareness, Matson said.

Getting "high" allows you to relax, relieve boredom, or temporarily escape from daily pressures, she said. It is a way of altering your state of consciousness and changing your feelings and perceptions, she said.

There are a variety of ways of reaching non-chemically altered states of consciousness. Yoga, meditation, or aerobic exercises such as running, dancing, swimming or bicycling helps you to achieve an alternative high, Matson said.

"This promotes a 'high' sense of alertness and a peaceful frame of mind," she said.

In addition to the Alternative Highs workshop, there were also workshops on "Stress and Money," and "Hypnosis and Autogenic Training." Diane Wolfe, coordinator of the Stress and Money workshop, talked about budgeting skills, strategies for monitoring spending and the dilemma of a "tight" economy.

The Hypnosis and Autogenic Training workshop, coordinated by Bruce Bynum, focused on different skills that are most useful in self-hypnosis and autogenic training in order to control the body's tension level.

Alcohol and drugs are commonly used to achieve an altered "high" state because it is a faster way to get high, she said. The consequences of using these chemicals, besides the risk of overdoses and hangovers, is that "you have less control to choose the ending of your 'high' or relaxing experience," she said.

Four exercises Matson demonstrated at the workshop were hypnotic void, or separating one's senses through meditation, coloring to music, aesthetic relaxation by showing a nature slide show and an ESP (Extra Sensory Perception) exercise.

UMass students improve following car crash, stabbing

Stab wound victim transferred to infirmary, 'recovering well'

A University of Massachusetts student stabbed in Southwest on April 17 says he is "feeling better" and has been transferred to the University Health Services from Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

G. Denrick Reichard said in a telephone interview he is "recovering well" and "feeling a little better." An infirmiry official said Reichard is "up and walking around."

Two UM students improving following Sunday's car crash

Two University of Massachusetts students hospitalized following a car crash Sunday night were reported to be improving at Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Suzana Ellis was in fair condition at the hospital's intensive care unit, a hospital supervisor said last night. Ellis was in serious condition in the intensive care unit at the hospital on Sunday.

Ayodele O. Mobolaurin, also involved in the accident, was reportedly in satisfactory condition and moved out of intensive care yesterday, a hospital supervisor said last night.

Two UMass students were killed in the crash on Sunday at the intersection of College and Shumway streets. Jeffrey W. Barcomb was found dead at the scene and George Rich was pronounced dead on arrival at Cooley Dickinson.

Catfish Hodge
Bout With the Blues(Adelphi Records)

The major problem with my copy of Catfish Hodge's Bout With the Blues is that, like many of my Charlie Rich albums, it is missing a corner. It seems that those cretins who span the globe rounding off the jackets of decent Rhythm and Blues albums have struck again, and this time their target is Catfish Hodge.

It's bad enough when they ply their evil trade on established musicians, for they already have loyal listeners who will buy their records regardless of cosmetic considerations, but when they attack an innocent unknown like Catfish Hodge, then it is time for The Collegian to speak out against this vicious practice.

Bout With the Blues has all of the ingredients needed to become one of the best Rhythm and Blues albums of the year. It also has extra details that may qualify it as a classic right up there with Charlie Rich's Lonely Weekends and Ray Charles' Georgia on My Mind.

Not only is the quality of this record impressive, but the range is as well. There are low down numbers that literally scrape the bottom of the trenches like "So Bad," "Long Night," and "Cold-Cold," livelier cuts like "You Don't Know" and "A-Political Blues," and rock tunes like "I Repeat" and "Trying to Live."

Hodge, the lead singer of this little band of rebels, gives a strong performance and a sense of style to the proceedings with his gritty voice and his determined sense of

Meeting tonight of Polish Task Force

Tonight at 7:30 p.m., in Campus Center room 802 there will be a meeting to form a Polish Workers Task Force at the University of Massachusetts. Throughout the day there will be a table set up on the concourse selling Solidarity T-shirts and buttons, along with an hour long film about the struggle of the Polish workers to form an independent trade union.

The purpose of the Task Force will be to raise money for necessary printing and office equipment which Solidarity is unable to purchase in Poland, as well as to raise the consciousness of the UMass population to the significance of events in Poland.

Smith, UM choirs to share a concert

For the first time in recent history the Smith College Chamber Singers and the University of Massachusetts Chamber Choir together will present a concert on April 29 in Bowker Auditorium on the UMass Campus. This concert will begin at 8 p.m. and is open to the public free of charge.

Each of the choirs will perform compositions from their recent and highly successful tours. Under the direction of G. Robert Kolb, the Smith College Chamber Singers sang to enthusiastic audiences throughout California on their March tour. Conducted by E. Wayne Abercrombie, the University Chamber Choir began their tour in March with a performance at the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C., and ended with concerts in Belmont, Natick and Danvers.

T' union leader to speak

The trials and tribulations of the "T," or the Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority, will be the focus of a speech tonight as Jack Gallahue, president of the Boston Carmen's Union, speaks in Draper Hall.

As leader of about 6,000 MBTA employees, Gallahue has previously said the T's problems lie with the management and not the union.

Gallahue's appearance is sponsored by the Labor Center Student Caucus Colloquium Committee and will take place at 4:30 p.m. in Room 111 Draper Hall.

UMass police report arrest of trespasser

William A. Bennett, 39, of Chicopee was arrested for trespassing by University of Massachusetts police at 1:19 a.m. yesterday after he was seen by student security on a stairwell of Chadbourne residence hall in the Central Residential Area, police said. Bennett had received a trespass notice from police earlier this semester, police said.

In another incident, a Herter Hall sign was reported missing by a policeman on regular patrol at 2:22 a.m. yesterday, police said.

Jimmy Ray Payne Atlanta's 26*th* victim

ATLANTA — Jimmy Ray Payne, the 26th victim in Atlanta's string of murders of young blacks and the fourth adult victim, probably died of asphyxiation, a medical examiner said today.

The "working diagnosis" was made by excluding other possible causes, said assistant Fulton County medical examiner Saleh Zaki. To determine a definite cause of death, officials will need lab data that will not be available for several days, he said.

The case is "very similar to some of the other cases," 14 of which were ruled asphyxial deaths, he said.

Payne, 21, was found floating face down in the Chattahoochee River on Monday, about the time police were deciding not to put his name on the list of cases being investigated by a special police task force.

Zaki said there was no evidence of external injuries, sexual molestation or a struggle. He said he could not rule out drowning as a cause of death. Police have said they consider the case a homicide.

Payne was about 5 feet 7 and weighed 130 pounds. The last three young adults found dead in the Atlanta area also were in their early 20s and of slight build.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee P. Brown said the decision not to turn Payne's case over to the task force was based on "the best information we had, information of his having been seen...The investigation was very intense, using missing persons and field operations as well as the task force."

Signed letters of intent

Don Russell, a 6-foot point guard from Mt. Vernon High School, and Horace Naismith, a 6'6" forward from Jamaica Prep, have signed letters of intent to attend UMass this September.

Russell was elected most valuable player in Westchester County this past season. Naismith was Private School Player-of-the-Year in Queens this year, a first team All-New York City selection and played for New York City in the Las Vegas Tournament last summer.

timing. Timing, perhaps the single most important ingredient of any R+B album, is perfect here, with all sections coming to a smooth blend in virtually every song. The absence of musical tricks is also extremely refreshing with a good clean sound in every cut. Another unexpected pleasure is the comparitively high quality of the recording itself, especially from a relatively unknown label such as Adelphi Records of Silver Springs, Maryland. (I didn't even know that they listened to music in Maryland, let alone recorded it).

From now on, let the Collegian join hands with other equally prestigious publications such as The Mountain Ear, The Unicorn Times and The Washington Post and sing the praises of one obscure but extraordinarily talented musician: The Soon to be Immortal Catfish Hodge.

Join the third biggest family in the world.

Imagine a religious family of 40,000 Priests, Brothers and Sisters in 93 countries around the world. (That's a pretty big family.)

But that's what the Salesians of St. John Bosco are all about—a large family of community-minded men and women dedicated to the service of youth. (And no one gets lost.)

In the 1800's a chance meeting between a poor priest and a street urchin served to create a movement of such success that it is still growing today. Don Bosco became the priest who brought youth back from the streets—and back to God.

He reasoned that a program of play, learn and pray would make useful citizens of the world. He crowded out evil with reason, religion and kindness in a (what was then unheard of) atmosphere of family spirit.

The ideals of St. John Bosco are still with us today. His work goes on in youth clubs, technical and academic schools, guidance centers, summer camps and missions. And his very human approach is very evident in the family spirit of the Salesians. This is the way he wanted it. This is the way it is. The Salesian experience isn't learned—it's lived.

Pass/fail follies

Tomorrow the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate will vote on a proposal to change the current pass/fail system. Under the present system, a D or better is recorded as a "pass." The new system would require a C or better for a "pass." The Faculty Senate Academics Matters Council developed the motion, citing less motivation in pass/fail classes and abuse of the pass/fail option as the main reasons for the proposed change.

It would seem that the Academics Matters Council has ample evidence to show how the majority of students abuse or take advantage of the option. According to the former chairman of the Council, Psychology professor Harry Schumer, now a Council member, two studies are being used to back up their position.

"Overall, ten percent of all courses taken are taken pass/fail," said Schumer, quoting a Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy study. That statistic can be interpreted to back up conflicting positions. The Faculty Senate says the ten percent figure indicates that too many students are taking too many courses pass/fail. Proponents of the current system say the statistic indicates that many students are broadening their horizons, taking courses out of their field of study, which was the reason the pass/fail option was developed.

There is no information available to indicate what part of the ten percent abuses the option.

Schumer was quoted in Monday's Collegian saying that students taking pass/fail courses do only enough to get by in the course, creating morale problems for other students. But he offered no information on the proportion of abusers to legitimate users of the option.

Data from the registrar's office is also being used to support the change, data that says "students who take courses pass/fail tend to get a greater proportion of C/D's and D's."

Once again, the data does not support either position exclusively. It could show abuse, but it could also indicate students are taking courses out of their majors, on subjects about which they know little but would like to learn. Perhaps because the subjects are foreign to them they do not do as well in the courses.

Before such a widely-used option as pass/fail is altered, the Faculty Senate should have solid evidence that the option really is abused more than it is used for the reasons it was developed.

If the motion passes tomorrow in the Faculty Senate, it seems likely that the change might do more harm than good. Students would be discouraged from venturing out and taking classes they would like to take, as opposed to classes they need to graduate. The abuses could continue to abuse, doing just enought for a C instead of a D, and class morale may be just as low. But those who are searching for variety will have a thinner horizon.

You could make the difference

This Thursday, the Faculty Senate will be deciding the fate of the pass/fail option. The change would be substantial: students would need a "C" or better to receive a "P", anything below a "C" would receive the grade ("C," "D" or "F"). This would change the nature of pass/fail, so much so that it will in effect kill it. A student taking a course pass/fail does so because they are experimenting and they don't want a low grade to hurt their cum. This change would remove that protection, rendering pass/fail useless.

In the fall of 1980, the Undergraduate Student Senate passed a resolution not supporting the proposed change. We still give pass/fail our full support.

You, as the student body, should be concerned about your rights to exercise the pass/fail option as it was designed. Some faculty think the students don't care about the right to make an educated and intelligent decision about their curriculum. It's up to you to prove them wrong.

The issue will be permanently decided Thursday at 3:30 p.m. at the Faculty Senate meeting in SBA 120 (auditorium). A strong student turnout could make the difference. It is important that you be there. If you don't defend your rights, no one else will.

Ethical faux-pas

Janet Cooke is not merely an isolated case of disrespect for the credibility of journalism and literature. The editors of Spectrum magazine are responsible for an ethical faux-pas. That is, they have published "themselves." Twenty-five percent of the magazine is devoted to exhibiting the material of the staff. Once could argue for this obvious display of self-righteous egotism, if in fact the writing was good. Unfortunately, the prose is often amateurish, trite and confusing; at best, the editing was cursory.

Recently, a friend was told by the prose editor, Seth Jacobson, that the material of the staff was examined "more closely" than outside material. In other words, if your efforts to be published by this so-called literary magazine have been in vain, you could improve your probability of success by joining the staff.

What kind of mock professionalism and ethics does the Spectrum "family" subscribe to? The members of the five college community deserve an apology for this literary self-indulgence. Personally, I feel a loss of self-respect for having the naivete to submit material and donate contributions to "their magazine."

Are regents human?

A mother of two young children told the Board of Regents that the $202 tuition increase would mean her inability to pay for heat in her apartment for one month, or sacrificing some meals for her and her children.

The former Speaker of the UMass Student Senate reminded the regents that students are facing financial aid cuts, room and board increases, cuts in state spending for UMass and federal social programs; that, along with these, the $202 tuition increase would be devastating, excluding many individuals from an education and undermining the quality of education for the rest.

The President of the State Students Association told the Regents that the proposed tuition increase was irresponsible, given the financial situation of students, and any regent who voted for the tuition increase should resign.

After the regents voted for the increase, a few of them conveyed to me their thoughts. They felt the student presentations were "excellent," "impressive," and "very good." Yes, the regents were listening, but they ignored the students, treated them as a simple nuisance that was part of the job.

After hearing the presentations of the students and the reactions of the regents, one can only ask, are the ten members who voted for the tuition increases human?

Missiles tell the story

This letter is in response to all the letters concerning the Armenian Genocide and the Turkish government.

The Turkish government is oppressive. That is a fact. Non-communist nations, however, including the United States, do not confront the Turkish government's oppressive practices in the past and present because a nuclear missle tracking station vital to U.S. security is located in Turkey. So the U.S. and other countries support the Turkish government for the security of all non-communist countries. As we have seen in El Salvador today, the U.S. government always supports the "non-communist" government no matter how oppressive it is.

The representatives of the Turkish government will continue to hide behind their denials and the U.S. government's sanctions. My family goes back to 1000 A.D., and we will survive, as the Armenian people always will, in spite of the Turkish government's attempts to eliminate us.

In response to the letter written by the Turkish Student Committee, I can only say that your "indivisible nation," Turkey, was acquired through the blood of the Armenian people, to whom the Turkish people were the foreigners.

THIS SUMMER GET CLOSER TO NATURE IN Vermont

If your summer studies will involve fields, forest and watershed, Johnson State College's 1,000 acre Babcock Nature Preserve offers the ideal environment to gain field experience. The Preserve combines the advantages of a large field station with the convenience of well-equipped laboratories and the support facilities of the campus.

Our program (May 18-July 11) offers 2 week intensive courses in Field Ornithology, Green Mountains Natural History, Aquatic Plants, Field Mammalogy, Watershed Dynamics, and Environmental Conservation Education. Give yourself some credit this summer.

For information, contact Office of College Relations, Box EC, Johnson, VT 05656.

WHAT'S THIS? I'VE GOT TO DO SUN SPRINTS AGAIN TODAY?
ZONKER, IT'S BEEN A LONG WINTER. WE'RE ALREADY BEHIND SCHEDULE.
IN FACT, YOU'VE GOT LESS THAN TWO WEEKS IN WHICH TO CHOOSE YOUR TAN, LAY DOWN A BASE, AND PLAN YOUR TOUR!
NOT TO MENTION PREPARE FOR YOUR FINAL EXAMS.
DON'T MIND HIM. HE'S FROM ANOTHER PLANET.
IF YOU DON'T MIND, MIKE, I'M TRYING TO KEEP THE CHAMP FOCUSED!

Elementary Geology for Fall 1981

Some Changes From This Year

Geology 100: Modern Concepts of Geology, will be taught by Prof. Morse rather than Prof. McGill. The emphasis will be on large-scale characteristics of the earth and methods used to probe for the secrets of the earth's interior.

Geology 102: Energy and Minerals for Economic Survival. Intro level course emphasizing the geology of our Energy and Natural Resource base, including oil, coal, minerals. Oriented towards non-science majors. Not taught this year because Prof. Webb has been on Sabbatical.

Geology 106: Face of the Earth, is a survey of physical processes shaping the landscape, with emphasis on relation of geology to landforms in the U.S. (including many national parks). Not taught this year because Prof. Hartshorn has been on Sabbatical.

Geology 101, 103, and 105 will be offered as usual.
All six of these courses are E-core.

In the eighth, a run-scoring single by Martinelli and a double steal by the Crimson put them up for the third time on the day, 10-8. Come back time for the Minutemen.

Kraham doubled to start the home half of the eighth, moving to third on a fly to right and scoring on a past ball, making the score 10-9.

Lovellette 4 for 5 in 11-10 UMass win

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

There's a lot to be said for a baseball game in which 28 base hits are struck.

The fans stay awake. There's a lot of clapping and cheering. The coaches always make pitching changes. The sportswriter's scorecard is a mess. And a lot of fanatics will say that a slugfest is the way the game is meant to be played.

There won't be much argument from the University of Massachusetts baseball team after yesterday.

By plating two runs in the bottom of the ninth inning at Earl Lorden Field, the Minutemen got the better of Harvard University in a seesaw 11-10 victory that ended UMass' losing streak at five games.

Back to back doubles by Barry Bennett and Mark Litano set up Keith Lovellette's game-winning stroke, the fourth time in the game that UMass had come from behind' just what the frustrated Minutemen needed most, and they did it with a shook-up lineup.

Sophomore Bruce Emerson started at shortstop in place of regular Vin Bonanno and batted ninth. Barry Bennett was hitted from the ninth spot to second, Bonanno's hitting position.

"Bruce has got an excellent arm at short and we've had some trouble there," remarked UMass coach Dick Bergquist. "It was a tough move to make because it took a senior co-captain out of the lineup (Bonanno). We moved the batting order around because of that."

The move proved to be brilliant. Bennett was three for five with one run batted in out of the number two spot. Emerson handled three chances at short and even made up for Bonanno's missing bat with a one-out double in the fourth inning that scored two runs and tied the game at six.

Elsewhere in the lineup, Lovellette had his second incredible day in a row, going four for five with four runs batted in. His bat tied the game in the first and fifth and eventually won the game. Litano and catcher John Kraham each had three hits.

One eye-opening statistic: Not one UMass batter struck out.

The Minutemen were mercilessly quick with their ninth inning sting. Bennett, leading off, ripped a double into the gap in left. Litano fought off an inside pitch by reliever Dave Wanger (0-2) for a slicing double to right to score Bennett. Crimson coach Alex Nahigian elected to play the percentages by having his lefty hurler intentionally walk the righthanded hitting Jim Aulenback and pitch to lefty Lovellette.

Apparently Lovellette doesn't believe in percentages.

The Crimson (11-11) grabbed a quick lead when consecutive hits by Brad Bauer, Vin Martinelli (3 for 5; 4 RBI) and Don Allard (3 RBI) plated three runs in the first inning.

But the Minutemen came back strong in the first inning with four runs off starting Harvard righthanded pitcher Bill Doyle' the big bopper being Lovellette's opposite field hit that scored both Litano and Warren McReddie.

Despair was the feeling of the moment when UMass starting pitcher Tony Presnal allowed a double then walked the bases full. Dejection the attitude when reliever Steve Cramer, after getting Harvard's Brad Bauer to fly out, yielded a triple to Martinelli that scored three runs for Harvard and pushed the visitor's ahead, 6-4.

But Cramer, pitching a lot of innings (he finished the game) with just three days rest, gave it his all. The seven hits he gave up from the third inning on only produced four more runs, but more importantly his stick-to-itiveness saved Bergquist from going to a tired bullpen.

In the fifth, Cramer's first pitch was popped over the left field wall by Allard. But again the Minutemen came back with run scoring singles by Lovellette in the fifth and Barry Bennett in the sixth that put the hosts ahead, 8-7.

Harvard tied the game again in the seventh, despite an apparent flawless play by UMass. With two out, Litano picked up a Dan Skaff single and started the peg that nailed Allard at the plate. But umpire Bill Laroue ruled that third baseman Barry Bennett had obstructed the runner and the tally was allowed 8-8.

Celts host game five, must win

BOSTON — The scenario is all too familiar to the Boston Celtics, perhaps because they played it out only last year.

They battle the Philadelphia 76ers tooth and nail throughout the National Basketball Association's regular season and nip them for the Atlantic Division title. After a first-round bye, they sweep past their initial playoff opponent to set up a showdown against Philadelphia in the conference finals.

The Celtics have the homecourt advantage, but the 76ers come into Boston Garden and edge them in the series opener. Boston bounces back to win the second game — but then loses the next two in Philadelphia, comes back home and gets knocked out in Game 5.

So far the past two seasons have followed strikingly similar courses for these teams, and if the pattern continues Philadelphia should finish off the Celtics tonight at Boston Garden in the fifth game of their Eastern Conference playoff final. But Boston Coach Bill Fitch remains confident the Celtics will be able to break out of the mold.

"People have been asking me since this thing began, 'What is the difference between this year's team and last year's Celtics?'" said Fitch. "What I said before I say now: This club is capable of winning three games in a row from the 76ers.

Mittwomen sweep

The University of Massachusetts women's softball team took two from Southern Connecticut yesterday in a doubleheader in Connecticut. Kathy O'Connell pitched a no-hitter in the opening game which the UMass batters won 4-0. They slammed in eight runs while allowing just one in the nightcap. See tomorrow's Collegian for more details.

Mt. Holyoke over netwomen, 6-3

By ANTONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team came up against a very strong Mount Holyoke team yesterday afternoon on the Boyden Courts and they lost the match 6-3. Their record now stands at 3-3 with two home matches remaining in the season

The meet did not take long to complete as only one of the nine matches went three sets. The use of no-add scoring also sped things right along. This tends to make the individual games go quicker as the first person to get four points wins.

"The team played flat," coach John Beal said. "As a team they didn't play well."

The netwomen won two of the six singles matches. Elizabeth Sullivan playing at the number one spot was able to dominate Holyoke's Kim Colson as she won 6-3, 6-1. The only other singles win came when captain Joanne Vennochi, playing number two, beat Anne Wophat 7-5, 6-0.

"Psychologically I wasn't ready for the first set but then I got it together," Vennochi said. "I tried to play consistently and wait for her to make the mistakes."

In doubles play, Lynn O'Sullivan and Didi Courtright at the number three spot played a consistent two sets to beat Holyoke's Dede Vaugh and Beth Russel 6-4, 6-4.

"It's always a close match when we play UMass," Mount Holyoke coach Les Poolman said. "We have alot of depth."

Tomorrow at 3 p.m. the netwomen will host Brown University on the upper Boyden courts. It will be a stern test for them.

"Brown will be tough, all we've ever won is one set against them," Beal said.

Golfwomen 2*nd* in New England

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Jane McCarthy became the New England net-division champion as the University of Massachusetts women's golf team placed second in the New England Championships held this past weekend.

The tournament, which was held Saturday at the Orchards and Sunday at the Hickory Ridge Country Club, was divided into two divisions, one scored by the gross score of the player and another which incorporated the player's handicaps called the net division.

UMass finished with a two-day total of 736. This total left them 25 strokes off the pace set by the winners, Amherst College. UMass was followed by Rutgers University whose two day total was 760.

In the net-division McCarthy's two day scores of 90 and 93 respectively combined with her handicap of 25 gave her a score of 133 and the title. UMass' Jane Egan also competed in this division and placed fourth with a score of 145.

In the gross-division, Marlene Susienka finished in third place with a 169, two strokes away from first place which was won by Meredith Hudson of Princeton.

UMass coach Jack Leaman was happy with the way the team performed and wasn't displeased that they finished second.

"The team played very very well. Amherst is a very tough team with five very good players," Leaman said.

UMass will play again tomorrow against Mount Holyoke and Springfield College at the Orchards.

Sports studies offers coaching minor

There were many people who influenced me while I was growing to the ripe old age of 21.

Besides good ol' Ma and Pa (If I didn't put that in I would have no place to live this summer) it was the coaches of my youth that most helped in forming what little character I have.

From Pop Warner Football, when it was fun to play, to my high school years, when sports became a serious business, I have had both good and bad coaches, but it was the bad coaches who had the most effect on me. Fortunately, I was able to overcome those bad effects and become the well adjusted college student I am today...I think.

Frank Nagle

Because of the potential effects coaches might have on youngsters it is important for coaches to fully understand (the responsibilities that come with the job.)

That is one of the reasons that the Department of Sports Studies will offer athletic coaching as a minor to anyone other than physical education majors, starting next semester.

This minor is especially designed to teach coaching procedures and techniques to students who are in a major such as Accounting or English, but still consider themselves the next Earl Weaver. There are three required courses, three optional courses, and an internship incorporated into this minor.

The (first of the) required courses is the physiology of coaching, in which the students learn the functions of the human body in relation to sports. The second is the care and prevention of injuries so that the next time little Jimmy jams his ankle sliding into second base, you might know what to do. And the third is the psychology of coaching, in which students learn how to coach adolescents and sports for children up to the age of 12.

The three optional courses are geared toward the students own objective for coaching, and some of the courses include sports skills and the management of sport.

The internship is a program that allows each student to gain experience in coaching while working with another coach in the sport desired by the student. A 60 hour minimun is required from each student with credits varying on the amount of time spent in the internship. That sounds like alot of time, but think of the many wonderful hours you can spend arguing with Tommy's mother over whether he catches or plays first base.

Three credits are given for both the required and optional course, while, (deservingly so,) the internship offers three to six credits.

The program advisor is Dr. Erik Kjeldsen in the department of sports studies. He believes that this minor will be very helpful to anyone interested in coaching a Little League or a Pop Warner team. When asked if he thought the program would be successful, his answer was an emphatic yes. "We would like to have the program concentrate on the younger students in the university, such as incoming freshmen and possibly sophomores. This would allow them to take all the neccessary courses."

Dr. Kjeldsen has arranged a meeting for all interested students on Thursday April 30, at 7:30 p.m., in Boyden 251.

It may be possible for you to learn not to do the things that make bad coaches (bad coaches.) For the mental safety of future generations, lets hope so.

Japanese elegance beautifies University

By CATHY CEBULSKI
Collegian Correspondent

The rebirth of nature is imminent as we eye tiny blades of grass and experience warm breezes, but one of the most unusually ornamental signs of spring is the blossoming of the Japanese Copperbeech tree and the Ginkgo.

The two are among the oldest cultivated nut trees in Japan, yet they differ greatly.

The Copperbeech is a small tree, seldom taller than 80 feet, while the Ginkgo ascends stiff and straight until its branches dip and fan out with small leaves as foliage.

Few people at the University of Massachusetts are aware of their beauty. But those that are, frequent the somewhat secluded area located beneath the Chancellor's drive and to the left of the infirmary where they can be found quite often.

One UMass student, Ellie Rovner, said, "Not a lot of people know how beautiful it is up here in the spring. I study here or just get together with some friends. I think it's one of the nicest places on campus."

Art classes have realized the aesthetic qualities of the space, said UMass student Elizabeth Hobson who came up with her drawing class two years ago to capture it's beauty on paper.

Kathy Onell and Linda Kulig were found studying beneath the trees. Although they both said it was their first time actually relaxing in the area, they said they have often climbed a rock pathway which leads from the site to Orchard Hill and noticed what a nice spot it was.

"Th...e trees are not native to the Amherst area," said John Tristan, Director of the Durfee Conservatory at the University of Massachusetts.

Almost 100 years ago, William S. Clark, the thir president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, was invited by the Japanese government to help establish an agricultural college in Hokkaido, Japan, Tristan said. While Clark was there, he sent back many kinds of seeds of unusual trees, some of which were planted on the UMass campus next to Durfee Conservatory.

UMass student relaxes underneath the ancient Japanse Copperbeech tree. The tree is located in a secluded area to the right of the Durkee Conservatory.

"At the time they were sent over they were very uncommon, but today," Tristan said, "many of these trees can be found around the town of Amherst, at Smith College, as well as these five we have here."

Millions of years ago the Ginkgo, much more common than the Copperbeech, flourished in America. Eventually it retreated to the mountains of central China, and many thought it was extinct. But it popped back up in Tibet, and in 1784 it was introduced once again in the United States.

The Ginkgo has managed to outlive all the diseases and predators that sought after it for 200 million years, the International Book of Trees states.

Today it appears almost indestructable and retains the same form it had when it began. Even with pollution in its worse form the Ginkgo can survive.

Cautions necessary in picnicking weather

By CATHY CEBULSKI
Collegian Correspondent

The weather is hot and sunny, and the food is plentiful. The picnic you planned actually seems to be going great. But wait a minute. An invisible stranger may be lurking nearby, waiting to destroy, and the proverbial church picnic could very well turn into a nightmare.

"It's often a problem with picnickers," said Dr. Fergus Clydesdale of the Food Science and Nutrition Dept. at the University of Massachusetts. "There is usually a lot of food to be prepared for a lot of people. Large amounts of food are hard to cool down, and any bacteria in the food subjected to heat will very likely poison it."

It is very easy for a food to become infected with bacteria. According to the Center for Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta, the majority of outbreaks of food poisoning is caused by the mishandling of food at the final point of preparation in homes and restaurants.

"Bacteria in hair, on a pimple or cut could easily infect food," Clydesdale said. "People should apply the basic rules of sanitation when preparing food."

The growth of these bacteria doesn't change the smell, the taste or the appearance of food in any way, Clydesdale said.

"Food poisoning may go unrecognized, undiagnosed or passed off as "stomach flu," "virus" or something that's going around," according to the Ecological Human Issues: A Reader, a food science textbook.

The CDC estimates that only 10 percent of food borne diseases are reported.

There are two types of food poisoning. Staphylococcus is a food intoxication where bacteria grows in food and excretes a toxin, and Salmonella is a food infection where one actually consumes food containing large amounts of bacteria, Clydesdale said.

Both of these types of food poisoning may be controlled in the same manner.

"The way to prevent bacteria from growing in food is to either drop the temperature or add acid in the form of mayonaise or vinegar," Clydesdale said.

"A common fallacy is that mayonaise will increase the chances of spoiling food. The presence of mayonaise will not increase food poisoning. In fact, it's presence will somewhat inhibit the growth of some food poisoned micro-organisms. This is due to the acidity the mayonaise will add to the food. Vinegar does the same," Clydesdale said.

People who home-can vegetables and meat should take care in doing so. Clostridium Botulinum, a food toxin, could develop and this could kill you if consumed, Clydesdale said.

"Bacteria will usually not grow in acidic foods like tomatoes and fruits because of their high acid content," he said. "But things like beets, beans or sausage are very common foods for this type of food poisoning to occur in."

"People who want to home-can should be very sanitary about it and check with their local extension for any questions regarding times or temperatures," Clydesdale said.

The most common symptoms of food poisoning are nausea, vomiting and diarrhea.

"With the very young or the very old, it could be fatal. They could get sick enough to die. The best thing to do for any victim of food poisoning is to get them to the nearest health center," he said.

Sunworshippers beware....

By STEPHANIE KLEIN
Collegian Staff

With the warm weather upon us, avid sunworshippers flock to the beaches, fields and pyramids of Southwest, joggers run in the sun's soothing rays, and some even get a head start on the whole affair with the artificial sunlight of a tanning booth—all in an effort to attain that deep dark beautiful tan.

Unfortunately, people are often times unaware or uncaring of the harmful effects of the sun's ultraviolet rays.

Prolonged exposure to the sun not only dries and ages the skin, but in more serious instances can cause first and second degree burns and even skin cancer, said Dr. Berman, a physician at University Health Services.

"We had a student come in last week with second degree burns around his face and neck," Berman said. "Apparently he had fallen asleep in the sun for six hours."

Many students taking tetracycline, an acne medication which creates photosensitivity, are often unaware of the suns damaging effects and often receive first and second degree burns as a result, Berman said. Persons on the drug should avoid exposure between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., the hours at which the sun's rays are the strongest, he said.

Sun screens such a Presun, pabanol and blockout, available at most drugstores, should be applied while sunbathing and reapplied after swimming, Bermand said.

Sunscreens with a protection factor range of 6 or above, offer the highest protection from the sun and are most suitable for fair skinned individuals who burn easily, he said.

Solar radiation is also a factor in the cause of skin cancer especially among fair skinned individuals who spend a great deal of time outdoors, according to Harrison's textbook of Internal medicine. Cases of skin cancer are most prevalent in Australia, Africa, and Southern portions of the U.S.

Drinking plenty of fluids, dressing lightly in warm weather and a non-fat, well balanced diet are necessary precautions for persons exercising in high temperatures, said Jim Laughnane, athletic trainer at UMass.

"If a person drops a lot of weight from profuse sweating, that individual is prone to heat stress where the body temperature becomes unusually high," Laughnane said.

An alternative to natural sunbathing can be bought for $15 at the Sunspot in Amherst.

Spring fashions: A choice of flouncy, preppy or western

Spring is here, and once again the public is being inundated with new seasonal fashions.

Every store seems to be promoting its own ideas of what designs for spring should be, and just by taking a trip to the Hampshire Mall in Hadley, one can see the wide variety of clothes available.

"The looks for spring are some originals, some old favorites," said Lori Urness, visual merchandiser for Steigers department store.

Urness, who is in charge of store displays, attends trend meetings once every two weeks to keep up with the fashion market.

"Each store has it's own ideas for spring promotions. We've introduced clothes which emphasize white, mauves and pink colors as our general aim for spring," Urness said. "Prices will be relatively higher depending on the designer," she said.

Shoppers are going to be seeing a great deal of big flouncy skirts, tight waisted pants which flare at the hips, use of gauze in dressing, and skirt lengths which fall below the knee, she added.

Men—western or preppy?

"For men, the western look is being pushed, unlike previous years, when more emphasis was placed on preppy dressing for males," Urness said. "Clothes can be masculine, and still be dressed up with colors like pinks and bright greens," she said.

Anderson Little, another store in the mall, disagrees.

"As far as we're concerned, the preppy look is still the fashion for men," said assistant manager, Steve Roy. "It's been updated and is more stylish than in the past, but the preppy look is a classic that will always be in," he said.

Roy said Anderson Little is pushing men's sportswear this season. This includes the La Coste style shirt, barracuda jackets and poplin pants. Colors range through just about every shade in the rainbow.

Other stores in the mall have different ideas for spring.

Debra Falbo, assistant manager of Foxmoor Casuals, said her store is promoting "versatile and casual fashions."

"Jumpsuits, particularly ones made of polished cotton, have been one of our biggest spring sellers," Elaine Buckley, manager of Foxmoor, said.

"We are stressing lavenders and yellows in our spring collections," she added.

Foxmoor also features certain promotional items for each season, clothing that the average shopper can afford, Buckley said. "Several of these items that we have brought out for spring are the reversible V-necked T-shirts, and the terry-cloth dresses," she said.

Lisa's not on the wagon but still gets a kick out of hanging around and looking for any stray cowpokes while lounging in her cow-jumpsuit and Western hat.

The long and short of it

"The long and short of it" is the new spring theme for Casual Corner, another store in the mall.

"We are pushing different lengths and styles of pants for the new season," manager Louise Shaw said. "Peddle pushers (knicker-type pants which button at the knee), are a new idea based on a nautical approach to dressing. We've also created a New Wave look using caterpillar pants, cotton zippered slacks with a fitted waist and elastic puckered sides," Shaw said.

"The length of pants is shorter this spring, and this is evident in our cotton bicycle pants, which button at the ankle," Casual Corner employee Debbie Platt said.

Also emphasized in Casual Corner spring wear is anything with olive drab colors and western fringes, Platt said.

"Eventually Casual Corner is going to be aiming its sales to an older clientele. We feel more and more women need the tailored business look. Customers are going to see a gradual price increase as we promote the more expensive but professional images of suit dressing, which we have begun for the spring and will continue into the fall," Platt said.

Dress for success even in summer

By ELIZABETH HERMANCE
Collegian Correspondent

The semester's end is fast approaching. In little more than a month school will be over and hundreds of University of Massachusetts students will be out looking for jobs.

Caught unprepared, students can be depressed and frustrated in their efforts to find work. However, there are several ways for individuals to succeed in job-hunting, Janise Fitzpatrick, co-ordinator of student employment at UMass, encourages students to begin looking immediatly. "Many positions are available right on campus. Students should stop in at the Student Employment Office (SEO), 239 Whitmore, to find out about them," she said.

Through the Job Employee Matching Service (JEMS), students can complete an initial application from listing job interests and academic information.

"This information is programmed into a computer system, where it can be matched with job openings on file," she said. "I would urge any student who doesn't have a job to list with us."

"Unfortunatly, unlike previous years, no work study jobs are available for the upcoming summer. Federal allocations have been reduced. Therefore we have had to fix our priorities on providing work study for the academic year alone, "she said.

Check the newspapers

Another idea Fitzpatrick stressed was focusing on Newspapers. "This is a critical point," she said. "Everyone should read the 'Help Wanted' sections."

The Student Employment office subscribes to the Daily Hampshire Gazette and the Amherst Record so students can look for local job listing. The SEO also has a directory of industries in Massachusetts through which students can contact companies.

"By this time of year the majority of the positions we're looking to fill are simple, unskilled, but occasionally we get something career related," Fitzpatrick said.

"Students who are interested in a particular major should come as early as September to look for special paid training programs which might be available in the summer" she added.

Who one knows sometimes, rather than how much one knows, also seems to weigh heavily in favor of getting a job. "Connections can be made oftentimes by just being friendly and outgoing," Fitzpatrick said.

Interviews important

"Interviewing for the position is also an important step in securing employment," said Dr. Jaqueline Robeck, fashion Marketing Coordinator at UMass. "Within the first 30 seconds, people receive impressions through mannerisms and dress."

"If you are interviewing for your prospective position in a company, know what their image is. If they are conservative, dress accordingly and vice-versa," she said.

In regards to women, Robeck said, "A suit is more appropriate than a dress. Basically, the business look is a tailored look. The total appearance is very important."

Fashion is still a matter of taste, however. James Sullivan, corporate fashion merchandising director for jordan Marsh of Boston, feels somewhat differently.

"The American woman has worked hard to get where she is and she will respond to fashions that respond to her lifestyle," he said. "You dan't cram something down somebody's throat. She's not necessarily going to feel that she should emulate men's clothing by wearing a three piece suit."

"One should dress appropriatly for business, but one should dress appropriately for anything," he added. "One can't pre-decide what people want. They will buy what they feel enhances them most. This will give them the confidence which in turn will lead to success."

Valley offers hiking, canoeing and swimming

BY JEFF KELLY
Collegian Correspondent

If the warmer temperatures have given you frisbee thrower's elbow, or if you have ever wondered what is out in that countryside beyond Orchard Hill, you might want to try exploring the area by hiking, horseback riding, or canoeing.

Hiking is by far the cheapest and most accessible way to find out about the wilderness areas in the region, and topographical maps give the most accurate idea of what to expect when planning a hike.

Maps, dividing the Amherst area into four sections, Mt. Toby, Shutesbury, Belchertown, and Mt. Holyoke, can be found downtown at A.J. Hastings for $1.50 apiece, or at the University store for $2.

The Amherst Savings Bank on South Pleasant St. in downtown Amherst gives out a free booklet, "In and Around Amherst", which also points out places of interest around town.

Another very informative booklet, "The Metacom-monadnoc Trail Guide" can also be found at A.J. Hastings for $1. The metacom-Monadnox trail is a wilderness footpath starting at Mt. Metacom, in Northern Connecticut, running north past the Pioneer Valley and ending at Mt. Monadnoc, in Southern New Hampshire. The booklet describes most of the scenic hikes in the area giving hikers an idea of what to expect.

Hiking in the area

Here are a few of the hikes mentioned in the booklet:

-Mt. Lincoln in the Cadwell Memorial Forest, Pelham, provides an easy hike to an inspiring view from the fire tower on the summit.

-Mt. Orient, also in Pelham, is a slightly more difficult hike to the summit, but also provides a scenic hike and an excellent view.

-The Holyoke Range winds along the ridges of a series of small peaks. Occasional fire towers allow an even better perspective.

-Holland Glen, in Belchertown gives some variety to this series of hikes in that it is not a peak, but a stream cascade. This hike is particularly accessible because the path comes out less than one half of a mile from the Belchertown Center bus stop. Simply get off in Belchertown Center and follow Route 9 back towards Amherst. The trail, like the rest of the Metacom-Monadnoc Trail, is marked in white.

Horseback riding and swimming

The Mt. Toby Reservation, yet another part of the Metacom-Monadnoc Trail provides not only a wooded area for hiking, but stables for horseback riding, and a pond for fishing (a license required) and swimming. The Mt. Toby stables give guided tours on trails which run throughout the reservation on horseback for $8 and hour. Appointments are necessary.

Cranberry Pond, on the reservation, is stocked annually with trout by the university. However, you stand a better chance of coming home with a bucket of sunfish. Swimming in the pond is known for its bathing fashions--which is nothing at all.

The Mt. Toby reservation is also accessible by bus. Get off the Sunderland bus at Cliffside Apts. and hike in from either side of the cliffs behind the apartments.

If an afternoon hike is all you are looking for, the Mill River Conservation Area provides a small wilderness area within three miles of the university, or within one mile from the North Sunderland bus stop at Daisy's Restaurant on North Pleasant Street.

No list would be complete without at least mentioning the Quabbin resevoir. Some of the remnants of the inundated towns provide a mecca for the frustrated archeologist. The reservations, (peninsula and islands), are restricted from the public, but the rest of the land provides an excellent hiking and bird watching area, and even some beaver dams.

Horseback riding is not restricted only to the Mt. Toby stables. Every Friday, Tillson Farm gives supervised riding lessons at all levels to students, faculty or workers of the University. Participants must sign up the preceeding Monday on a first come-first serve basis. The lessons cost $6 an hour.

The Rocky Land Stables, on Chauncy Walker Road in Belchertown has guided tours for $5 an hour on trails that run throughout Belchertown. Reservations are reccommended, but not required.

Escaping the monotony of studies a student hikes through the woods located near the UMass campus.

Canoeing is also an excellent way to explore the area. Canoes can be rented from the UMass Outing Club by members or non-members for $5.50 a day on a first come first serve basis. The club's locker is located between the campus center and the parking garage, or more information can be obtained by calling them at 545-2020.

Beginner's whitewater canoeing trips are given by the Outing Club almost every weekend. Because this spring has been unusually dry, they are not as frequent. To find out about them, look for the "sign-up sheets" on the Outing Club Bulletin Board, located across from the Men's Room in front of the Student Union Ballroom.

The area's flatwater, the opposite of whitewater, (i.e. no waves), is not as dependent on the April's showers and is therefore always available.

The Connecticut River is one of the most popular places for flatwater canoeing. By putting the canoe in the water in at the North Sunderland bridge, you can flow with the current down to Northampton, find a sandy beach on Elwell Island and even camp there. (Yes you CAN swim in the Connecticut.) If you camp there during the weekend, however, you should expect to be visited by motor boats.

The oxbow, a little bit farther downstream, has a place to take the canoe out of the water.

Although the water is not too clean in Lake Warner, North Hadley, the mile long waterway does afford an excellent wildlife area. To get there from Amherst, follow Route 9 and take a right after the North Hadley Center.

For swimming, the best bet is Puffers Pond, in North Amherst. The water is clean, the cliffs are high enough to be exciting (about 15 feet), and there is usually a high swing. Unlike Cranberry Pond, bathing suits are reccomended.

Jack Gallahue, president of Local #589 Boston Carmens' Association.

Union leader blames neglect for MBTA problems

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Jack Gallahue, president of Local #589 Boston Carmens' Association, yesterday said the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's current problems are due to years of mismanagement and neglect, not to Proposition 2½.

Speaking in Draper Hall before the Labor Relations Center Student Caucus Colloquium Committee, Gallahue said the MBTA is a political "dumping ground," where a political favor is a "fancy title and a good-sized paycheck."

Claiming the MBTA is joined with the state house by a "revolving door," Gallahue said 93 managers recently received pink slips, but only 30 lost their jobs. He said the system needs to fight the bad public image which is misplaced upon the blue-collar employees but is a result of "hidden layers of bureaucracy."

Gallahue also said neglect during years of relatively minimal use became apparent following the energy crisis in 1973. He said many people began to use the MBTA and wondered why the system that worked fine for years suddenly became inept. Gallahue said massive refurbishing is necessary for the country's oldest public transportation system, and that both the blue and red lines will be shut down all summer for repair.

Proposition 2½ is an excuse for these problems, Gallahue said, adding he hoped the measure and Reagan policies will result in stronger labor unions.

In a time when the "middle class is very much under attack, labor unions should be coming back," Gallahue said.

President of the oldest public bargaining union, Gallahue said union apathy is resulting from 68 years of being well-paid. Gallahue expressed a desire to avoid pitting employees against each other over layoffs, but said union members have the right attitude now, and nobody should get laid off.

"Transit is an industry that should be growing. Unfortunately, in Boston, it is doing the opposite," Gallahue said. "Everyone admits they want (mass) transit, but do not want to pay for it."

Prospects bleak for future student financial assistance

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students should expect severe reductions in their financial aid and perhaps no assistance at all when they receive letters of award in the next few weeks, said Director of Finance aid Ed. C. Apodaca yesterday.

Although most of the 14,000 UMass students who applied for financial aid from the University are eligible for an award there is not enough money to go around, Apodaca said.

"The prospect looks terrible. We will try to spread the funds around but a lot of students will receive less than full aid," he said.

Award letters to freshmen will be sent next week and other students should receive them soon, he said.

"We'll be out of funds after the award letters are sent," he said.

Apodaca said on this campus alone 91 percent of the UMass students who applied are eligible for assistance. He said that means there is more than $30 million in documented need.

The University, however, has only $10 million to award, he said.

"A lot of students who had received assistance won't receive any because of a lack of funds," Apodaca said.

The cuts come after the state Board of Regents last Friday raised tuition for the coming academic year an average of about $200.

Apodaca urged students to apply "as soon as they can" for Guaranteed Student Loans because the federal government has put more money into the GSL rather than campus-based funds.

Apodaca said he did not have an estimate of the number of students who would have to leave school because their aid was cut but he said those who needed assistance desperately may be forced to withdraw.

UMass President Daivd C. Knapp estimated last month 10 percent of the students attending UMass-Boston, UMass-Worcester and UMass-Amherst would have to drop out due to the tuition hike, the double digit inflation rate and President Reagan's funding cuts.

He said further cuts in financial aid can be anticipated unless students and parents contact their state and federal legislators. "A lot of students take it out on the (financial aid) office staff. They should direct their anger at their state and federal legislatures," he said.

"I'm more than happy to meet with students and explain the cuts. I've been trying hard to get students involved," he said.

Regents urged to organize groups to lobby legislature

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Board of Regents should mobilize faculty, staff and students to pressure the state legislature for greater funding or they should resign, a former student advisor to the Regents said yesterday.

"The Regents say that the legislature demanded the additional tuition revenue or else they would hold back our full appropriation. Instead of bowing to the legislature the Regents should mobilize the state's students, faculties and staffs to put the pressure back on the legislature," said Ronald Keefe, chairman of the former student advisory committee to the Regents.

"If they don't want to promote higher education they should resign and let some one else do it," he added.

The six-member student committee resigned in protest following the Regents' 10-2 vote to raise tuition by as much as 27 percent for the state's twenty-eight colleges and universities last Friday.

Commenting on the $5 million tuition waiver policy passed by the Regents Keefe said, "It's an utter myth that by increasing tuition waivers you're going to significantly help the people you're purporting to serve."

"Many students now at UMass will be forced to go to the cheaper state colleges that might not offer them the same opportunities for career advancement," said Keefe.

"In their planning the Regents are counting on students no longer able to afford private education because of financial aid cuts, to be forced into the public institutions displacing the lower-income people who had to leave," added Keefe.

A spokeswoman for UMass President Knapp said there had been no re-appraisal of how many students would have to leave taking into consideration the new tuition waiver policy.

Knapp had previously estimated that ten percent of UMass' students would have to drop out if the full tuition increases were passed in conjunction with Reagan's budget cuts.

Regents' chairman James R. Martin could not be reached for comment.

The UMass Student Government Association's Union Program council is sponsoring Public Higher Education Week from May 11-15, said Keefe. There will be a rally at the pond (speakers to be announced), education workshops and a two-bus trip to Boston to lobby for higher education at the state house Tuesday, May 12.

World and national news

Index shows 1.4% gain; Reagan still urges cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — An important national gauge of future economic strength rebounded in March, the government reported yesterday, one day after President Reagan complained anew in an address to Congress that the economy was severely ailing.

The 1.4 percent gain in the index of leading indicators — the biggest increase in six months — came despite Reagan's contention that the economy urgently needs the proposals he is asking Congress to approve.

However, economists inside and outside the government quickly cautioned that the March performance of the index should not be taken at face value.

The index, which is designed to forecast future economic trends, was heavily influenced by crude oil prices, which shot up after Reagan's decontrol order early this year.

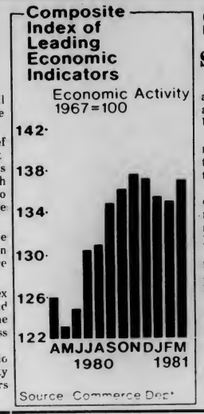
The Commerce Department, which computes the index, considers price increases in raw materials — including oil — as positive economic indicators because they can indicate growing demand.

However, William Cox, acting chief economist at the Commerce Department said the March oil-price increase was basically "a regulatory phenomenon" which should be discounted by anyone trying to interpret the new report. Private economists agreed.

Commerce analysts said that without the oil distortion, the index would have risen about 0.2 percent in March, a performance Cox called "a very moderate upturn."

But even a small gain — following index declines for three straight months — would reflect economic improvement, making the report the fifth major positive signal in less than two weeks.

Two recent government reports said national output and worker productivity rose at their fastest paces in several years in the first three months of this year.



Senate moves toward settling fishing dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate ratified an agreement yesterday to submit to international arbitration an offshore boundary dispute between the United States and Canada.

The 91-0 vote marked a milestone in the 10-year negotiations on the boundary between the two countries in the Gulf of Maine, which includes Georges Bank, among the world's richest fishing grounds.

Canadian officials have not said whether the agreement, called the Maritime Boundary Settlement Treaty, will be ratified by a Cabinet order in Ottawa, an action that is necessary if the dispute is to be submitted to the International Court of Justice at The Hague, Netherlands.

Each country has claimed overlapping maritime boundaries between Nova Scotia and New England, putting into dispute jurisdiction over about 12,000 square miles in the northeastern third of Georges Bank.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the dispute "has adversely affected the normally good relations" between the two countries.

He said he told President Reagan the boundary disagreement was the "principal issue" between the United States and Canada, and he urged Reagan to make a trip to Ottawa.

Search conducted for victims missing in tank explosion

NEWINGTON, N.H. — Firefighters in asbestos suits gingerly searched under a collapsed lid of a 100-foot wide jet fuel tank for signs of two workmen missing since the tank exploded in flames yesterday.

Officials held little hope that the two would have survived the explosion and cave-in of the steel lid and six-feet of earth that covered it.

Thomas McManus, a pipefitter working nearby who saw the explosion, said, "I saw a guy flying through the air. The whole top of the ground lifted. We just took off for cover."

Two other members of a seven-man cleaning crew suffered second and third degree burns, but were described as "doing quite well" at nearby Portsmouth Hospital.

The names of the missing were being withheld by their employer, Jet Line Services Inc. of Stoughton, Mass.

The injured were identified as Bruce Gagnon and Joseph Boyce.

Wallace McCarthy said he saw "some flame and a muffled explosion."

Catholic rioters hurl bombs as Sands reported near death

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Catholic rioters hurled gasoline bombs at police and British troops yesterday in support of Bobby Sands, the jailed IRA guerrilla reported so emaciated by 60 days of fasting he was put in a water bed and taped to keep his bones from breaking through his skin.

The rioters set fire to a tobacco factory and furniture warehouse but firemen extinguished the flames and security forces dispersed the mobs with plastic bullets. There was no immediate report of injuries in the clash in north Belfast.

Sands, recently elected to British Parliament, is in prison on a weapons possession conviction. He is on a hunger strike in a bid to force the British government to grant jailed Irish Republican Army guerrillas rights that would give them political status.

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, said Pope John Paul II's personal emissary, the Rev. John Magee, met with Sands for a second time in a hospital wing at the Maze Prison in an effort to get him to call off his hunger strike. But confirmation was not immediately available.

LONDON — Truck driver Peter Sutcliffe admitted yesterday he is the "Yorkshire Ripper", killer of 13 British women. Sutcliffe, shown here in a 1974 photo, pleaded not guilty to murder charges due to "diminished responsibility" or lack of mental competence. The judge ordered a trial by jury to decide whether to accept Sutcliffe's pleas. The "Yorkshire Ripper" is the namesake of Britain's Jack the Ripper who murdered at least six prostitutes in the late 1880s.

Israeli jets attack Palestinian bases

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli jets pounded Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon yesterday, and guerrilla rockets from Lebanon hit northern Israel. Meanwhile, the Syrians moved sophisticated anti-aircraft missiles into eastern Lebanon, witnesses reported.

The deployment of the Soviet-built, surface-to-air missiles was seen as a counter to Israeli jets that shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships Tuesday and a serious development that might widen the Syrian-Israeli confrontation. "It is the kind of escalation we fear," a Western diplomat said.

Beware of textbook thieves waiting to resell to annex

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

As another semester draws to a close, officials at the University Store are cautioning students to keep a close eye on their textbooks to protect them from the possibility of theft.

Winthrop Cummings, store manager, said each year stolen textbooks turn up at the Text Book Annex, where people attempt to resell them to the distributors.

"Every year around finals, books start disappearing. Not only from the store, but from the D.C. and lounges as well," Cummings said.

Cummings said he and other University Store personnel are concerned that it is difficult to detect when a stolen book is being resold to the Text Book Annex.

"The best thing for students to do is to make distinctive markings in their books in order to be able to identify them as their own," said Paul Gladstone, student security director at the store.

Five people were apprehended for allegedly selling stolen books at the end of last semester and Gladstone said preparations are underway to catch offenders this year. He refused to describe how security personnel apprehend stolen book sellers.

A common "rip-off" spot is the book drop in the front of the University Store, Cummings said, and students have the option of leaving their belongings in the coin return lockers, which are also provided in the store.

In addition to books, students' class notes and other materials are also commonly stolen.

"It bothers me when students shoplift in here, but it bothers me to see women in tears because their notes and year-end term papers are gone," Cummings said.

New sorority to arrive on campus next semester

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Greek Area will be adding for the first time in 18 years a new sorority to the system.

Delta Zeta sorority is the first sorority to colonize on campus since 1963 when Sigma Sigma Sigma established a chapter.

A colony is a fraternity or sorority that is on campus but has not been issued a charter by their national office, Greek Area Director Leslie Chambers said.

Delta Zeta was chosen from a field of four national sororities invited to UMass by the Greek Area Expansion Committee, Chambers said.

After approval by the committee, Delta Zeta was approved by a majority vote of the Greek Council which is comprised of Inter-fraternity and Panhellenic Council members, she said.

The sorority must be approved by the Greek Council after the charter has been issued, Chambers said.

Also, Phi Mu Delta fraternity whose house was closed due to health code violations in 1979, is conducting a rush to recruit new members, said Alumni Advisor Richard Chambers. "The alumni did a feasibility study last October and we decided to seek new pledges for the house," he said. The fraternity plans to rent a house at 401 North Pleasant Street for next semester, he also said.

Student senate plans transit funding program

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to fund the $58,000 deficit in this year's Transit System's budget by using a surplus in the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). The surplus was caused by the creation of a separate transit fee for next semester.

The transit fee of $10 for on-campus students and $15 for off-campus students was instituted on an April 8 senate meeting.

Al Wallace, former senate treasurer, said the new fee would free $166,000 in the SATF.

"Right now every student pays $10 for the Transit Service in their SATF," Wallace said at the April 8 meeting. He said the deadline was past for increasing the SATF, and the new fee was needed to retain current operating levels in the bus system.

According to the motion, the remaining $108,000 will be placed in "student senate reserves."

The senate also voted to conduct a referendum question next semester asking students if they wish to lower the SATF by $10 in the fall of 1982.

"When you're talking about changing the fee structure you should put it out to the students to vote on," Wallace said.

Because the proposed SATF reduction will not become active until the 1981-82 year, the Senate will have time to collect the extra fee without lowering the SATF by the $10 every student currently pays toward the Transit System, senators said.

"It will give us as a government (a chance) to put a little money in the bank...we'll have a base to fall back on," Wallace said alluding to the tight senate budget situation.

In other business, the senate voted to reappoint Commuter Collective senators in accordance to a recommendation made by the Commuter Assembly, a 13-member policy board which represents commuter students.

The Commuter Collective elections of last October have been plagued with numerous problems, including the charge that stickers affixed to the ballots invalidated the elections on the grounds that they were illegal under Massachusetts State Election Laws.

Cathleen Linn, co-Chair of the Academics Affairs Committee, made a presentation urging the senators to attend today's Faculty Senate meeting. The Faculty Senate will consider changing the Pass/Fail option to only include grades of C or better.

"If enough of us are there, they can't do that and maintain their credibility," Linn said.

Solar collective involves area students in new energy projects

By JEFF KELLY
Collegian Correspondent

The season's sunshine and warmer temperatures are increasing activity not only around the campus, but in the Five College Solar Energy Collective as well.

About 40 area students are members of the solar collective. The collective was formed last fall by University of Massachusetts seniors Barry Moir and Stuart Slote, to establish a central organization among Five College students interested in solar energy.

Energy for the 80's

The collective is working on projects that include a solar oven, a solar collector and a display for Sun Day, an event at Hampshire College on May 10 which is sponsored by the collective. At Sun Day the collective will be conducting workshops where participants will construct solar heaters, ovens, and food dryers. The Collective will also give a tour of the Hampshire College Solar Greenhouse and a bicycle tour of solar homes in the area.

The group is also compiling a reference file of area residents with specialties in the alternative energy field.

"We are essentially an information and reference organization," said Peter Burry, a UMass senior majoring in mechanical engineering. "But we also want to give students hands-on experience."

A recent project worked on by collective members is a thermosyphoning air panel (TAP), a solar collector used to heat homes.

The air panel passes cooled air into a chamber heated by the sun through a pane of glass, utilizing a natural convection.

Members of the collective secured a grant from the Bachelors Degree in Individual Concentration (BDIC) program to build a solar oven. The oven relies on a reflector to concentrate the heat of the sun in a small chamber that will reach temperatures of 350-400 degrees.

Moir, like many solar collective members, hopes to be employed in the solar field someday, specifically constructing solar homes.

"But with the conditions of the job market right now, I don't think it's realistic for me to expect to go right into it," Moir said.

Moir is working on an independent major of solar energy and conservation with the BDIC program, and emphasizes it is important to study conservation as well as alternative energy sources.

"Every one talks with a sort of romantic idea about solar, but conservation is also important," he said. "Solar installations might take five years to pay for themselves, but conservation pays for itself immediately. I haven't seen a well-designed solar house that didn't give conservation serious consideration."

Other members are involved in outside projects such as weathering homes for the elderly who normally could not afford the changes.

Also Moir is editing a 28-minute video tape on three Amherst area homes that are heated with solar energy, and three Hampshire College students constructed a solar greenhouse that supports an entire ecosystem attached to their apartment.

Euripedes revival of Greek tragedies spark Five College area

By ROGER ATWOOD
Collegian Correspondent

So you're interested in seeing some fine drama from ancient Greece? You've come to the right place then. This spring, Five College classical scholars are presenting a Euripedes revival, with films and speakers on the 4th century B.C. dramatist whose 19 extant plays rank among the finest ever written.

The centerpiece of the celebration is a three-play series of Euripeds' tragedies at Amherst, Hampshire and Smith Colleges. All three plays are newly translated and, judging from the crowds at the first of the three, still mighty appealing after 2500 years.

Starting off the series, a Hampshire College company gave an exceptional performance of Hekabe, April 16-18. Hekabe, set just after the Trojan War, is the story of the queen of Troy who helplessly endures misery after misery at the hands of the heartless and victorious Greeks. Her husband and children senselessly killed, Hekabe takes matters into her own hands and, in a rage, kills the perfidious murderer of her youngest son.

Hekabe is an intense, grueling play. Katell Plevin played the highly demanding title role with strength and severity. Justin West as Agamemnon and Sausan Arafen as Polyxene gave smooth, effective performances.

Robert Meaghar directed the play, provided the fresh translation from the Greek, and found time to give a potent performance as Odysseus.

If Hampshire's Hekabe is any indication of the coming productions, fans of Euripedes are in for two fine shows in the next few weeks. Smith College will present the Bakkhai, the dramatist's frenzied ode to Dionysus and his worship, April 30-May 2 in Theatre 14, on Green Street, Northampton. Make no mistake, the Bakkhai is a serious drama. But expect many crazed nymphs, wild dancing, and, through it all, the wine god Dionysus, egging on the frenzy. UMass student Richard Ballor plays the god, and John Hellweg directs. The translation is by UMass Professor Robert Bagg.

Finishing the series, Medea will be performed at Amherst College, on the portico of the President's house, May 7-9. The beautiful but wicked sorceress Medea, who murders her children and brother, is played by Laura Carrington. Her consort, Jason the Argonaut, is played by Mark Staples.

Like Hekabe and the Bakkhai, Amherst's Medea is newly translated, in this case by Amherst senior Nina Kaminer, and making its debut in this revised form. Indeed, knowing that these productions are all freshly translated by local scholars is one reason they are so exciting — and not to be missed.

Students dismissed on rape charges

Charges of aggravated rape were dismissed against three University of Massachusetts students during a pretrial conference at Hampshire District Court last Friday.

Michael Cunningham, 21, and William L. McQuaide, 22, both of 63 Pine Grove, Amherst, and Nishan Vartanian, 21, of Butterfield Terrace, Amherst, were arrested in late March for allegedly raping an eighteen-year-old Northampton woman at an apartment in the Echo Hill area of Amherst on March 25.

Assistant District Attorney John Landis said the case was dismissed because, "at the present time we're not able to proceed. Right now we're not in a position that the victim has sufficient memory of the event."

However, a rape counselor/advocate from the Everywoman's Center said when charges are dismissed without prejudice as they were in this case, they can be brought back at any time the victim remembers enough details.

Landis said he could not determine at this time whether charges will be reinstated in the future.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Stay off the grass

With warm weather comes the urge to get out of the confines of the great-indoors and fool around on the campus lawn. Although grass is one of the nicest substances imaginable to walk and play on, it is still in its formulative years in early spring. As you would not sit on a baby horse, waiting instead for it to grow into something suitable for riding, so you should not walk on the shoots of grass which are struggling to maturity in some of the more barren parts of campus.

If all of us can restrain ourselves by sticking to the sometimes inconvient walkways and playing touch football and frisbee on the more durable parts of campus, away from the main thuroughfairs, the campus will be covered by a sturdy crop of grass in a month or so — grass suitable for the wear and tear of thousands of students this summer and fall.

Coffee and huge blue frogs

Eric Janszen

At this time of year you have so much to do you don't even bother picking up the Collegian because you don't have time to read it and if you did have time you'd spend it doing something more worthwhile, like reading the graffiti next to your desk at the library or counting the number of pages you have left to read in your Sociology textbook and wondering if you're going to throw up first from all the coffee you've been drinking.

But since you're reading the Collegian anyway because you had to go to the bathroom sometime, or a lot depending on how much coffee you drank, you'll want to read the following on how to get all your schoolwork done even though you don't know why you should bother because you never really thought about it...

First make a list of all the things you have to get done. Include all papers, exams and projects. Arrange them in order of importance by how much of a pain in the ass each professor is about you getting them in on time and on how hard he grades.

Next, figure out how long each project and paper will take to do and how long you'll have to take studying for each exam. Get a large wall calendar and set up a schedule for the next few weeks, allowing for meals, sleep and study breaks.

If it looks like you won't have enough time to do everything, cut out the study breaks and throw your textbook across the room after each chapter, which accomplishes the same thing as a study break, more or less, only faster.

If you still won't have enough time, don't sleep. Drink more coffee instead. This does the same sort of thing as sleeping, except after a while your Anthropology will read like James Joyce and, later on, huge blue frogs will appear outside your window, waving and barking.

If, after cutting out sleep and study breaks, it still looks like you're short on time, don't eat. At this point, however, you should make sure there's someone around to keep an eye on you when you've been reading the Illiad for 13 hours straight, without food or sleep, and it comes into your mind that you're a Greek warrior and you too think it's magic to fight naked with a shield and sword.

And if it still looks like you don't have enough time, then you've obviously done nothing all semester and should think seriously about why you're here.

There are good reasons and bad reasons for being in college, depending on what is good for you. That is, what's a good reason for you may be bad for someone else. But generally, the following is true:

— Being in college to please mom and dad is a bad reason, especially if they're paying for it. This is because parents usually have weird reasons for sending their kid to college, reasons which often have nothing to do with what's good for you, even though they love you very much.

If they didn't go to college themselves, they want you to go because they think it would have made them happy to go if they could have, and that they'd be happier for it now. It's as when they buy you something like a bicycle, they always wanted as a kid, but couldn't have because they couldn't afford it. And even though you don't want the damn bicycle you feel obligated to thank them for it and use it a lot because you know they're just trying to make you happy.

That makes it hard to tell them that college, like the bicycle, makes you miserable, if it does. It's hard to even tell, after a while, whether you really do want to be here or if you've just convinced yourself of that rather than hurt your parents' feelings.

If your parents did go to college, they want you to go because to not go would inhibit your success as a middle-class person. And as we all know, to not be middle-class in America is like wearing bluejeans at your uncle's funeral.

— Being in college because your friends are is a bad reason. Again, what's good for your friends may be bad for you. Of course, you will miss them if you leave. But loneliness is a price of freedom. And besides, you'll make friends wherever you go.

— Being in college to get a degree so you can make more money than a high school graduate is a bad reason. You'll find cleverness and greed alone will get you a thousand times farther in the direction of wealth than a hundred college degrees.

— Being in college to make yourself useful to society is the worst reason of all, because society can't agree on what's good for it or what a useful person is. So how can you?

True, American society has a vague notion that an employable person is a useful one, but that's bullshit; employability is useful only to you, the person wishing to be employed. That's because if American society had its way, nobody would have a job. Our society's idea is to produce, which has almost nothing to do with employing people. Just ask the typesetters here at the Collegian who are about to be replaced by Video Display Terminal equipment, which in the words of economists will "increase efficiency for the good of society."

— Being in college because you feel like it is a good reason, perhaps the only one.

There are any number of reasons why you might feel like being here. Maybe you have a passion for Irish history, or an interest in a variety of subjects, or just want to put four years between you and the corporate world.

Suit yourself.

But scrutinize those who tell you you should want to be here when you don't. Although their advice may be useful, they cannot know you well enough to decide for you. Only you can do that.

After this time of year, after you've done all you can do, take some time to study yourself.

The drama is all too real

Joe Gannon

I thought it was just another lecture I had been unprepared for coming to an end when my professor announced that he had agreed to allow a student from the UMass El Salvador Committee to give a short presentation on El Salvador. Knowing UMass I was sure the Committee was "left" oriented and would assail U.S. intervention in El Salvador as the beginning of another Vietnam.

Our professor introduced a woman from the UMass El Salvador Committee who began her presentation by asking if anyone had caught the news the other evening that the FBI had determined that it was the National Guard who had been responsible for the rape and murder of four American women in El Salvador last December. She then went on to quote from a fact finding report on El Salvador by Massachusetts Representative Jerry Studds, condemning not only U.S. aid to the junta but the junta itself.

As she was quoting from his report a half dozen masked goons, dressed in rag-tag fatigues burst into the room. Two of them grabbed the startled woman — who was still holding the Studds report — and began to drag her from the room. A student in the front row rose to protest and BANG! a shot was fired by one of the masked soldiers and he fell — shot dead — to the floor, blood leaking from underneath him. The woman's screams from the hallway filled the classroom, some of us were laughing nervously, a few others had fallen to the floor at the sound of the gunshot and were getting back into their seats when the screaming stopped.

The two soldiers quickly dragged her body back into the room and yanked her head back to reveal her unconscious face covered with blood. Another of the soldiers — the one with the pistol — hissed that she was a terrorist and a subversive.

"This is the fate of all traitors to our government." The six of them then withdrew quickly from the room. Silence followed their departure, and then tittering nervous laughter...

A student in the front stood up and faced the class. With a sigh that spoke to the tension hiding in the room she said, "This was a dramatization of a daily occurance in the lives of the people of El Salvador. A society so permeated with violence that it is difficult — if not impossible — for most Americans to grasp, to even a limited degree, the reality of living in a country where literally no one is safe; in their homes, in their schools, or in their churches from the violence of government repression and civil war."

A dramatization, I thought, was this really necessary? But then I suppose that was the intent of the entire skit: to convey to we comfortable and complacent Americans a small sense of what life on a tightrope must be like.

And then I began to think about some of the numbers she was telling us about. Twelve thousand people killed in one year in a country the size of Massachusetts with a population of 4.5 million. Twelve thousand! That's 35 dead fathers, mothers, children, and lovers every day due to violence attributed almost entirely to the National Guard, the Army or the Treasury Police by every individual, group, or organization (except the State Department and the White House) that has been to El Salvador.

A comparable number of deaths in the United States would be 600,000 in one year. 600,000! That's 1750 murders due to political violence — sanctioned by the government — each and every day. Surely we would all go mad.

A dramatization, I thought, was this necessary? But then I suppose that was the intent of the entire skit: to convey to we comfortable and complacent Americans a small sense of what life on a tightrope must be like.

The numbers alone boggle the mind. Yes, the skit was a good idea — sometimes shock therapy is the best way. But the woman speaking had more than numbers on her mind.

"We must educate ourselves," she said, "not solely from the disjointed collection of facts we get from the "objective" media (objective meaning to quote from government sources) but from learning the history of El Salvador." It is a history which contradicts the infantile notion that all Brezhnev need do is to send the complete works of Marx and Lenin to El Salvador (along with some cash in small unmarked bills) and presto — instant revolution!

As I sat there listening, I looked down at the two limp bodies heaped and bloodied on the floor, and I marveled at how we could become so removed and isolated from the rest of the world and our own sad history that we would sanction, with our silence, the tragedy going on in El Salvador.

"There are buses traveling from UMass to Washington D.C. for a demonstration against U.S. intervention in El Salvador," she said.

I've never been to Washington.

Ad Hoc Coalition on CIA responds

As members of "that world renounced," "surly group of hecklers" known as the Ad Hoc Coalition on the CIA, we would like to respond to the criticism levelled at us in Monday's Collegian (4/27/81).

In presenting our questions at Mr. Tomseth's talk we were responding to what we see as a great imbalance in the U.S. media's coverage of the hostage situation. We were told by commentators that a misguided group of student militants took over the U.S. embassy for no apparent reason other than revolutionary fervor. Furthermore, President Carter dealt with this incident as an isolated foreign policy problem, outside of the context of prior relations between the U.S. and Iran. We do not advocate the taking of hostages, or the denial of anyone's right to speak; responsible citizenship, however, requires that we inform ourselves and others of the activities of our government, that we pay for, and which are carried out in our name. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

We know that the CIA overthrew the popularly elected government of Dr. Mohammed Mossadegh in 1953, and that same agency formed SAVAK, the Shah's secret police, in 1956. We also know that as late as 1978, the CIA was training SAVAK agents in torture techniques that they had learned from the Nazis in World War II. Everyone of us paid for that training with our taxes and we have a moral obligation to question it. If "the main objective of United States foreign policy is one of institutionalized peace coupled with an opportunity to promulgate self-determination," why do we actively support 26 of the 35 terrorist regimes cited as the worst human rights violators in the world? Furthermore, why has the CIA overthrown popularly elected, democratic governments in Chile, Iran, Guatamala, Brazil, Indonesia, Cambodia, Thailand, Uraguay...?

Finally, what about Victor Tomseth? We felt that we had enough information linking him to the CIA in Iran and Thailand to go public with it. In Thailand, where he was stationed during the Vietnam War, the Foreign Service was formally linked to the CIA through an executive order of President Kennedy. In Iran, Tomseth's rank of Political Officer, which ex-CIA agents have said is the most common CIA cover, and his role as one of the few Americans fluent in Farsi point to his continued collaboration. Obviously, until the CIA chooses to inform the public our information is open to doubt, but ask yourself what a political officer does in a country with only one party; and think about the connection between President Nixon's appointment of ex-CIA Director Richard Helms as ambassador to Iran immediately after Helms resigned because of Watergate, and the level of CIA involvement in Iran. Our questions to Mr. Tomseth centered both on his knowledge of CIA/SAVAK atrocities, which he never denied, and the fact that he did nothing about them. This same unquestioning obedience was the defense used by the Nazis at Nurembeg. It is not in accordance with the principles of democracy.

No inconsistency here

This letter is in response to a letter joint authored by four male students from Cashin dormitory (Collegian, 4/27).

As we see it, the actions of the Ad-hoc coalition on the CIA are in no conceivable manner inconsistant with the ideals upon which this country was founded. Any nation must continually review its actions based on the principles informing it. The coalition views the role of the CIA as one of systematically stifling liberty, both at home and abroad. To hold Victor Tomseth accountable for his probably function as an agent of the CIA is an affirmation, rather than a deviance from the time-honored concept of liberty.

Questioning and criticising the policies and activities of the United States is not the "distorted ramblings" of "a half a dozen or more farcical groups with absurd names and...ideas." Rather, it is an essential component of the ongoing process of sustaining liberty on our own soil and a healthy respect for other areas of the globe. Absurdity, on the contrary, lies with the indication in the letter that people who stand against the hypocracies in our policies should go to Iran, the Soviet Union, or Cuba.

Standing unquestioningly behind a red, white, and blue carcass of patriotically trumpeted ideals is far more "farcical" or makes more of a mockery of the principles that America claims to defend. Condoning U.S. policies on the basis of "America right or wrong" is not only dangerous, but an indication of the degree of consistency and humanity you feel should guide policy at home and abroad.

Even supposing that repression did not exist in our own country, would active campaigns and policies in other countries that promote suppression by killing and torture be a logical or humane extention of "our" ideals?

The letter from the Cashin men is an invitation for response from those who find logical fallacy and factual distortion repugnant. The problem is where to start. Their arguments so offend the senses that it is tempting to rebuke them on all points, but for brevity we choose to dispel one error of mythic proportion: the misuse of Justice Jackson's famous defense of freedom of expression in the context of the "Cashin letter" was a bit much. The mind can scarcely conceive of Justice Jackson in association with the kind of blind patriotism advocated in the letter.

As Justice Jackson also said in West Virginia State Board of Education vs. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943): "...freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom. The test of its substance is the right to differ as to things that touch the heart of the existing order."

Sylvan-Northeast Spring Festival's success marred by one occurrence

Last Sunday, April 26, the Sylvan-Northeast Spring Festival was held at the Quad in Northeast. Thanks to the good weather and the efforts of the organizers, the event was a great success enjoyed by both the audience and the performers. The day's activities were marred by one occurrence — several members of the UMass Rugby Team came accompanied by their intellectual equals: several kegs of beer.

After drinking away their inhibitions about appearing foolish, they started pouring beer onto the ground around their kegs, which were situated about 60 yards down the hill from Lewis House. These "adults" then proceeded to wallow in the morass they had created. This childish behavior could have been tolerated had they kept this mindless activity to themselves. Instead, after covering themselves with mud, these rugby players started throwing bystanders into the mud puddle.

Performing out in the crowd was a mime hired by the producers of Spring Fest. I was shocked to see the mud-covered thugs seize the mime, drag him into the mud puddle and pour beer over him as he lay helpless. Words cannot express the indignity and humiliation suffered by this talented artist. I have never seen such a brutal display of violence inflicted on an unprovoking man by others.

I am sure the actions of the rugby players participating in this incident do not reflect the entire UMass Rugby Team. I hope the mature, responsible, considerate members of the team will do their best to discourage this type of behavior. To those morons involved in this incident, I hope you learn to curb your drinking problems; your behavior is indicative of severely arrested socio-psycho behavioral growthf.

To the mime, on behalf of the producers and this student body, I offer sincere apologies. I hope this terrible incident won't dissuade you from performing at future outdoor shows.

Simon Ward
Spring Fest Stage Manager

On Sunday, April 26, at the Sylvan-Northeast Spring Festival, during the last band's performance, a group of unruly UMass rugby players decided that it would be "fun" to take advantage of a poor innocent few who happened to be in the right place at the wrong time. The rugby players present dragged these people through mud-puddles, then proceeded to pour beer over them.

Speaking to a man who had undergone this hideous game, we found him visibly shaken; to him, and any others, we offer our apologies.

We hope these rugby players realize that by doing something so perverse and uncalled for, they may kill the chances for concerts like this occurring in the future.

All we can say is that we hope this will not become a recurring them for all UMass concert events.

Spring-Festival Producers and RSO Advisor

And in response to the intolerance the "Cashin Four" expressed at the anti-CIA furor on campus, we leave you with another Jackson quote from Barnette: "Compulsory unification of opinion achieves only the unanimity of the graveyard."

Too much doublespeak

This is in reply to the letter from Stephen Kozloski (Collegian, 4/28).

In this letter he seems to imply by cutting the funding of the activities he mentioned we could reduce the Student Activites Fee (SATF) and save everyone oodles of money, enough to cancel out the tuition increase and then some. There is a serious misconception in this line of reasoning. First, the tuition increase is $202. Next, SATF is $84. Simple math tells us that even if we liquidated the SATF we would still have $118 in tuition costs to make up. That's not what I call saving money.

The rest of the letter is totally incoherent as far as I can tell. He refers to SATF funding of drugs and booze (when has this occured, I would love to know), third world segregation (what ?), and anti-American demonstrative political practice. This sounds like he has been listening to too much of Al Haig's doublespeak. Mr. Kozloski exhibits a total lack of understanding and awareness of the realities that face students today. Increase tuition, and fees to I might add, and lower financial aid is going to drive thousands of us out of school. Lowering the SATF is not going to help, if anything should be lowered it is the defense budget.

Amherst students call to end production of nuclear weapons

Students at Amherst College voted April 21 in favor of a resolution calling for an end to the development of nuclear weapons systems.

Jonathan Troper, a member of the Amherst College Disarmament Study Group, said 87 percent of the student voters cast ballots in favor of the resolution.

Yesterday's issue of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian had quoted a Hampshire College student saying that school was the first in the nation to endorse the resolution Tuesday.

Troper said Amherst students voted 703 to 109 in favor of the resolution which calls for an end to the development of the MX and cruise missiles and other nuclear weapons.

"Twice as many people turned out for this than for student government elections," Troper said, adding that the referendum question was placed on the back of the student government ballot.

As at Hampshire, the Amherst vote followed a series of open forums, slide shows, films and discussions on the topic, Troper said.

German Dept. to hold seminar

The German Department at the University of Massachusetts will hold its 13th colloquim from April 30 to May 2 at the Campus Center. This year the theme is the new German cinema, which has developed over the last 15 years.

Scholars will be coming from all over the U.S. and from as far away as West Berlin to discuss various aspects of film and literature.

Among the speakers will be Professor Hans Vaget from Smith College who will speak about the film "Our Hitler," a seven-hour film which has aroused controversy in West Germany as well as in this country. Professor Claudia Lenssen from the Free University in West Berlin will discuss German films by and about women. Professor H. B. Moeller from the University of Texas will talk about the film "The Marriage of Maria Braun," which had an extended run in Northampton last year. Some papers will be delivered in German, others in English.

Throughout the three-day colloquim, films representative of the new German cinema will be shown to participants and guests. The Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton will be showing German films from April 29 to May 5 in conjunction with the colloquim.

For further information, please contact the German Department at UMass.

Clarinets stolen in F. A. C.

Two clarinets valued at $1,600 were reported stolen from the locker area of the Fine Arts Center at 8:09 a.m. yesterday, University of Massachusetts police reported. The instruments valued at $800 each were allegedly stolen from combination padlocked lockers in the Center, police said.

In another incident, a wallet containing $100 was reported stolen from an unlocked room in Emerson residence hall in the Southwest Residential Area at 7:51 p.m. yesterday, police said.

Panel approves community option to override Prop. 2½

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts communities feeling squeezed by Proposition 2½ would be allowed to escape half of its property tax cut under a plan approved by the Legislature's Taxation Committee.

The panel left the main provisions of the tax rollback law intact but decided Wednesday the law's escape clause should be broadened.

Currently, the law states that no city or town can circumvent the new property tax ceiling — 2½ percent of market value — until November 1982. At that point, communities can hold referendums and approve a higher limit if two-thirds of the voters agree.

A proposal offered by Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, and endorsed unanimously by the committee would let communities hold override votes immediately. The override would first have to be approved by two-thirds of a city council or a town meeting, and then by 55 percent of the voters. The override could cancel no more than half of the scheduled 15 percent property tax cut and would last for only one year.

The panel rejected, by 9-1 margins, two less stringent bypass proposals offered by its Senate chairman, John W. Olver, D-Amherst.

With all the hullabaloo about who's going to appear at spring concert finally out of the way, we can all settle back and enjoy a diverse weekend of entertainment.

With the billing "your worst fears are confirmed (perhaps they will be)," the Dead Kennedys invade the Rusty Nail tonight and Stage West tomorrow night. There's certainly a lot of hype surrounding this band (their name is enough to stimulate conversation), but you'll get the chance to judge for yourself this weekend.

Friday night the Pousett-Dart Band will be in the Nail. Jon was quite the bore when he appeared in an acoustic show a couple of months ago; maybe he'll improve with a back-up band.

Also Fridaynight, Private Lightning returns to the Blue Wall, (not Ellis Hall as was previously announced), or you can always try the old stand-by, the Elevators at Rahar's.

Saturday, Southwest will hold their area spring concert with Zion Initiation, The Mundanes, J.B. Hutton and the New Hawks, as well as the Neighborhoods. The bands begin at noon on the Southwest Horseshoe, and it's absolutely free.

Saturday night, the Paper Dolls will be in the Blue Wall.

Orchard Hill Central will be holding their annual spring event on Sunday. The bands will be Crockett, Magic and the Reggae All-Stars, The Trademarks,and the Blushing Brides (the Rolling Stones clones). It runs from 12:00-6:00, and it costs you nothing to go.

Announcing the first informal Live Wire Reader's Poll. The first question is: Are you happy with this year's spring concert talent package?

Gorillas win tenth, 20-7

"D" croaks Crimson

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — If Steve Kasper or Gerry Cheevers of the Boston Bruins had been in attendance, each would have been pleased since their respective fortes were highlighted so well.

Superscorer Phil Esposito would have enjoyed himself also.

In fact, anyone who appreciates a good lacrosse game, in which the winner effectively combines a solid defense with a timely and explosive offense, would have had a good time yesterday, as the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team chalked up another decisive victory, 20-7, the unbeaten Gorillas' tenth in a row, over the Harvard Crimson here.

Although Massachusetts performed commendably on both ends of the field, the Gorillas' scrambling, pressure defense and a three quarter, 16-save stellar effort on Massachusett's netminder Chris Benedetto was the deciding factor in this contest.

"We just kept coming at them all game and wouldn't let them set up," assistant coach Tom Cafaro said. "If we had played defense like that against New Hampshire last Saturday, the spread would have been the same."

Not to be outdone by the standout efforts of their defensive counterparts, the first and second Gorilla attack lines made themselves familiar to the Crimson in a big way.

Massachusetts got off to one of their patented slow offensive starts in the shadow of Harvard Stadium, scoring but two goals in the first quarter, seven for the half.

However, the Gorilla strikers redeemed themselves with a vengeance in the third period, barraging Crimson goalie Tim Pendergast with seven goals on 15 shots, two by team leading scorer Jim Weller, who tallied three on the day and also assisted on two other Gorilla scores.

The scoring limelight was on senior tri-captain Chris Corin. The Manhasset Connection partner netted season-high seven goals and three assists as well as playing a major role in maintaining the flow of the Massachusetts attack which had its problems in the first half.

The Gorillas were only able to score twice in the first quarter, but with the good "D" and Benedetto backstopping, that's all they needed to stay in control. Harvard helped the Massachusetts cause by hurrying its shots and forcing long prayers when men were open in close. However, many of these poor shots were a direct result of the Gorilla defensive pressure. Senior defenseman Mark Fierro glued himself to Harvard's leading scorer co-captain Gary Pedroni, holding him scoreless. Tri-captain Paul Kinnane and freshman John Mincone, who personally seated several Harvard attackers who ventured within striking distance, broke up many Crimson scoring attempts throughout the game.

The Gorillas were clinging to a slim, 3-0 lead midway through the second period when Corin decided to take charge. He scored three times in the span of two minutes to increase the spread to six. In the middle of Corin's hat trick, was an unassisted effort which started behind the Harvard net. The senior attacker was hacked twice by a Crimson defender, recovered, and whirled in front to stick in his third of the game goal.

The Massachusetts starters were able to get an early rest in the middle of the fourth period after a Skip Vosburgh score jacked the lead up to 11, 17-6. Two highlights of the fourth quarter were the five-save, zero-goal netminding by sophomore Dan Altschuler and defensive midfielder Ray Cozzi's first goal of the season.

"Sometimes people watch us play and we won't seem too flashy and they'll say 'these guys aren't that good'" head coach Dick Garber said. "But we just keep chipping away and the next time you turn around it's 20-7, like today."

The Gorillas now face a tough pair of games in their next two skirmishes. Saturday, they'll take on Army at West Point. Army recently defeated third ranked nationally Syracuse University. Massachusetts hosts Syracuse next Friday afternoon. It's starting to get interesting.

Celts stay alive,

Edge Philly, 111-109

BOSTON (AP) — Reserve guard M.L. Carr, who scored just seven points in the game, sank three free throws in the final 20 seconds to enable the Boston Celtics to beat the Philadelphia 76ers 111-109 Wednesday night and stay alive in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

The 76ers, who led for the entire fourth quarter up until the closing 20 seconds, will get another chance to wrap up the Eastern Conference finals Friday night in Philadelphia. The 76ers lead the best-of-seven series three games to two.

Boston, which trailed by 10 points at halftime, took an 82-77 lead in the third period but fell behind again 85-84 going into the fourth quarter. Philadelphia was never able to pull away, however. The 76ers had their biggest margin of the quarter at 109-103 with 1:51 to go before a three-point play by Nate Archibald and a driving basket by Larry Bird brought the Celtics to within one with 47 seconds left.

Philadelphia had trouble getting off a shot and the ball was knocked out of bounds several times, the last one giving the 76ers possession under their own basket with five seconds left on the shot clock.

The inbounds pass went astray and was scooped up by Bird who missed a driving basket, only to have Carr grab the rebound and get fouled.

He made both free throws for a 110-109 lead with 20 seconds to play. Philadelphia tried to set up Julius Erving for a shot, but he was double- teamed and passed to Bobby Jones, who missed an off-balance attempt. Carr grabbed the rebound and was fouled with one second to play as hundreds of spectators from the tumultuous crowd of 15,320 at Boston Garden poured onto the famous parquet floor.

After the court was cleared, Carr made the first of his free throw attempts, then intentionally missed the last two. Philadelphia got the final rebound and was able to call a timeout. But Celtics center Robert Parish picked off the inbounds pass to seal the victory.

Runners tune up for NE's

By Timothy Tonner

The University of Massachusetts women's track team turned out the usual array of strong performances against the trackwomen of Springfield College in a re-scheduled meet at Springfield Monday.

The match, termed by UMass coach Ken Banda as a "tune-up qualifying meet" for the upcoming New England championship at Boston University, featured two new UMass women's track records set by Nadine Jackson in the shotput and Karen Snow for her efforts in the javelin.

Jackson's performances in the shotput, with a throw of 37', as well as her discus toss of 126'7", were considered by Banda to be the highlights of the meet. Snow threw the jav 151' making that her third school record in three meets, and a tough contender for the New Englands.

Distancewomen Judy McCrone and Caroline Gardner took one and two in the 1500 meter run with the fine times of 4:39.2 and 4:53.2 respectively. McCrone has qualified in the 1500, 3000 and 5000 meter runs for the New England meet and will be entered in two of them. Gardner as well will see action at BU doubling in the 1500 and the 4x800 meter relay with teammates Sally Anderson, McCrone, and Iris McDonough.

Kathy Petrick ran a respectable 18:43.9 in the 5000 meters narrowly beating out the NE qualifying time of 18:45 and will be entered in that event joining McCrone should she decide to run it.

Also prepared for the New Englands in the heptathalon is junior Micki Callahan who recently compiled 4,057 points in that event at the prestigious Boston College Relays where she took a third.

Banda expects his team to present a good showing at B.U. noting that his runners "have improved their standards over the season greatly."

The New England competition, which attracts between 20 and 30 schools adding up to top-rate performances, will be a two-part event beginning at 10 a.m. Saturday, May 2nd and continuing the next day at 12 noon at BU's Nickerson field.

The NAIADS rehearse for this year's spring show entitled "Myths and Legends and Other Timeless Tales." The NAIADS will present the second of three shows tonight at 8 pm. at NOPE and the third tomorrow night.

The underwater group transforms NOPE pool into a mythological arena complete with unicorns, firebirds, evil demons, gods and godesses. The show centers around ancient myths of Greece, Russia, Rome and North America.

This University of Massachusetts synchronized swimming group has been putting on spring shows for nearly 20 years.

Batwomen now 14-4, host Rutgers

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

On the strength of pitcher Kathy O'Connell's no-hitter, the University of Massachusetts varsity softball team swept a twinbill from Southern Connecticut 4-0, and 8-1 on Tuesday.

The mittwomen increased their season record to 14-4. They have now swept two consecutive doubleheaders and are riding a five-game win streak.

In the first game, UMass scored four runs on six hits to defeat the punchless Owls. An error by the Owl third-baseman allowed Brenda Simmons to get on base. Chris Coughlin sacrificed, and Fran Troy's single drove the mittwomen's first run home.

UMass scored three runs in the fifth inning with rightfielder Maddie Mangini designated hitter Karen Poirier, and O'Connell all tallying. The effort was aided by Owl catcher Donna Eaton's passed ball and a stolen base by Poirier.

O'Connell had her first no-hitter of the season boosting her record to 6-3. She allowed two walks and struck-out one Owl batter for the victory.

In the second game, the mittwomen unleashed their powerful offensive weapons, amassing ten hits and scoring eight runs. Shortstop Allyson Rioux, catcher Jacquie Gaw, and O'Connell lead the surge with two hits each.

Mittwoman pitcher Poirier allowed one run on five hits and walked five batters.

UMass will meet Rutgers Sunday at 2 p.m. at the NOPE fields in its last home game of the season.

The University of Massachusetts women's varsity lacrosse team was one of only four teams in Division One selected to compete in the Eastern Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) Regional Tournament to be held this weekend at the University of Rhode Island.

UMass is seeded third behind Harvard and Yale and above URI. The top three teams will advance to the National Championships in May.

New England is allowed three spots in the Nationals because of the way it has fared in the past, according to UMass coach Pam Hixon, whose team finished fourth in the nation last year.

The Gazelles, (6-2-1) will face Yale University Friday at 1 p.m. Depending upon the outcome, the Minutewomen will play the winner or loser of the Harvard-URI game Saturday.

UMass came off a frustrating 2-2 tie with the University of New Hampshire last week, and attained "a needed confidence boost beating Boston College 13-1" Tuesday.

UMass led 8-1 at the half thanks to a combined defensive and offensive effort.

Laurie Vincello, a senior attacker, started the scoring chain followed by goals by co-captian Lynn Herbert, Sue Caples, and two goals by Margie Anderson.

The defense was also a key contributing factor towards the win. "We set a goal at half-time to keep them (BC) at one goal throughout the game," Hixon said. Goalie Rita Hubner saved four of the mere five shots taken on net. "This indicates the kind of defense we played."

Anderson scored four of the last five UMass goals assisted by Whitney Thayer, who also scored.

The Anderson-Thayer duo has combined for 106 of the 164 points the team has compiled this season. Other high scorers are Herbert and Caples who have 24 and 19 points respectively.

Unfortunately, the statistics cannot manifest the intangible contributions made by the defense. The Gazelle's defense includes defensive wings Holley Jennings and Ro Tundryn, who are the best in New England according to Hixon.

Bossio has been very consistent through the season as the third-man defensive position, Hixon said. "The defense on the whole has been consistent and it's important for them not to lose concentration so we can stay in the game even when we don't have the ball."

The match between UMass and Yale is pretty even and should be very interesting, the third-year coach said. Yale, (8-3-1), beat URI 4-2, UMass beat them 8-7. Yale sneaked by UNH by a small margin and both Yale and UMass lost to Harvard.

Faculty rejects change in P/F

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday defeated by a 33-25 vote a motion to change the pass/fail system so that only grades of C or better be recorded as a P. About 100 students present at the meeting broke into spirited applause when the vote was taken.

Proposals to refer the motion back to committee and to amend the motion to permit C/Ds and D to be recorded as a P wth the written permission of the instructor, were defeated earlier.

Student Government Association co-President Kevin Mangan, saying he was especially pleased because "the outlook was very negative," credited student activities with influencing some senators' votes.

"The representation was there. I think we were very well organized and, importantly, the students conducted themselves superbly at the meeting. I think the students' speeches swayed some faculty members."

SGA treasurer Rich Goldman said over 2,000 student signatures had been collected in less than 24 hours in support of the present P/F system.

Harry Schumer, chairman of the Academic Matters Council (AMC) last year when the council developed the motion, said there was "no doubt" that the students had an effect on the vote.

"I think some faculty members may have been intimidated by the students," he said. "It wasn't a rational type of thing."

Mangan said he thought the motion was defeated because "some very valuable points were made in the debate that were not addressed by the AMC in its report."

In that report, the AMC said a change in P/F was "supported directly or indirectly by the data received from the Registrar's office...indicating that students who select the P/F option tend to get a greater proportion of CDs and D than those students who take courses on a graded basis."

The AMC claims that a lack of student effort is mainly to blame for the lower grades.

Goldman said he was "insulted by the implication that students neglect their academic responsibilities. The statistics don't show me how pass/fail is being abused."

The statistics used by the AMC in its report are comparisons of grades between students who took a course P/F and students who took the course for a grade. Lower division courses in rhetoric, French, math, botany and sociology were chosen.

Goldman questioned the validity of the statistics, citing as faults a narrow sampling size, the fact that the courses examined were all freshman level courses, and the fact that the statistics don't show how many students had a P changed to a grade to help their average.

Hadley may oppose Community Day plans

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

Officials from the town of Hadley, where UMass' Alumni Stadium is located, have expressed opposition to granting permits for this year's Community Day, May 17, but have agreed to a meeting to discuss the issue with UMass and Union Program Council officials.

According to an article in yesterday's Daily Hampshire Gazette, Hadley Police Chief Adolph A. Pipczynski said he must review the concert security plans before the Hadley Board of Selectmen will grant the necessary permits.

The selectmen have expressed opposition because of problems with past shows, according to the article.

UPC is required to obtain permits for Sunday entertainment and to sell food, beer and wine, said Andrew Gordon, treasurer for UPC.

Gordon said he was scheduled to meet with Pipczynski Wednesday night, but was forced to cancel the meeting due to "academic reasons."

"We (UPC) have a security proposal, (which explains) how we plan to secure the stadium, which has already been accepted by the UMass administration," said Frank Gironda, talent coordinator for UPC.

UPC has worked very closely with administrative and Health and Safety officials in order to work out the security plan, Gironda said.

"UPC is working with the Office of Community Relations and we're hopeful through further discussion and by providing the necessary information (security plans), these problems can be solved to the mutual satisfaction of all parties," Gironda said.

The UPC has never had to get a Sunday entertainment license before because the last two concerts were on Saturday, and this year's event was originally scheduled for a Saturday, Gironda said.

"We have planned a meeting to present our security proposal to the Hadley Chief of Police," Gironda said.

Alcohol abuse was one of the major problems with last year's show, and to alleviate that problem UPC is not allowing

SW and OH/Central ready to rock n' roll

By DAVE NELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Students who have those end-of-the-semester blues because of too much schoolwork might take a break this weekend and enjoy some live music free of charge as Southwest and Orchard Hill/Central will be holding their annual area spring concerts.

The Zion Initiation will start things off at noon on Saturday at the grassy, open horseshoe area of Southwest. Following their performance at 1:30 will be the Mundanes, a thundering rock group from Providence, R.I., who have previously opened for the Talking Heads. At 3 p.m., J.B. Hutto and the New Hawks will appear. J.B. Hutto is known for his skill as a master of the slide-guitar and for his blend of emotion-ridden blues and high-energy rock'n'roll. The Neighborhoods, one of the most popular new wave bands in New England, will churn out some original punk rock with a pop-oriented edge from 4:30 to 6 p.m.

Over at the apple orchard in Orchard Hill, some hard driving blue grass will be provided by Crockett from noon until 1 p.m. on Sunday. Magic and the Reggae All-Stars will take over at 1:30 and jam until 2:30. The Trademarks, a new wave band who promise some handclapping and danceable rock, will perform from 3 p.m. to 4 p.m. and then the clones of the Stones (Rolling Stones for any who might not know), The Blushing Brides, will blast off from 4:30 to 6 p.m. The Brides are well known throughout the country and Canada for their duplication of the Stones' material and stage act. The Boston Globe labeled them a "genuine replica".

Throughout both shows, interspersed between the bands, will be a variety of performers such as jugglers and mimes. In the event of rain, all performances will be transferred to the Hatch.

All three spring events have been funded in part by the UMass Arts Council with the sponsoring area governments supplying the balance. Yaffa Lerea and John Scott acted as Union Program Council advisors to both the Southwest and Orchard Hill/Central student governments.

Syria moves SAM-6 missiles into Lebanon

Associated Press

RAYAK, Lebanon — Syrian missiles were poised for action near this eastern Lebanese city yesterday as the United States sought Soviet help in heading off a new Middle East war. In southern Lebanon, Palestinian guerrillas rocketed northern Israel again, wounding eight people, sources said.

Israeli jets, which shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships near Rayak Tuesday, refrained from routine flights over Lebanon's Bekaa Valley after Syria moved the Soviet-built surface-to-air missiles into position Wednesday, reporters and official sources said.

However, villagers said they saw high-flying Israeli jets make reconnaissance passes over the area but that the planes were out of range of the SAM-6 missiles and none was fired.

This correspondent saw four tracked vehicles, each mounted with three white-and-blackpainted, 20-foot-long SAM-6 missiles, in a field about three miles south of Rayak, which is some 35 miles east of Beirut and less than 10 miles west of the Syrian border.

The four vehicles, and a fifth equipped with radar antennae, are the equivalent of half a battery of SAM-6s — missiles designed for use against aircraft flying at low or medium altitudes. No additional missiles were spotted elsewhere in a tour of the Bekaa Valley.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said Israel had no official confirmation Syria had moved the SAM-6 missiles into Lebanon. His statement contradicted an Israeli military communique confirming the missiles had been deployed.

But Begin appeared to be trying to de-escalate the situation. "I don't think there will be war between Israel and Syria," he said. "We don't want war with Syria and I think Syria has reasons not to want a war with Israel."

Deployment of the missiles could deny the Israeli air force the freedom of action it has had to date over the whole of Lebanon. Western diplomats in Beirut have warned that the threat of war between Syria and Israel would increase if an Israeli jet was brought down by a Syrian missile.

The British and Austrian embassies in Beirut have advised their nationals to leave Lebanon if they have no pressing business. With Beirut airport closed since last week as a result of shelling attacks, the only routes out of Lebanon are by road to Syria for flights out of Damascus and by ship to Cyprus.

The latest round of fighting in Lebanon erupted April 1 when Syrian forces besieged the Christian stronghold of Zahle, five miles west of Rayak, in an attempt to neutralize the city's defenders, who are backed by Israel and are seen by Syria as a threat to its national security.

Political activist Daniel Berrigan talks with sister Rosallen O'Halloran during a rally in support of jailed IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands outside the United Nations in New York yesterday. O'Halloran has been on a hunger strike in support of Sands, who is reported in deteriorating condition as the result of a hunger strike.

Sands' mother won't let doctors interfere

Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Jailed IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands was reported "deteriorating at an alarming rate" yesterday, and his mother promised to let him die of starvation rather than compromise. Britain refused to give in and warned it would use all means available against violence.

Young Catholics lobbed gasoline and acid bombs at police patrols and set vehicles afire in Belfast as Pope John Paul II's special envoy, the Rev. John Magee, left for Rome after Sands and three other jailed guerrillas rejected the pontiff's appeal to end their hunger strike.

British officials reported the condition of Sands, without food for 61 days, and Irish Republican Army guerrilla Francis Hughes, who joined the fast 46 days ago, was "deterioriating at an alarming rate."

Two other guerrillas, Raymond McCreesh and Pat O'Hara, joined the strike 39 days ago demanding political status on grounds they were convicted in their fight to drive the British from Northern Ireland and unite it with the mainly Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

As death neared for Sands, his mother, Rosaleen, emerged from visiting her son in the Maze Prison near Belfast and said he was "prepared for the end" and said doctors must not interfere.

Sands told her not to let doctors try to save his life when he slipped into a coma — unless Britain granted the guerrillas' demands for prison reforms, which amount to political prisoner status.

"I love my son like any mother does," Mrs. Sands told reporters. "He asked me not to (let doctors save him) and I have promised him not to."

In London, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher reiterated her tough line in the House of Commons and declared: "There can be no question of granting political status to convicted criminals now or at all."

Britain's Northern Ireland secretary, Humphrey Atkins, in an appeal for calm from London, accused the Provisional wing of the outlawed IRA of a "calculated, cold-blooded campaign" to stir up Catholic-Protestant warfare.

"Don't play the IRA's game or anybody else's," he told the province's 500,000 Catholics and 1 million Protestants. "Don't listen to the Provisionals. Don't believe lies and rumors ... Observe the law."

Atkins said the Provisionals had one aim. "That is to provide an environment of fear within which the Provisional IRA can stir up sectarian conflict and enable them to exercise control of Catholic areas and present themselves as alone capable of protecting threatened people."

Atkins said the IRA had plans to evacuate residents in one area of Belfast, gut their vacant houses and blame "others" to stir up more sectarian fear and violence.

Reagan—House budget showdown expected

WASHINGTON — The Democratic-controlled House raised the curtain on its budget debate yesterday with Republican leader Bob Michel declaring that —"The way I've got it figured" — President Reagan has the battle won.

At the White House, Reagan launched an Oval Office lobbying campaign, setting aside an hour for private, one-on-one chats with four Republicans believed to be wavering.

An aide said Reagan would meet with up to two dozen Republicans and Democrats before the showdown vote expected next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Despite growing Republican confidence, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., insisted the prognosis "looks a lot better" for supporters of a Democratic alternative budget blueprint than it did earlier in the week.

Harvard doctors develop bone-building technique

BOSTON — Using crushed bone taken from cadavers, doctors have found they can induce the body to form new bones of its own — a discovery that may have many uses in correcting birth defects, treating accident victims and fighting dental disease.

The new process means surgeons can mold bones where none existed before without going through the time-consuming and sometimes painful process of removing bone from elsewhere in the body and transplanting it to the affected area.

Among the first patients treated was a child who received a nose after being born without one.

The treatment was developed by a team of Harvard Medical School doctors at Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston. A report on their work is being published in tomorrow's issue of the British medical journal Lancet.

"From a clinical standpoint, I'm very excited about this material," said Dr. John B. Mulliken, who conducted the first operation using the powdered bone. "I'm especially excited about the concept of being able to transform the body's cells to make something that's needed."

Prop. 2½: Study group rips 'band-aid solutions'

BOSTON — House liberals, urging the state to collect more taxes from business, said yesterday that cutting the impact of Proposition 2½ in half would be a "cop-out" on tax reform.

The Democratic Study Group called a news conference to express qualms about what they called "band-aid solutions" being offered as ways of coping with Proposition 2½'s property tax rollback.

The liberal coalition mentioned specifically a Taxation Committee plan that would allow communities to cut their mandatory property tax rollbacks in half immediately if a 55 percent referendum majority agrees.

"What seems to be happening could be a real cop-out on the part of our state's political leaders," complained Rep. Michael Barrett, D-Reading.

Courts yet to rule on Boston school problem

BOSTON — Demonstrators blocked rush-hour traffic in a second day of protests against police and fire department cuts yesterday, while the City Council, mayor and state Supreme Court searched for ways to keep Boston's penniless schools operating.

Opportunity for a break in a deadlock over a school bailout plan between Mayor Kevin H. White and the City Council appeared when the two feuding parties agreed to a rare meeting.

But the negotiations were overshadowed by action in the state Supreme Court, which heard White's appeal of a lower court decision ordering schools to stay open the full academic year.

The schools, which exhausted their $210 million budget on Tuesday, received a temporary respite when state Supreme Court Justice Ruth Abrams deferred the appeal to the full court, which heard two hours of arguments yesterday from attorneys representing seven different parties.

The justices took the case under advisement, later sending word that they would have no ruling yesterday. Schools were to open today under the lower court order.

Start every day refreshed!

Amherst student robbed in own dorm room

By M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

An Amherst College student reported that two men entered his room in Pratt Dormitory and stole $20 in cash and a valuable gold ring early Wednesday morning, Amherst police reported.

The men, one wearing a Halloween mask and armed with a knife, and the other wearing ski goggles and armed with khim-chucks (karate sticks), reportedly entered through an unlocked door while the student was studying in the room, police said.

The student reported that after the men took the ring and money, a knock on the door startled the men and they left through a window, jumping 12 feet to the ground, police said.

Amherst police and Amherst College security are investigating the incident, police said.

In seperate incidents, two cars were reported stolen in the area. The first, a 1973 Ford Pinto, was reported stolen Wednesday from a University Park resident. The second vehicle, a 1973 Ford station wagon, was stolen between 10 p.m. Wednesday and 2 a.m. yesterday from a Pufton Village resident, police said.

Police reported two accidents Wednesday at the intersection of North Pleasant Street and Butterfield Terrace. The accidents occured hours apart but involved the same circumstances, police said.

A car driven by Jeanne Sharrow, 51, of Amherst, was reported heading north on North Pleasant Street when it stopped to let a car exit Butterfield Terrace. Sharrow's car was then reportedly hit from the rear by a vehicle driven by Patrick Quinlan, 26, of Amherst.

Sharrow complained of neck pains and was going to see her private doctor, police said.

Quinlan was cited for failure to use care in stopping, police said.

Six and one-half hours later, a car driven by John Sanborn, 29, of Shelborne Falls, was reportedly hit from the rear by a car driven by David Lane, 22, of Williamstown, at the same intersection and under the same circumstances, police said.

There were no injuries in the accident, police said.

Lane was cited for failure to use care in stopping, they said.

Amherst Police yesterday released the following statistics for March, 1980 and March, 1981:

	March 1980	March 1981
Motor vehicle accidents	50	36
Traffic citations	235	101
Arrests	26	37
People taken into protective custody	12	7
Deaths due to accidents	0	2
Rapes	1	1
Armed robberies	2	0
Burglaries	16	22
Motor vehicle thefts	6	9
Assaults	8	3
Animal complaints	57	27
Total complaints received	1052	1057
Property reported stolen	$34,210	$37,002

Beatty praises Campus Center

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty said last night the Campus Center complex is in the "best shape" it has been in for many years and is off to a good start, physically and financially, for the 1980's.

Beatty, speaking to the Campus Center Board of Governors, administrators, and members of the Student Government Association at the BOG annual banquet, said, because of tremendous effort by all those involved with the multi-million dollar complex, some of the "best progress" in years has occurred in the building.

"I think, without a doubt, the Campus Center complex is in the best shape from a managerial, student, and academic point of view since I've been here for seven years," Beatty said.

"Those of you on the board (BOG), and those of you who have been on the board, can put your chests out with pride, not just from a physical point of view, but from an emotional and spiritual point of view, for the accomplishments which have been made in this building," he said.

Beatty, expressing concern about an unfavorable public image by persons outside of the University, said the Campus Center complex is a pivotal area for UMass to regain state acceptability.

"We want people to have a good feeling about this place," Beatty said, "and to have this support, you must create an environment that is conducive to interchange. This can happen in the Campus Center."

The Campus Center, Beatty added, is frequently the first exposure outsiders have to the campus, and therefore is essential to the well-being of UMass.

Campus Center Director William Harris, emphasizing Beatty's remarks, later told the audience that the BOG plays an essential role in the present and future progress of the complex.

"The board has a multi-function," he said, "and it's most important function is to assess the complex, and make sure it runs properly."

The night's last speaker, BOG Chairperson Brian DeLancey, spoke on the essential education BOG members receive by serving on the board.

Mother's Day march against nuclear arms to be held in D.C.

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Correspondent

Women from across the nation are scheduled to march in Washington, D.C., May 10th to protest the nuclear arms race.

Frances Crowe, a Northampton resident and Western Massachusetts coordinator of the American Friends Service Committee, said the march will be held on Mother's Day and will give women an opportunity to express their viewpoints, as the first Mother's Day did in 1872.

"The Women's Party for Survival has formed in an attempt to halt the suicidal rush towards nuclear madness," Crowe said. "Many people feel that today's nuclear problem is quite serious but they feel powerless to do anything about it. By joining forces in this way, we hope to promote world survival."

Helen Caldicott, a physician and organizer of the protest, said more nations are producing nuclear weapons and if the trend is not reversed the danger of nuclear war could increase in the next 10 to 20 years.

"Men are full of the negative masculine principles of egocentricity, competition and killing. Therefore, the world is in the grip of this negative masculine principle. Women, on the other hand, have a highly developed nurturing instinct and care about humanity. We have a built-in passion for survival," Caldicott wrote in a pamphlet.

"My husband is a radiologist and I am familiar with the harmful effects of radiation," said Crowe, who has been actively involved with the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. "It could take just 20 minutes for the world to be destroyed. I have three children and they have a right to be raised in a fear-free environment. I believe everybody has a right to life."

A bus is scheduled to leave Pittsfield at 11 p.m. on Saturday May 9, to take area women to the Washington rally. The American Friends Service Committee and representatives of the Women's Party for Survival plan to march from the Capitol to the White House. Workshops will be held following the march and the women are scheduled to deliver petitions to their members of Congress the following day.

Soil: Professor says that it is not just dirt

By STEPHEN DAIGLE
Collegian Correspondent

A poet gazing through his window might view the field outside as a place of pastoral serenity and restfulness. Not to the soil physicist. What he sees in the field is not rest but unceasing turmoil, a dynamic system in which matter and energy are in a constant state of flux.

"The soil physicist sees the radiant energy reaching the field and observes how this energy is transformed and what process it powers," said Professor Daniel Hillel of the University of Massachusetts plant and soil department.

In order to promote a better understanding of this soil Hillel describes as life sustaining, he has recently written two books entitled "Fundamentals of Soil Physics" and "Applications of Soil Physics."

"In many regions we find shocking examples of once-thriving agricultural fields reduced to desolation by man-induced erosion or salination resulting from injudicious management of the soil-water system," Hillel said.

"Far from being what we normally call dirt, the soil is the site of purification; it is where all recycling takes place and where harmful substances are reprocessed by nature and put back into living form," he said.

Hillel said that he hopes these books will help people understand phenomenon that are likely to be encountered in the field, as a further step towards the definition and eventual solution of problems having practical importance.

The first book is an exposition of the foundations of soil physics as a whole, rather than a restricted treatment of soil-water relations alone, Hillel said. The companion volume deals specifically with the field-water cycle and associated phenomenon.

The two books together provide a valuable text for upper level undergraduate engineering students, and they should serve as highly useful references for engineers and other professionals who want to know about the soil, Professor Emeritus Bernard Berger, a UMass civil engineer, said.

"It is my hope that this book might be read, not merely consulted, and that the reader might discover in it a few insights as well as facts," Hillel said.

Hillel came to the UMass plant and soil department four years ago from the University of Virginia. Before that he was a department head at Hebrew Universtiy of Jerusalem where he worked on water irrigation and conservation in arid soils.

Since teaching at UMass, Hillel has also been investigating the hydrology of soil (movement of water in soils) in sloping fields.

CARP rallies on common, supports US in El Salvador

About 30 people, mostly members of the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principle (CARP), held a rally and march on Amherst Commons yesterday in support of continued American aid to El Salvador.

Chanting "self determination for El Salvador, Soviet Union and Cuba out the door," the group burned a Soviet flag and then marched around the common.

Linda Corrigan, a member of CARP, said the rally was held to support U.S. aid to El Salvador and to "expose Soviet and Cuba aid to El Salvador through Nicaragua."

"Students are given only one side of the story and it's the false side," Corrigan said.

Several speakers, including Jose Hoquin from El Salvador, denounced Russian, Cuban and Nicaraguan involvement in that Latin American country.

A skit parodying Cuban leader Fidel Castro was staged before the speeches.

Corrigan denied that CARP was affiliated with the Unification Church but said she and other members were "moonies."

CARP has been a center of controversy since they came to campus last year.

SWA to help sponsor Third World picnic

By JOHN DIPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly last night allocated $500 for partial funding of the Fourth Annual Third World Picnic, to be held May 16 in the Southwest Residential Area.

The picnic, sponsored by the Malcolm X Center in Southwest, is also receiving money from other recognized student organizations.

In other business, Eric Spiel, treasurer for the assembly, said if the hatch were to be used as the rain location for Saturday's Southwest Community Day Concert, as is scheduled, the assembly may be liable for up to $500 in possible damages. Spiel added the assembly would also be liable if alcohol was brought into the Hatch.

After extensive dabate, a motion to allocate $325 for a band contest to be held next Friday in Southwest was defeated. Some assembly members argued that the appropriation should not be made while the assembly is held liable for possible damages to the Hatch.

The amount of student activities already planned and presently going on this week also contributed to the motion's defeat, said Southwest co-President Theresa Kolish.

While attempting to compile this material into some organized manner befor Karen Thomas, the Editor comes in, I realize that I haven't yet followed through with my plan to "reeruit" new people to take over the positions of Editor and Assoc. Editor.

The Black Affairs page, a section familiar and vital to the third world community of UMass has continued because of the commitment of very few advocates. Primarily Karen and myself.

This semester we did not receive much input to the page, (as far as articles) from the student population. If you have any qualms about what appeared or appears in Black Affairs, don't look at us, look at yourself, we can only do so much.

But since this is not a letter of reprimand, I would like to say that we need interested individuals to consider these two positions for next semester, reason being, we (Karen and I) will be leaving the University in May. To this date we do not have any names of persons willing to continue our endeavors. No, I don't want fame and recognizance for my services, since I fulfill my duties without that anyways.

My main reason for considering the Assoc. Editor's position was to help Karen put out the word. I figured I couldn't lose, because this job could only serve to help me.

While thinking about the possibility of having such a job, I had to consider many aspects. I would probably end up at the Collegian late some nights, attend staff meetings, write stories because of a lack of staff writers, and do layout of which I had only miniscule knowledge. I thought to myself, I don't know if I can handle all this, get my homework done, attend classes and still obtain a decent cumulative average.

I must admit that sometimes it does cause pressure, anxiety and even extra conferences with my professors.

Contrary to the negative proponents are the positive ones. As a result of this job, I feel that I have become better skilled and knowledgeable in several areas of newspapering. These include writing, editing and layout. I must also say that the position is a viable experience which can be added to your resume.

Nevertheless it has helped me academically because the work I do here is related to my coursework and it makes me work harder to complete assignments on deadline.

Now, I'm not saying that either of these positions are going to lead to all A's, Dean's list or whatever other achievements you might have in mind, but it cannot hinder your coursework any more than Friday and Saturday night parties (which I still enjoy, sometimes!).

The responsibility of publishing information for your readers is a commitment, one which can prove to be a valuable and testing experience.

I know it's a hard decision and like you I wasn't sure I wanted to do it. I thought, let somebody else do it, I know there will be someone else who is interested, besides, I don't have time. But you see, time must be made for activities such as these. After all, the present Editor devoted six semesters to this work. I've only invested one as Assoc. Editor and one as staff writer, but it's been worth it to me.

With only three or four weeks left to the end of the semester, I know everyone is thinking about what they will do over the summer, and how glad they will be when finals and papers are finished. But as you think about these things you should also think about what you will do upon return to the University next semester. I won't be here to remind you that the positions are open or worst yet, not available. Don't let me have to say, I told you so.

UM senior plans swim-a-thon to benefit kids' hospital ward

Swimmers and sponsors are being sought for the "Linda Polhemus Children's Swim-a-thon" to benefit the Children's Unit at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Polhemus is a University of Massachusetts senior psychology major who lost half a leg in a car accident in March, 1980.

Ted Kennedy Jr., who lost a leg to cancer, is planning to attend the fundrasier, said organizer Richard Allardice.

Proceeds from the swim-a-thon will be used to purchase medical equipment for the hospital including a sit down metric scale, and oxygen therapy crib, youth beds, and an infant respirator monitor, helpful in preventing sudden infant death.

Polhemus, who has been organizing the swim-a-thon since January, said she is planning the event to help all the children she met during her two month recuperation period at the hospital.

Polhemus, who plans to swim 200 laps, said swimmers of all ages are invited to participate and are responsible for soliciting their own sponsors.

The swim-a-thon will be held from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. at the Galbraith Center Pool at the Clarke School for the Deaf in Northampton. Swimmers, sponsors, and business interested in participating can call Linda Polhemus at 549-6872, Richard Allardice at 586-1086, or Carol Mackin at 584-7961.

Greeks award outstanding members at annual banquet

The Brad Ringquist Memorial Award was given Wednesday night to UMass student Erica Helfrich at the annual Greek Awards Banquet held on the tenth floor of the Campus Center.

Ringquist was a December graduate of the University of Massachusetts who was killed in a car accident during March break. Ringquist was a member of Beta Kappa fraternity and past Interfraternity Council president.

Helfrich, of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority and past Panhellenic Council president, received the award on the criteria of exemplifying Ringquist's qualities of leadership, dedication, respect and love for the Greek Area, said Panhellenic Vic President Leslie Hyman.

The Greek Man-of-the-Year Award went to former Student Government Association co-President Brian Burke, a member of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity for his involvement in initiating legislation to exempt Greek houses from the payment of property taxes.

Ellen Rothman of Lambda Delta Phi sorority received the Greek Woman-of-the-Year Award.

The Most Outstanding President Awards went to Nancy Maki of Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority, and Kevin Murphy of Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Pre-registration forms due May 7

Counseling for pre-registration for the upcoming semester ends tomorrow and the pre-registration forms must be turned into the Registrar's office in Whitmore by next Thursday, May 7.

Students can pick up their pre-registration forms in their major's department office. Bilingual and C.C.E.B.S. students can get their forms in their respective offices.

If the department does not have the form, the student should report to the Registrar's office in 213 Whitmore. Seniors wishing to come back for another semester should see the senior staff of the records office, also in 213 Whitmore.

The forms for students serving internships will be mailed directly to their place of internship. Non-classified students will have their forms mailed to their permanent address.

Students in the following majors must have their advisor's signature on their registration forms when they pass them in: animal science, art history, astronomy, B.D.I.C., botany, chemistry, environmental science, forestry, german, human development, math, nursing, physics and theatre.

Women's group to present workshops

The Northampton based group Women Against Violence in Pornography and Media (WAVPM) will be presenting "The Feminist Case Against Pornography," a three day series of events next week.

The series will begin at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday with a showing of "Women Against Pornography," a slide show at the Unitarian Church, 220 Main St., Northampton. Thursday will feature a panel discussion on "The Feminist Case Against Pornography," at Wright Hall Auditorium, Smith College at 8 p.m.

Friday's agenda will include a "speak-out" at the west lawn by the UMass Campus Center pond, followed by various workshops at the UMass Campus Center and a second showing of the slide show in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union Building.

All events are free and open to the public, except the panel discussion which includes a fee of $1. Volunteers are needed and are asked to contact Elizabeth Dworan, at 586-8127, or D.J. Bell at 586-4485.

Solo violinist Leroy Jenkins will be appearing as part of the "Solos and Duos" concert series at 8 p.m. tonight in the Cape Cod Lounge, free of charge.

Spectrum: 'a bevy of young artists to be reckoned with

By LYNN M. RZESZUT
Collegian Correspondent

The 23rd issue of Spectrum hit the stands, (or tables in the Campus Center, as it were), this week.

As an avid collector of literary magazines and like paraphernalia, I made my soul-cleansing $1 donation, and delved in, expecting the usual heart-rending, cranium-bending panoply of ambitious (and perhaps pretentious?) poems and stronger prose. I am happy to report this is not true.

From Mary Erin Crook's overly adrenalized Lulu to Martin Earl's imagery of a "lobotomized rooster's dreaming," to Scott McGrath's itchily enticing "Anatomy of a Computer Date", the magazine is a rich garden of wry, delightful understatement.

When I talked with Melodie Wertelet, the managing editor, she affirmed this "metamorphosis." In the past (the magazine has been in print since 1967), the format has been pretty conservative. Wertelet feels that there is a more innovative spirit present which allows for a "more risky" style of publication. This was attributed partially to the new constitution adopted by Spectrum and to the fact that the operating staff of the magazine has doubled in size.

There is also the conscious parting of the magazine from the usual dreary subjects traditionally associated with literary publications. It is no secret that people of college age have problems turning out coherent, cohesive prose. Unlike other forms, the short story offers no room for the tangents which poetry caters to, or the rambling description of novels. As a result, past prose has often reflected a Poe-esque view of life; a morbidity to which the sophomoric flesh is here. Again, a resounding cry of "Glory!" may be heard through the concourse halls. Alexandra Hanson's piece runs disjointedly through time, achieving a certain timelessness, and Seth Jacobson and Robert Stein recall images close to home, yet not. All are enjoyable, though, with new clothes uneasiness.

There are, of course, the usual standards, which is not to discredit any of the work. It all stands well on its own merits, and demonstrates a bevy of young artists who should be reckoned with in any literary circle.

The art work this year was the expected prints and photos, but the subject matter was surprisingly innovative and expressive. As a mere acolyte, I can only stand back and applaud. My personal favorites, however, are W. Lemeshevsky's acrylic Onions, and Neil Hammer's color phote, Untitled.

Spectrum, far from restricting its focus, is broadening in every sense. The magazine is sponsoring poetry readings, to which they invite all campus poets. The only stipulation for reading is that prospective readers should submit a sample of their work to one of the editors prior to the reading. The next reading will be a date to be announced during the second week of May.

There are also vague rumors of a fiction and poetry workshop and possibly an art presentation next semester.

The magazine is currently being distributed via table, or through the office, which is located around the corner from the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus Center. Submissions of art and poetry are currently being accepted towards next year's magazine, and authors are encouraged to bring their work by in person.

Correction

In an ad for the Bluewall appearing in Wednesday's Collegian, the name of the band Sans Dargent was misspelled. The band was playing in memory of the children of Atlanta, and a dollar cover was charged. In addition, the band Generic played with the band Paradox last night.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control

Happy birthday dear Caesar

While lapping away on a chocolate and vanilla covered soft-serve dairy dessert, I found myself contemplating some of the really good things that I come across every day. Advantages. Nice people around — perhaps in a hurry, but that's just the way the study world goes. Free books to borrow at the library. Really, when you want information on a lot of things, the library actually offers books for you to use. Any subject. Then there are free buses. Also coffee shops, where at practically any time you could grab a drink. And if you want something with a more generous kick, there's the Bluewall with the red doors, or the T.O.C.

Steve Masse

You could go to a different film every night of the week, or if you don't want that, you could go to a different bar every night, with live entertainment. Or you could go out and eat cheap. Free newspapers abound, trees and grass make the outside so fresh and...this is starting to look like the ramblings of a stoned person. But that's just the point. Are you getting suspicious that there's supposed to be a punch line?

I've discovered that positive behavior attracts suspicious attention. Exalting the good turns heads. Really turns heads. Look through a newspaper carefully, cover to cover. Is there any positive news other than advertising? Maybe the sports page, when somebody wins. Sometimes the comics — but that isn't news.

I had a good start this morning, knowing the C.I.A. isn't on my trail. Think of how many close friends you have who can't say that! I mean, this place is crawling with G.I.A. operatives, but I'm free. They don't want me.

Another good thing — I'm healthy. Of body, that is. I see in color, breathe deeply the fresh air I don't yet have to pay taxes on. I can walk. Really go anywhere I want. I know a few people who can't do that. I can hear music, laughing voices, honking cars, people screaming as they streak about town on warm evenings. I can swallow without choking, taste the cold freshness of water, smell the pepper on my pizza as the hot cheese sears a hole in the roof of my mouth.

So perhaps there may be a lot to bitch about. Like tax on a donut without an I.D., or the high drinking age, or C.A.R.P., or the C.I.A., or Spectrum's limited interest at everybody's expense, or Plumbley's depriving regular customers of the Wednesday night jazz, or any number of editorial fish to fillet. Editorials and demonstrations might make changes, but the most effective changes are wrought on a personal level. You know, the good work begins at home routine.

We should be more "christian" toward each other, thinking more of the person and less of the issue. Perhaps it hurts to be nice, but — well, this little story would illustrate better:

It was going to be Caesar's birthday, and all the generals got together to discuss what kind of tribute they might give. After a few hours of debate and disreputable infighting, it was agreed that the best birthday gift for Caesar would be to crucify a couple of Christian prisoners. So on the dawn of Caesar's birthday, Caesar woke up and stretched, and when he looked out the window he saw on the hill two men nailed to a pair of crosses in the glorious sunrise. He grinned from ear to ear, saying, "those sly devils, they really know how to please a guy." But — Caesar noticed that one of the men was still moving on his cross. Caesar pulled his toga on and rushed out, saw the man was tugging from side to side, mumbling something incoherently. Caesar got closer, then picked up a rock and gonked the crucified Christian over the head. But did that stop the man? No way. He kept right on going, side to side, mumbling.

So Caesar got up closer, put his ear next to the man's mouth so he could hear what was so important this man had to say, and he heard, "Happy birthday to you...happy birthday to you..."

New budget is shortsided

Education is an investment in the future of a nation. I find the current cuts in the educational budget being enacted by state and federal governments alarmingly shortsided and ultimately deleterious to our collective well-being.

Kim Rollison

Still more Christians

I found Laurie Godfrey's column (Collegian, 4/28) an expressive and well-written piece in support of Darwin's evolutionary theory. She was incorrect, however, in stating that most people in the world follow Muhammed.

According to recent statistics, of the 4.3 billion people on earth, approximately 23 percent are Christian, 14 percent Muslim, less than 1 percent Jewish and 23 percent of major east-asian religions. The remaining 40 percent practice local cults or are unaffiliated.

Skeptical of heroism

While letters to the Collegian have suggested that the dissent raised at Victor Tomseth's speech on April 22 was the work of a few "hecklers" among an otherwise receptive audience, it seemed obvious to me, in attending that evening, that a large part or even the majority of the audience came to see Tomseth with at least some skepticism over his celebrated heroism. Moreover, while the controversy raised over Tomseth's alleged involvement in U.S. counter-insurgency activities in Southeast Asia and Iran is described as "an ugly display" in a letter by Francis X. Wright Jr. (Collegian, 4/27), I would call it an applaudable attempt to preserve the dignity and self-respect of an audience and university subjected to a speech as ludicrous and evasive as Tomseth's.

Tomseth clearly avoided the question that the DVP publicity for the event had said he would address: "Why was America held hostage?" His ramblings about going to the bathroom, finding his shoes, playing backgammon, etc., not only insulted the intelligence of his audience but were flagrantly disrespectful to the Iranian people when questions concerning the torture and murder of thousands of Iranians under the Shah's regime remain unaddressed publicly in the United States.

As one of the persons holding signs protesting Tomseth's presence at UMass, I did not necessarily mean to convey a lack of sympathy for all the former hostages; some of them were victims of circumstance. One of the points we were trying to make, however, is that the activity of the CIA in Iran and individuals involved in such activity gave rise to the circumstances that led to the seizure of the American embassy in Teheran.

Apart from establishing his alleged CIA connections, we felt compelled to make Tomseth, formerly a high-ranking American political officer in Teheran, accountable for the atrocities suffered by the Iranian people during his presence in Iran before the fall of the U.S.-sponsored Pahlevi regime. Not surprisingly, Tomseth, while feeling worthy of $3000 of student funds for speaking on his ordeal as a hostage, came to UMass hardly prepared to speak to the repression and suffering of the Iranian people that the U.S. had been supporting for the three decades preceeding the flight of the Shah from Iran.

In this respect, the racist implications of a letter to the Collegian (4/27) by Steve Galvin, et. al., are clear. While they call the Iranian students who took Americans for hostages "terrorists," they go on to contend, "The world is not a perfect place and foreign policy can not be dictated by the idealistic aspirations of those who either ignore or cannot comprehend harsh reality." In other words, Americans should be isolated from the terror and violence U.S. foreign policy and the CIA perpetrate on Third World peoples, and American lives are more worthy of the well being and human dignity U.S. foreign policy objectives deny Third World peoples.

Galvin, et. al., in regard to the CIA, defend "the need for a powerful intelligence gathering organization," whereas our protests were directed against the CIA for its role as an international terrorist organization dedicated to the objectives of maintaining U.S. hegemony in Third World countries and subverting popular struggles for self-determination.

Whose liberation?

We at CARP considered it par for the course that the Collegian should print a front page "story" quoting undocumented accusations about CARP without bothering to allow us even a token reply. Representatives of Latin American Solidarity Committee and others intimidated and harrassed students who wanted to see the documentary film Revolution in El Salvador: Romance and Reality, which we were showing in the concourse Tuesday.

Is anyone who questions Marxist dogma part of the CIA? LASC and other "liberation" groups on campus obviously do not trust the ability of students to evaluate what they see and decide for themselves. (If these individuals are so much for liberation and self-determination, why do they rip up our newspapers and try to walk off with stacks of our literature? What are they afraid of? Maybe the truth?)

"I thought Bud was better, but I've been proved wrong. I chose Schlitz."

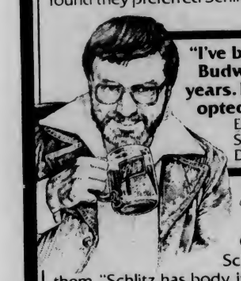
One taste of Schlitz can change a lot of minds. Recently, hundreds of loyal Budweiser and Miller drinkers tasted their beer and Schlitz side by side.

"I thought I knew my beer—I thought I'd choose Miller. But I chose Schlitz."
Charles Walker
Sworn Miller Drinker

Before the taste tests, all the participants signed affidavits swearing they were loyal Budweiser or Miller drinkers. But following the tests, lots of those tasters were surprised. Because after tasting their favorite beer and Schlitz in unlabeled mugs, many found they preferred Schlitz.

Guy D'Anna
Sworn Budweiser Drinker

"I've been drinkin' Budweiser for 25 years. But tonight I opted for Schlitz."
Elliot Marcus
Sworn Budweiser Drinker



One taste of Schlitz convinced them. "Schlitz has body, it has flavor," said Budweiser drinker James Seager. "It's real quenching and real clean and very drinkable," agreed Miller drinker Mike Manely. Budweiser drinker Robert Davis summed up the feelings of many when he said, "I'll have to stop by and pick up a six-pack of Schlitz!"

"I'm definitely surprised. I thought for sure I'd pick Miller. But I picked Schlitz."
Mike Miller
Sworn Miller Drinker

One person who wasn't surprised is Frank Sellinger. "Some people thought it was risky to taste test my Schlitz on national TV. But I was sure lots of people would pick Schlitz over their beers.

"Three years ago I came to Schlitz to make my best. And after 40 years as a master brewer, I know this is it. Taste one glass. You may like my Schlitz better than your beer, too."

Exhibit features turn-of-the-century photography

By SUSAN BARON
Collegian Staff

Sharp and simple, yet so old and so meaningful; the 70 photographs in the Howes Exhibit have a story to tell.

If you've ever leafed through an old, black and white photo album at home or tried to trace your family roots, you'd be especially appreciative of the Howe's Exhibit. When I went to see the collection, I watched 70 to 80-year-old New Englanders proudly point to their relatives in 100-year-old photographs.

Nevertheless, it isn't just the antiquity and preservation of the pictures that make them special. The photographic style is precise and skillfully revealing.

Alvah, Walter and George Howes were itinerant, commercial photographers in the western New England area. Like photographic doctors, the Howes brothers would make housecalls for 30 cents per mounted photo. Glass dry-plated negatives made the business economically possible. The realization that photography would become a major form of art led to the preservation of the Howes photos, thus making the Howes display possible.

The exhibit consists of the Howes oldest photos—vintage prints—contemporary platinum prints from the negatives. With the use of subtle bluntness, shadows and highlights, and motionless subjects, each photo reflects profound emotion, reality and life.

The Howes photographs provide an excellent documentary of social, industrial and agricultural life from 1882 to 1907. The University Gallery will be hosting the exhibit until June 7.

The content of the photographs is a lesson in New England history. Blacks, whites, adults, children and their relationships to each other are documented. Just by viewing the exhibit, one may learn about social structure and the American work ethic at the turn of the century.

The livelihood of the time period is dulled by the solemnity of the people photographed. Tradesmen in their working environment are the subject of many photos—farmers, loggers, factory workers and tobacco workers. Countless photos of families on porches are also presented. There are no pretty smiles to be found though. A sense of monotony and social responsibility prevails.

The Howes photographs provide an excellent documentary of social, industrial and agricultural life from 1882 to 1907. The pictures speak of sincere feelings. Their remarkable preservation is an added bonus.

"New England Reflections: The Howes Photographs" is sponsored by the Ashfield Historical Society. The Howes brothers were originally from Ashfield. Until June 7, the University Gallery will be hosting the exhibit. One of the largest bodies of turn-of-the-century American photography, it is certainly worth taking a look at.

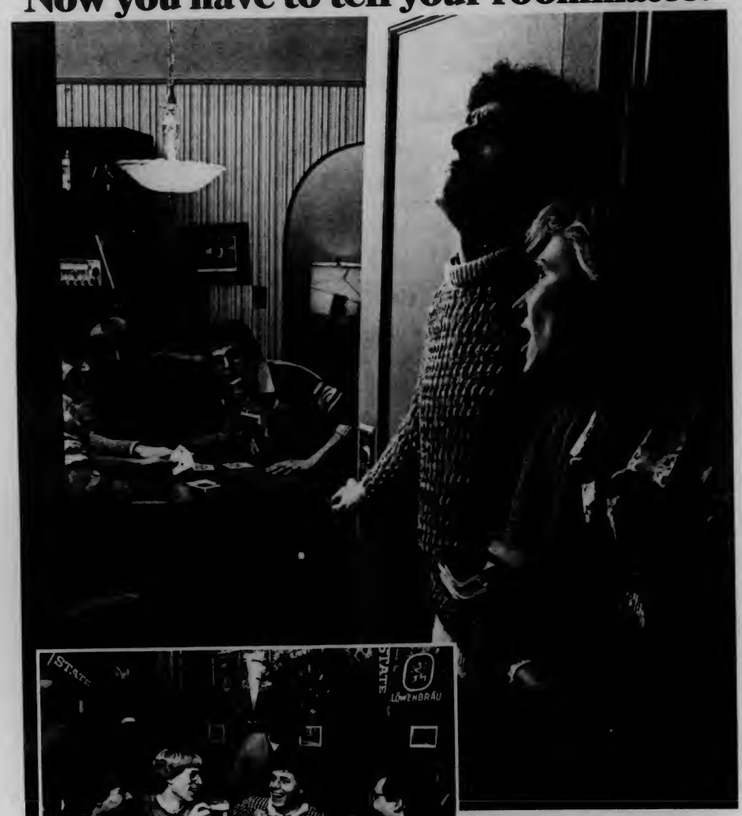
You told her you have your own place.
Now you have to tell your roommates.



You've been trying to get to know her better since the beginning of the term. And when she mentioned how hard it is to study in the dorm, you said, "My place is nice and quiet. Come on over and study with me."
Your roommates weren't very happy about it. But after a little persuading they decided the double feature at the Bijou might be worth seeing.
They're pretty special friends. And they deserve a special "Thanks." So, tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

Löwenbräu. Here's to good friends.

Michael Upchurch's first novel

Author recalls scouting days

Jamboree (Random House)
By Michael Upchurch

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

Michael Upchurch's first novel "Jamboree" is a funny, gritty, and lyrical account of what happens to men and boys when they decide to take part in that modern ritual of masculine adolescence: the Boy Scout Jamboree.

Many males, at one time or another, have come into contact with that perverse but very real portion of our society—the Boyscouts. Many of us have memories of smoky campfires, leaky tents, rancid latrines, and tentmates with either a severe emotional disorder or, even more likely, a nervous condition that prevents his bodily functions from operating on an even keel. This is the territory that Upchurch explores in his book.

Although his style often becomes congested with excess background information and many vague suggestions that are never properly cleared up, we are treated to a funny, poignant, but still relatively accurate description of the typical Boy Scout weekend.

In this case, Troop 476 of the Northern New Jersey Council embarks on a trip to the Sandy Hook section of the Jersey shore. The purpose of this outing is to formally take part in a Scouting Jamboree, an exercise designed to pit individuals against one another in such basic scouting skills as wood gathering, fire building, basket weaving, tent pitching, tent ditching, vandalism, petty theft and assault.

It is through these little competitions that we are supposed to get to know the motives and characters of the fathers and sons that make up Troop 476. For instance, one man spends his entire day digging a hole in the ever collapsing beach sand long after he has forgotten his reason for doing so. Another man, who had never been in the military, drills the scouts in marching in complicated circular and figure-eight patterns for no possible reason whatsoever. The scouts themselves escape at the first opportunity from the day's formal activities in order to explore nearby air raid bunkers where, unsupervised and overzealous, they are befallen by physical harm.

Unfortunately, in regard to clarity and pacing, this book often leaves much to be desired. But for all of you ex-scouts out there in the UMass community with a trace of nostalgia in your cold, cynical, and apathetic hearts, this book might prove to be a welcome relief not only for the story that it conveys, but for the memories that it might bring back to the surface.

Paula Natale, playing number three singles, went three sets with Nancy Stroker before losing 5-7, 6-3, 6-4. Both players exhibited similar playing styles with strong forehand shots that were well placed. Natale battled back from a 2-5 deficit in the third set to reach 4-5 but then made some crucial mistakes that ended her comeback attempt.

The only UMass win came from number four Sue Lochiatto over Kate McGill 2-6, 6-3, 6-4. Lochiatto was able to adapt her style to McGill's after the first set and win the remaining sets.

"I'm not used to playing people who slice the ball and she sliced everything," Lochiatto said. "After the first set, I tried to hit deeper balls with more pace and more her around."

Brown seemed to be even stronger in doubles play, taking both matches played. The number one doubles team of Carolyn Tarbell and Helen Najarian fell to Brown's Stroker and McGill 6-2, 6-2. Lynn O'Sullivan and Didi Courtright at number two lost 6-3, 6-1 after a strong start in the opening set.

"It was our best match against them so far," coach John Beal said. "Prior to this, the netwomen had won only one set in two meetings. Yesterday they won three sets."

The netwomen will play their final match of the season Saturday. It will be a home match against the University of Rhode Island (Division I) at 1:00 p.m. This fall UMass defeated URI 8-1. Beal feels the team will have little trouble with URI.

Chimps chomp Harvard, host Canadian teams

While the Gorillas were unleashing goal after goal en route to their 20-7 win over Harvard on Wednesday, their little brother team - the Chimps, were dishing out about the same thing to the Crimson JV squad.

The University of Massachusetts JV lacrosse team (5-1), was two shy of equaling the varsity effort, dumping Harvard 18-7 in Cambridge Wednesday.

The little brother team comes complete with a little brother - Paul Weller who proved that scoring ability runs in the family, with four goals and two assists against the Crimson. Tom Conner added three goals and two assists.

The Chimps' only loss was to Brown and wins were over Boston College, Navy Prep, Dean Junior College, Williams and the most recent over Harvard.

"They beat the MIT (Massachusetts Institute of Technology) varsity during the pre-season," JV coach Len Caffrey said. "If there were JV rankings, we'd be among the top in New England."

The Chimps will host a double header tomorrow morning on the upper Boyden field playing East Dale Collegiate High School at 10:30 and McLaughlin High School immediately following. Both teams are from Canada where high school includes grade 13. They are on tours of New England and play in Longmeadow on Sunday.

The Mass JV squad travels to Westfield State on May 7 and returns home for the final game of the season against the Dartmouth JV team on May 16.

Twins dump Sox, 8-4

BOSTON (AP)—Roy Smalley hit a two-run homer and Gary Ward and Glenn Adams drove in a pair of runs apiece Thursday night as the Minnesota Twins handed Boston its fourth consecutive defeat, beating the Red Sox 8-4.

Smalley drilled his sixth homer of the year high into the screen in left-center off Frank Tanana, 0-3, in the first inning. He later singled and walked twice, scoring after each of the walks.

Ward capped a three-run second with a two-run single, and Adams singled with the bases loaded in the fifth for two runs off reliever Bob Stanley.

Winner Roger Erickson, 1-2, was tagged for a first-inning run as Dwight Evans led off with a double and scored on a single by Dave Stapleton. That run snapped Boston's scoreless string at 28 innings.

UNIVERSITY LIFEGUAD TESTING will be conducted for summer and/or fall selection and employment. Candidates must bring their current Advanced Lifesaving, CPR and First Aid certificates. There will be a written test, a 500 yard timed swim and a water rescue. Allow at least one hour for completion of the test. You must attend a testing session on either Friday May 1, 2:15 to 4 p.m. at Boyden pool or Saturday May 2, 10 a.m. to 12 noon at NOPE pool. For more information contact Valerie Turtle Aquatics Director at 545-2845, or the Lifeguard Supervisors—Mary Chaffee at 256-8410 and Nancy Field at 546-3209.

Men's and women's co-rec SOFTBALL PLAYOFF POSITIONS will be drawn on May 4, 1981 at 7 p.m. in the intramural office. All are welcome.

Undergraduate students are required to RETURN GYM EQUIPMENT, clothes and locks signed out this semester to the Boyden or NOPE equipment rooms no later than 5 p.m., Thursday, May 28, 1981. Equipment, clothes and locks not turned in will be billed to the student through the Bursar's Office.

The NAIADS will perform the third of four shows tonight at 8 p.m. at NOPE pool and the fourth tomorrow night.

UCLA Summer Sessions 1981

If you're looking for a change of academic or geographic environment, consider studying this summer at a renowned center of learning—UCLA

Choose from 400 courses in a wide spectrum of disciplines – everything from Anthropology to Theater Arts, with more than 40 other fields of study in between.

First Session June 29-August 7

Second Session August 10-September 18

Summer Sessions courses are open to all college students. Most classes are small, allowing you more time to talk with faculty and other students. During leisure hours, you can enjoy UCLA's many recreational facilities and cultural events. And the summertime attractions of Southern California.

Special this summer is the Asian Performing Arts Summer Institute. You can participate in this 5½-week program on the classical arts in Japan. Five of that country's great master artists/teachers will create an active learning environment during intensive daily sessions on the technique and repertoire of Japanese theater and dance. Performances and a three-day international conference culminate the program.

For your free copy of the 1981 Summer Sessions catalog, clip the coupon. Or call (213) 825-6410.

B. Bennett Grand-slam doesn't help, Mass falls in extra innings

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

ALBANY, NY - The feeling that it doesn't matter how many runs they score, is becoming more apparent every game to the University of Massachusetts baseball team. In their last three games, UMass has scored 33 runs, including 12 in last night's 13-12 extra inning loss to Siena College in the first game of a twi-night double-header.

Of these three games UMass has salvaged only one win. Offensively, UMass has been unable to counteract their inability to prevent run scoring.

The batmen host the University of Rhode Island tomorrow at 1 at Lorden Field. UMass is playing its second double-header against the Rams.

Last night's story was much of the same.

UMass staked a 2|0 lead in the first inning as lead-off second baseman Dean Bennett homered off starter and eventual winner, Siena's Tom Bedard. (Brother of UMass assistant coach Jim). Bennett's home run, the team's 25th of the season, broke the UMass single-season home run record, which stood at 24.

Third baseman Barry Bennett scored the inning's second run when he walked, stole second base, and came across on catcher Jim Aulenback's ground ball to the shortstop.

Minuteman starter Dan Cook lasted through three and one third innings before reliever Steve Drelick (0-4) came in to end a five-run Siena outburst and a 5-2 Siena lead.

UMass came back in the top of the fourth and added six more runs.

Rightfielder Keith Lovellette walked to lead off the inning and was brought in by leftfielder John Kraham's fourth home run of the season. The attack continued as designated hitter Kelly McDonald was walked, Dean Bennett reached base on an error, and both baserunners were brought in by a towering double by centerfielder Mark Litano. Litano leads the team with ten doubles for the season.

Aulenback followed Litano with another double and scored the final run of the inning on a sacrifice fly by shortshop Vin Bonnanno.

The UMass lead was shortlived hovever, as Siena (11-14) scored three more in the bottom of the fourth to tie the game at eight apiece.

UMass fell behind 10-8 when Siena added two more in the bottom of the sixth.

Celebrating his 23rd birthday, Barry Bennett smashed a grand slam over the leftfield fence in the top of the seventh to give UMass a 12-10 lead.

Reliever Drelick was unable to hold the lead surrendering a two-run shot to Siena centerfielder Chuck Sohl to send the game into extra innings. Sohl was two for three in the game including another home run in the fourth inning.

UMass was unable to score in their half of the eighth. With one out Siena's second baseman Ken Hayner doubled to left centerfield and came around to score the winning run on teammate Khris Clemens' dribbler single to centerfield.

The Minutemen's record presently stands at 14-16. (Before last night's second game.) Lefthander sophomore Adam Grossman was scheduled to start the nightcap of the doubleheader against Siena.

Tomorrow in an Eastern Eight game, the Minutemen host the Rams of The University of Rhode Island for a doubleheader scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. at Lorden Field.

The fourth-ranked Gorillas travel to West Point today for a battle with the Army Cadets tomorrow at 12. Army is coming off an upset over third-ranked Syracuse University.

Football scrimmage

Red-White game tomorrow

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team will hold its annual Red-White intrasquad game tomorrow at 2 p.m. in Alumni Stadium, marking the end of its four-week spring drills. Admission is free.

UMass head coach Bob Pickett had over 100 candidates at this year's workouts, including 18 starters from last year's 7-3 Minuteman squad. Nine of those starters belong to the defensive unit that led the nation (Division 1-AA) in total defense last year.

The game involves full contact and the only difference between a regulation game is that kick returns are not used to avoid unnecessary injury. Each series of downs will begin at the offensive team's 35-yard line.

Team selections were made with a draft system, with the entire squad being divided "down the middle," according to Pickett. Co-captains Jerry Gordon, a senior guard, and linebacker Pet DiTomasso will lead the respective teams.

Coincidentally, one offensive backfield will contain the heart of next fall's Minuteman offense, quarterback Dean Pecevich and All-Yankee Conference tailback Garry Pearson, who was voted Most Valuable Player by his teammates last year.

The offense, led by Pearson, whose 92 points last year was second in the nation among Div. 1-AA scorers, returns after losing just two players who started the last three games of the season (fullback Brian Heyworth and tight end Mike Barbiasz).

"We've had a good four weeks," Pickett said. "The Red-White game is always a good way to finish up spring drills."

This year's spring drils were characteristically tough for a team that will be trying to re-capture the Yankee Conference crown, a title UMass failed to win for only the first time in four years.

"It's been rough this year," Pearson said of this spring's camp. "I've been going up against the first team offense, and I'll tel you, we've got a few bruises."

If it will ease the pain, UMass also has two former starters, including 1979 All-Yankee Conference noseguard Ray Benoit, who sat out last year with a knee injury. Along with Benoit's return, Mike Churna, a 6-foot-2, 230-pound guard who started the first three games of last season before sustaining a knee injury, is back.

NUMBER ONE SWING — Elizabeth Sullivan, the number one singles player on the University of Massachusetts tennis team, returns a shot against Brown's Ellie Freimar in yesterday's meet on the upper Boyden courts. Freimar won the match 6-4, 6-3, and Brown University won the meet

Netwomen lose, home meet tomorrow

By ANTONY KUNDERT

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team was defeated 6-3 by a very strong squad from Brown University yesterday afternoon on Boyden courts.

The netwomen actually won only one of these three matches. Brown was forced to forfeit their number six singles and number three doubles matches because they were short one player. They usually carry a six women squad that plays both singles and doubles matches (repeats).

"It was an unforeseen circumstance," Brown coach Bill Culle said. "On of our ladies just didn't show up."

This was Brown's final meet of the season and they finish at 7-8. UMass' record drops to 3-4, with one meet remaining. Brown is a Division I school while Massachusetts plays in Division II.

The netwomen did well in singles play, winning one match and staying close in several others. Number one singles Elizabeth Sullivan played a good match but lost to Brown's Ellie Freimar 6-4, 6-3.

"My shots were too shallow and she was able to return them at angles that were hard to volley," Sullivan said. "I need to get my weight forward."

Library repair to begin soon

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

Repairs on the University of Massachusetts 28-story library tower will begin the first week of June and administrators hope the tower will resume its role as the main library in November 1982, said Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty. The library has been in limited use since the fall of 1979, when engineers deemed its facade was unsafe because of the possibility of falling bricks.

The engineering firm of Clevardon, Varney and Pike of Boston will begin testing June 1 and complete a preliminary design by June 7, Beatty said.

A 10-foot wide section of the south side of the tower, from the plaza base to the top of the library, will be repaired this summer and carefully observed next fall for its effectiveness, said Director of News Bureau Arthur Clifford.

"We'll spend a season observing the repairs in terms of all of the factors that could have some effect, such as temperature and wind," Clifford said.

A complete design based on these observations will be formulated by February 2, 1982, said Beatty, and the job will then be contracted out to a builder.

The tower library opened in May 1973 and first displayed building problems that year when brick chips began to fall from the facade. After several repairs, the library was closed in August 1979 when an engineer reported the building unsafe for constant use.

The state legislature has given the Bureau of Building Construction $2.5 million to repair the tower. However, Clifford said it is impossible to set an exact figure for the repair costs because "we don't know what repair technique will be appropriated."

Problems plague Grad Center; money for upgrade allocated

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part series examining continued health and ventilation problems in the Graduate Research Center Towers.

In an effort to eliminate potential health hazards in the Graduate Research Center at the University of Massachusetts, the state legislature has appropriated close to $2 million to upgrade the building's existing ventilation system, although many workers there said they believe other areas need attention if the building is to be made as safe as possible.

The state began investigating hazards three years ago when complaints of menstrual irregularities by women who work in the building and complaints by men of fatigue and headaches forced health officials to temporarily close the building. The investigations led to the allocations at the last legislative session.

Incidents remain unexplained

Meanwhile, records of the Environmental Health and Safety agency on campus, which oversees general health conditions, show there have been incidents in the building which remain unexplained. But agency officials say they are unsure how or if the problems are connected to the nine-year-old ventilation system.

In February, a researcher performing a routine experiment spilled mercaptan, a noxious sulfur-containing compound. Since the experiment was done under a proper ventilation hood, the chemical should have been sucked into the hood and out of the building. However, both officials and students did not know the hood was not operating correctly, and within five minutes after the mercaptan spilled it was detected in a neighboring closet. Subsequently the odor spread three floors above the lab and three floors below. The compound was also traced in a different GRC tower.

Environmental, Health and Safety officials said they have received "hundreds of odor complaint calls." What makes this incident unusual is that this particular odor was tracked back to its origin. Most are not.

UMass Health Services Director Barry Averill said he thinks the major risks stem from practice in the labs since the equipment is checked thoroughly.

"Workers who are using the toxic materials work under hoods which have 100 percent removal capacity. We constantly check the performance of the hoods and this is indicated on the hood. If precautions are followed there should be no problem," he said.

Professors disagree

But professors disagree with the assumption that lab procedures are the ultimate problem. "There is no doubt that people have been outrageous in bad laboratory procedures, but this by no means is the whole problem," said biochemsitry professor Ed Westhead.

Professor Bruce Jacobson, also in the biochemistry department, said the administrators who place the blame solely on lab procedures are trying to 'pass the buck.'

"You don't know, when a chemical spills in your own specific area, if you've actually cleaned it all up. You might be killing people and not even know it. If the mercaptan chemical which spread throughout the building had been really toxic we might have had dead people," he said.

"You might be killing people and not even know it. If the mercaptan chemical which spread throughout the building had been really toxic we might have had dead people."

—Professor Bruce Jackson

Al Sorenson, and Environmental Health and Safety employee in charge of investigating odor complaints, said nobody knows where the odors are coming from, or how they are speading.

"We get a lot of gas smelling calls which could be less harmful or more harmful than gas. There's a chance that you can detect a fraction of a part per billion. As far as I know there has never been an incident where gas has been released in the building causing harm," he said.

Thousands march in anti-war demonstration

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

Arlington, VIRGINIA—Crowds of banner-waving and chanting protesters from around the nation marched to the front lawn of the Pentagon yesterday in what march officials have termed the largest anti-war demonstration in over 10 years.

The march was organized by the "People's Anti-War Mobilization" (PAM) and endorsed by over 800 organizations and individuals representing many sectors of the progressive movement.

Two bus loads and several van loads of Amherst and Northampton residents left for Washington Saturday to participate in the demonstration.

An estimated 50,000 to 100,000 people participated in the march, which began in a large field by the Lincoln Memorial and continued for one mile over the Arlington Memorial Bridge to the Pentagon headquarters in Virginia.

The protesters were met at the Pentagon by about 20 anti-war speakers and entertainers. Dr. Michio Kaku, a professor of nuclear physics at New York City University and a reknowned militant leader in the anti-nuclear movement, compared the U.S. Administration to the junta, the ruling party in El Salvador.

"What does the junta and our administration have in common?" he asked. "They are both big and stupid; both are anti-life and murderers."

Gwendolyn Weindling, a militant lesbian feminist, from Dykes Againt Racism Everywhere (DARE) said the demonstration was the first with homosexuals and lesbians as a visible force. "We say no to racism, sexism, the war build-up and gay and lesbian oppression. We are not here to ask for tolerance, we are going to fight," she said.

Bella Abzug, president of Woman's USA and former New York Congresswoman recalled a demonstration 10 years before, on May 3, when she spoke on the steps of the Capitol addressing Vietnam War protesters. "When we protested 10 years ago, Nixon and Mitchell watched from the balcony as 13,000 peaceful demonstrators were arrested. But we've seen what's happened to them.

"If we've learned anything from the Vietnam War we learned the time to stop the war is before it begins," Abzug said.

Ranging from college students to union workers, the protesters included 200 busloads of people from New York City, 30 of which were packed with union workers.

Sands lapses into coma; followers urged to stay calm

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Jailed IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands was reported to have lapsed into a coma in the 64th day of his hunger strike yesterday. But his family and Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, the fiery Irish nationalist, urged Sands' followers to stay calm.

Sinn Fein, political arm of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, said Sands became comatose before dawn and remained unconscious. British authorities said the 27-year-old guerrilla was "asleep for most of the day" but refused comment on whether he was in a coma.

Sinn Fein said it got word that Sands was in a coma from Oliver Hughes, who visited Sands around noon. Hughes is the brother of Francis Hughes, 25, also reported nearing death in the 50th day of a hunger strike at the Maze prison.

Oliver Hughes told a rally of thousands of Irish Republican Army supporters later in the day that Sands was lying on a waterbed with a large golden crucifix in his hand.

"On my way out, I saw Bobby Sands' door was open and I went through and saw him," Oliver Hughes said. "I was frightened. I thought he was dead. His eyes were closed, there was no movement in his body, his face was a blackish color. Bobby Sands was lying on his back just like a dead man."

Sands' mother, Rosaleen, told reporters before entering the Maze, "My son is dying. I think he is coming up to near the end. I can't see how he can last much longer. I appeal to everyone to stay calm and not to get involved in any fighting."

Her call was echoed by Mrs. McAliskey, who told 15,000 people at a rally outside Toome, 30 miles from Belfast, to "hold your tempers."

"I don't want a single riot, a single stone thrown. We don't want any fire bombs thrown," Mrs. Devlin said.

Nato and USSR plan arms reduction talks

ROME — It is highly likely that NATO will soon announce plans to start nuclear missile reduction talks with the Soviet Union, the secretary general of the Western alliance, Joseph Luns, said yesterday.

Luns said announcement of a date for talks could come at a two-day meeting of 15 North Atlantic Treaty Organization foreign ministers beginning today. Luns said, however, the date would more likely be announced after a meeting of defense ministers in Brussels next week.

"Practically all nations of the alliance wish the resumption of talks as soon as possible and I assure you the U.S. government is very aware of this," Luns told a news conference.

Luns said that Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and the other foreign ministers in Rome will hold a closed-door session without a fixed agenda to discuss current relations between the alliance and the Soviet bloc.

The United States has been under pressure from West Germany, the Netherlands, Britain, Italy and other countries to open negotiations with the Soviet Union to reduce the number of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

Begin says U.S. peace effort failed in Israeli-Syrian crisis

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Menachem Begin said yesterday that U.S. efforts to defuse the Israeli-Syrian crisis have made no progress. He also said Syria probably has moved anti-aircraft missiles into Lebanon and called it a "very grave development."

Begin spoke in an Israel Radio interview during a break in a five-hour cabinet meeting where he reported on the Lebanese situation along with Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir and the military chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan.

Asked if there had been any progress toward a solution, Begin replied, "No, not yet at all." He said the U.S. ambassador in Syria had not been able to speak with President Hafez Assad and had been relegated to dealing with officials in the Syrian Foreign Ministry.

Last week Israel and Syria edged toward war in a conflict of interests over eastern Lebanon, where Israel's Christian allies are besieged by Syrian forces. Israeli jets shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships in the area last Tuesday and the next day Syria moved antiaircraft missiles into the region to block Israeli air superiority, witnesses said.

People of Poland stage unprecedented celebration

WARSAW, Poland—With the unprecedented backing of the communist government, hundreds of thousands of Poles joined in colorful ceremonies yesterday marking the anniversary of the 1791 democratic constitution, an important symbol of Polish independence.

"For the first time in 35 years we are celebrating in the whole of Poland the 190th anniversary of the constitution," said state-run Warsaw Television. Ceremonies took place in dozens of cities, and in Warsaw, the Sejm — or Parliament — was opened to the public.

U.S. failures stir faculty fight

U.S. leadership is root of problem

By STEPHEN M. PORTER
Collegian Staff

The leadership of American institutions bears heavy responsibility for the United States' economic and political problems because of the stress on short-term profits, lack of innovation and inability to recognize the need for change, say three University of Massachusetts professors.

"Massive changes in the way we do business and the way we organize ourselves are essential if we are to avoid catastrophe," said Professor Leonard Rapping of the University of Massachusetts Economics Department.

Rapping, along with management professor A. Elliot Carlisle and political science professor Jean Elshtain will argue the failure of U.S. institutional leadership and educational systems in serving society in a faculty debate tomorrow.

Carlisle is the most critical of business managers, who he feels have destroyed the competitiveness of U.S. industries because of their reluctance to take risks and seek innovations.

"The emphasis U.S. managers have been placing on short-run objectives has seriously damaged their firms' ability to compete in the global markets," Carlisle said in a recent interview. "They are reluctant to invest in research and development because to do so would be to reduce short run profits."

The way the highly automated Japanese auto industry is displacing the U.S. auto industry offers a perfect example of how the emphasis on short-run profits is hurting U.S. business, Carlisle said.

The Japanese will sacrifice short-run profitability "just to get into the market," he said. "They are much more capital intensive."

As a result of our short-run emphasis, he said, "our plants are rapidly becoming obsolete."

Rapping also criticized the lack of innovation and imagination of the U.S. institutional leadership. However, he said, the U.S. leadership must not only learn to be more competitive but must learn to seek a new direction.

"Growth as we've known it is over, it is in the past. We've got to recognize that," he said.

There is a need to channel research and development into new areas, into new ways to conserve energy, grow grain and restructure our lifestyles, Rapping said.

Elshtain said she sees many of society's problems resulting from a "narrowly construed notion of what counts as success."

She said success is "primarily measured by the market" and it ignores the "larger social purpose." It ignores what human beings "lives are forced to be like."

However, Elshtain is reluctant to point the finger of blame solely at the institutional leadership.

Their ideas, she said, are only part of a larger "culture of productivity" where the idea is "that evidence of growth is evidence that everything is in good shape."

"These kinds of ideas are particularly destructive when they permeate educational structures. Education tends to be very narrowly gauged," she said.

"Ideally, we should be thinking about sustaining a way of life that doesn't turn on the assumption...of eternal material prosperity," she said.

There is a need to think "less in terms of profit and more in terms of social good," she said.

Editor's note:

A faculty debate on "Failures of American Institutions and Their Executives to Serve Society" will be held tomorrow night at 7:30 in room 120 of the School of Business Administration.

The debate has been organized by Dean Harry Allan, of the School of Business, after management professor Robert McGarrah approached him with the idea.

The following articles examine the pro and con side of the debate.

Prof. George Odiorne, panelist

Turmoil reflects changing society

By MICHAEL SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Economic and political turmoil in America today cannot be blamed solely on business and education, but reflect the gyrations of a changing society, according to three University of Massachusetts professors.

To put the onus for the country's instabilities on business managers and educators is "far fetched" said management Professor George Odiorne. Sociology Professor Jay Demerath called it "myopic", while International Programs Director Barbara Burns said there is "room for improvement."

Odiorne, Demerath, and Burn will argue in support of American business in faculty debate tomorrow night.

Panelists speaking on Americans business' failure will be economics Professor Leonard Rapping, management Professor A. Elliot Carlisle, and political science Professor Jean Elshtain.

Critics contend that the state of the economy, endless inflation and rising energy costs can be attributed to business institutions' leadership who are interested only in short-term monetary goals and individual achievement.

But panelists, interviewed over the week-end, arguing in support of American business, disagreed and stressed the need for more interaction between the academic and business sectors of society, both on a larger scale and locally at the University.

There is a "yawning difference" between failing to serve society and failing to meet the expectations of some intellectuals, said Odiorne.

"I don't see dismal failure, but I don't see success that can't be improved upon," said Burn.

She also said academia needs "a better understanding of business," and suggested exposing students to more business oriented writing through the rhetoric department.

The three panelists also agreed that academia holds a bias toward business and often discourages most of its "brightest" students from pursuing a business career.

This week's cover story in Time magazine examines the hypothesis that many business schools are graduating students more interested in short-term gains rather than long-term stability.

Since these persons are likely to end up in positions of institutional power, some critics contend they are responsible for the current state of the economy.

"There are not enough people going into business who go against the grain of business," said Demerath, who added that academics should take some responsibility for this.

Demerath also said it was unfair to make comparisons between American economic stability and Japanese economic stability.

"The idea of short-term profits would be alien to them because they are much more family oriented, and you're talking about a society that has different values. The welfare of the business firm is linked to welfare of the individual and to the society. A lot of what we like about our business is their short-sightedness," said Demerath.

Math Prof Whaples dies at age of 66

Memorial Services will be held tomorrow for University of Massachusetts mathematics professor George Whaples who died Saturday at his home in Amherst at the age of 66.

Whaples suffered heart failure, five months after he had a heart attack in December.

Whaples, a native of Neponset, Ill., had been a professor in the mathematics and statistics department at UMass since 1966. He had previously been a faculty member at the University of Indiana, Notre Dame, the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Southern California, the University of Wisconsin, Johns Hopkins University, and was a member of the Institute of Advanced Studies.

Professor Whaples received a Bachelor of Arts in Mathematics from Knox College in Illinois in 1935. He received his Masters degree and then his Doctorate in Mathematics from the University of Wisconsin in 1937 and 1939 respectively.

He was the principle lecturer in 1966 for the National Science Foundation summer program at Bowdoin College and was a noted authority in the fields of algebraic number theory and class field theory.

He was also the former editor of the Duke University Mathematics Journal and the Proceedings of the American Mathematical Society..

Memorial Services will be held at the Jewish Community of Amherst at 742 Main St. tomorrow at 11 a.m.

He leaves behind his wife Miriam, a UMass music professor, two daughters and one son.

Looking back

By Carla Lesh

The May 6, 1948 issue of the Massachusetts Collegian reported that Dr. Ralph Van Meter had been named the 13th President of the University of Massachusetts. Before his appointment, Van Meter taught at the University for 31 years starting as an instructor in food conservation, then as a professor of pomology (the science of fruit growing) and finally becoming dean of the school of horticulture.

The Collegian warned that the "ringing of the Chapel chimes on some sunny after this month will be the signal for an afternoon of spring fun for the entire University." The exact time and place of Spring Day was to be kept a secret until the chapel bells rang. When they did, it would be an afternoon "for students to forget their troubles and to enjoy the healthy atmosphere of a good spring day." Free lunches and sports equipment would be provided.

Mother's Day drew a crowd of 300 mothers to the campus tours and open houses at the fraternities and dormitories where banquets and buffet dinners were served for the visiting mothers. The day ended with a campus play where President Van Meter, in the audience "received a great ovation, this being one of his first appearances since being made president of the U of M."

The Second Annual Bay State Dairy Classic was held at the "U of M" campus that week. The 51 students participating were judged on the excellence of the "heifer of his choice" which had been trained, washed and groomed for three weeks preceding the contest.

Commencement speaker named

Ellen Davis, a senior from Boxford, has been selected to be this year's University of Massachusetts student commencement speaker, it was announced this weekend.

Davis, a journalism-political science major, said her speech "summarizes what are the main influences" on the class of 1981 and also addresses the world problems this class will face. Davis said she will urge that these problems not be solved "with simple answers and old solutions."

Davis was selected out of 18 applicants, according to Bryan C. Harvey, staff assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs.

Arthur Clifford of the UMass News Bureau said yesterday although he knew the identity of this year's honorary degree recipient, he would not disclose it at this time.

Weekend concert crowds calm

The Southwest and Orchard Hill/Central concerts this weekend presented no major problems other than parking, University of Massachusetts police reported yesterday. Despite the drinking, the crowd was in a "mellow" mood, police said.

In another incident a hit and run accident in lot 44 was reported at 1 p.m. Satuday police said. The parked car received an estimated $600 damage, they said.

In another weekend hit and run accident a car took off after hitting another car at the entrance of the parking lot of John Adams tower in the Southwest Residential Area. Police said there was an estimated $200 damage in the incident.

Police aiso reported some $200 damage to a car parked in the Fraternity-Sorority park as a result of vandalism. Police said the windows were smashed and the incident is under investigation.

Car accident hospitalizes seven

A University of Massachusetts student and six other persons were sent to Cooley Dickinson Hospital after they were involved in a head-on car accident yesterday morning, Amherst police said.

The accident occured in the westbound lane of College Street, Amherst, when a car driven by Thomas F. Brennan, 18 of Milton, headed east, collided with a car driven by Frederick Washburn, 19, of Amherst, headed west, police said.

Brennan was cited for driving under the influence of alcohol, driving to endanger, and failing to stay within a marked line, police said, and is reportedly in satisfactory condition with internal injuries, a hospital supervisor said.

Washburn and Joel Sears, 20, of Amherst, a passenger in Washburn's car, were treated and released, a hospital supervisor said.

Michael Conley, 18, of Milton, Kevin O'Donnell, 18 of Milton, John Devine, 19, of UMass, and Joanne Watson, 18 of Milton, all passengers in Brennan's car, were treated and released, a hospital supervisor said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

It makes it all so much easier

You had to be there by 3:30, or you were stuck somewhere out in the boondocks, to the sides where you really couldn't see the television all that well. So, people were there, on the rag-tag couches of the Campus Center, waiting for the Celtics-Philadelphia basketball game to come on the mounted 24-inch TV.

"There's no way I was going to come strolling in 20 minutes late and get myself a seat," said the black kid with high leather Adidas sneakers. "For once in my life, I'm early."

Kevin Cullen

There was something appropriately absurd about a group of about 75 people of every conceivable background crowding around one television set at a university of this size to watch a basketball game played 100 miles away, in stinking, seething Boston Garden.

"Do you know what I'm supposed to be doing right now?" said one guy, with a beard that's seen better days. "I'm supposed to be working on a presentation I'm giving for a class in three days. Three days, and I haven't done any of the reading. And, what am I doing? I'm watching the Celtics game."

Watching the Celtics game. Just how many people were doing that yesterday afternoon? How many were outside, taking in Central/Orchard Hill Day? How many were really concerned with school work?

"What?" asked one woman, who had been on the same couch, the same place for game two and three of the seven-game playoff series. "Maybe I should be doing work. I know I have enough of it to catch up on. I'm graduating in a month—or at least I'm supposed to."

Or at least I'm supposed to. At least, a lot of us are supposed to. But that all seemed so far away when the Celtics were down by 11 points yesterday. If they had lost, would we have felt the same about everything the rest of the semester, or the rest of the year?

Of course, there are Philadelphia fans up here somewhere, though they were much more in evidence during the earlier games than downstairs in the Campus Center yesterday.

They knew.

And when Larry Bird hit the pull-up number off the glass that put the Celtics up to stay, it was a repeat of a repeat:

The Red Sox-Yankees playoff in October 1978.

The Bruins-Canadiens game two springs ago.

The USA Olympic hockey team at Lake Placid.

The names change, the cheering never does: nor does the fact that after the cheering's over, you have to go back to the books.

But, for some strange reason it seems a bit easier now. After enduring two hours of Miller beer commercials, Dick Stockton's errors, Kevin Loughery's stevedore accent, and one of the better pro basketball games and series of recent history, lasting three and half more weeks at this nuthouse is nothing.

And now that 10-page paper which is half your grade doesn't seem quite so traumatic.

Kevin Cullen is the associate executive editor of the Collegian, he is also $20 richer today

"WHY, IT'S A MESSAGE FROM DR. REAGAN. HE'S PUTTING US ON A STRICT DIET."

Guest columnist The bashing must end!

For no reason at all, you were attacked in broad daylight by several teenagers with bats. Now, with your ribs taped and your jaw wired, you have a lot of time to think about why.

Many people you know have had some of the same treatment; both your friends and their friends, and there's a lot of people who'll tell you that it's not much different anywhere else. No one has any answers, and no one ever seems to get caught for the violence.

Maybe it's the codeine, but you can't seem to focus for very long on why you should be battered to the sidewalk by youths who ignore your wallet and jeer at your pain. But then, there's no reason why a man should die for walking into the wrong bar, though (you know) it happened in Oregon recently. Neither can anyone tell you why the two women next door sleep with a loaded gun on their night table, and dread the next phone call.

John C. Parker

It's coming home to you that violence is an ugly fact of your life, and you're just coming to terms with the feeling that you, personally, are a target. You're visible, you're different, and they think you won't fight back. It doesn't help that all concerned know the cops don't care; at the precinct, they nearly wrote your statement for you, they'd heard the same so often before. And you almost spoke their thoughts, that it was all just too damn bad for you, and they'll spend their time on the important cases.

You decide not to dwell on the unpleasant; you read the papers to pass the time. All the news seems bad: attacks have gone up 430 percent since last May in Los Angeles; they're increasing in New York, Toronto, Houston, and most other major cities, and have been doing so for years. Boston, for all its supposed openness, is no exception—several murders in the Fens remain unsolved. Revere Beach and Braintree, though lesser names, fit the pattern as well. Even in Provincetown, long regarded as something of a safe harbor, it promises to be a long, hot summer.

You shift uncomfortably. Every so often the feelings of helplessness and rage cloud your mind, and you struggle to find something positive in all this, some particle of hope. The most important thing is that you now understand that you do have choices. You know you can make that first move to fight your own powerlessness and sense of violation, if only you decide to.

The successes that have been made in the face of this violence have come to those individuals who've asserted their dignity and humanity by fighting back, and to those groups who've united to galvanize their communities into awareness and action. There are alternatives to trusting an attacker to be kind, or to depending meekly on the very police who so often oppress you themselves. Community patrols do work to reduce the incidence of attacks, self-defense training in either martial arts or mace often does serve to save a potential victim, and pressure on the police and monitoring of the courts does improve the rate at which assailants are arrested and convicted.

No, you are not reassured. You are aware and committed, but the fear remains. And well it should: inflammatory media campaigns, the increasingly repressive political and moral climate, and the dismal economic outlook all contribute to the air of tension and the likelihood of violence. Your common sense tells you it's likely to get worse before it gets better, but the road ahead has always been difficulf for lesbians and gay men in this country, so you adjust your expectations and concentrate on the next step.

Ultimately, you hope that you and your sisters and brothers will settle for nothing less than full acceptance and understanding, and equal rights under the law. In the meantime, you work with them to combat the random, senseless mayhem. Together, you speak with one voice: 'The bashing must end!"

The readers have the final say

I am writing in reference to Cynthia Jaquith's letter on April 29 about Spectrum Magazine. She has misrepresented what we have tried to do and what we have done. She quoted me as saying that the material of the staff was examined "more closely" than outside material. This quote was taken out of context. We scrutinized staff contributions more harshly than outside pieces because we wanted to include many different writers as possible. However, although we put up posters, placed frequent ads in the Collegian and on WMUA and even extended the deadline by several weeks, we received very few prose submissions. We chose the ones we published through a secret ballot. Ms. Jaquith did not like the choices that were made; but the final assessment of the quality of the magazine shall be determined by the opinion of the readership, not by the staff members of Spectrum, and not by people whose pieces were rejected by Spectrum.

Rugby team responds

In response to the letters appearing in the 4/30/81 edition of the Collegian, referring to the incidents that took place at the Sylvan-Northeast Spring Festival, I would like to offer my sincerest apologies on behalf of the rugby players involved.

Although I have to agree with the description of the mentality of these people, to my knowledge only three of them are members of the team, and I hope that the fact that these three individuals were in uniform at the time does not reflect on the reputation of the entire UMass Rugby Footall Club.

Our team is largely made up of hard-working men who take pride in the fact that they are members of the UMRFC and it is a shame that the actions of these three individuals could hurt the reputation of the club as a whole.

David Packard
Captain, UMRFC

The controversy over health conditions in the Graduate Research Center began three years ago when the building was shut down for a week.

It was suspected that the ventilation system was at the root of the problem.

The appropriation funds to upgrade the system are left over from the construction of the building.

A professor who asked not to be named, said he felt the money is too long in coming and not sufficient to cover other areas which also need attention. "The ventilation system is not the only problem, albeit a major one," he said.

Committee investigates

The first in-depth study of the problems, in 1978, six months prior to the closing, was conducted by a group of science professors and UMass officials called the Graduate Research Safety Committee.

In a 23-page final report the committee made several recommendations which ranged from installing a two way communication system in the elevators in case individuals became entrapped with toxic materials, to sealing off spaces between the floors and ceilings of the labs, which are located one above the other in Tower A of the three tower center.

None of the committee's recommendations have yet been implemented, except the repair of a dumb waiter which is scheduled to be completed in the next three months.

Biochemistry professor, Dr. Linda Slakey said she thinks the migration of chemicals may be due to the spaces between the floors which have never been sealed off—one of the committee's recommendations.

According to Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance George Beatty, the appropriation will most likely be used only for repairs on the ventilation system. That money is now in the hands of the state-run Bureau of Buildings Commission (BBC). Under the guidelines of the BBC, no state building is appropriated funding unless repairs amount to over $10,000 and involves a design change, said a BBC spokesperson.

Security also a problem

Those who work in the building say they are also worried about lack of security. This itself has turned into a health hazard, said Howard Fey, main engineer for the campus. Fey said there has been an increasing problem with vandals causing destruction in the building.

"They have stolen first aid kits, fire blankets, extinguishers and the physics department has lost equipment," he said. The building, which is always open, has no type of security.

Faculty members in the past have complained that the Bluewall, a bar on campus has a direct line to the police station, while the Graduate Research Center does not. It was also noted that Whitmore Administrative Building has a guard 24 hours a day while the center has no one to even respond to elevator emergencies.

Frederick W. Byron, dean of natural sciences and mathematics, has been working on obtaining more security for the building for the last year and a half. He said it came as a major disappointment to him to learn that the $2 million would not be used for security purposes.

Byron said he filed a number of petitions from faculty and students which were sent to Vice Chancellor Beatty and Provost Loren Baritz asking that security actions be taken.

A professor who asked not be named said very little money is needed to implement the recommendations of the Graduate Research Safety Committee.

BBC has recently advertised for a designer to estimate the costs and extent of work the Graduate Research ventilation system will need. As of this month there has been no word that other problems in the building will be looked into.

Professor Jacobson summed up his feelings of the pending problems in the Graduate Research Center and said, "I'd like to remind the powers that be, it's their children or friend's children that sit in that building. If they're not concerned about themselves, they should at least be concerned about others."

"The bottom line is how much money do they want to spend and how much do they want to fritter away?" he said.

CHARLIE'S DARLING—Lady Diana Spencer, fiancee of Prince Charles, on her way to catch a plane to Aberdeen Scotland yesterday to greet Prince Charles on his return from a tour which included the United States.

Heaven's Gate: Keep it closed

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

Director Michael Cimino's latest film, Heaven's Gate, does not need to be criticized because its quite capable of curling up and dying on its own. As a film, it is a sick puppy.

The acting doesn't help much either. In the leads, we have a comatose Kris Kristopherson as a vague marshall, a consumptive Christopher Walken as a dull gunfighter, the hammy John Hurt as a drunken onlooker, Jeff Bridges in a funny hat as a bartender, and Isabelle Huppert as the town's enthusiastic whore—we can tell she is a whore because she has a french accent, lives in a big house and is nude about 70 percent of the time. Even Sam Waterston (as the twin villain) is bad here, for one minute he looks like Adolph Hitler, and the next minute he is dressed like Count Dracula. Now that is stacking the deck.

The blame for the much-heralded release and subsequent failure of this film has been placed on Cimino's shoulders, but it is really unfair to lay all the blame on him. For, as a director, Cimino can tell them all to go to hell as far as talent is concerned. After all, he made The Deer Hunter, the best picture of 1978; the best picture of the 1970's; and probably the greatest American film of all time. Unfortunately, Heaven's Gate fails to follow suit.

United Artists, the sponsors of this fiasco, failed to properly check on the script and production schedule, thus allowing Cimino, an artistic genius, to go overboard. As far as imagery, scenic design, and accuracy are concerned, this film is first rate, but the acting, scripting, coherency and plot development turn the tide for the worst.

The plot, based on the Johnson County wars (the film's original title) of Wyoming, deals with greedy ranchers and their persecution of European immigrants who flocked to the open ranges. The storyline is either confusing or non-existent. It is not known at any given time who characters are, what they are doing, where they are, or even what they are saying. If people aren't mumbling to themselves, they are speaking in unintelligible accents that defy definition. Even the subtitles are non-sensible.

FILM

So what if this movie cost United Artists upwards of $50 million, they've got plenty of cash. After all, it did provide employment for a lot of people. And if UA is so interested in providing aesthetic Westerns for the general public, they can always release some of their Italian made, Sergio Leone classics like The Good, The Bad and the Ugly, or even Once Upon a Time in The West, which some prestigious critics claim is a "brilliant work of art."

Michael Cimino can still go to sleep at night knowing he is one of the greatest. Even directors David Lean and Elia Kazan made turkeys in their careers. All he needs is a decent script, a competent producer and a good cast.

Rugby team Defeats ONB

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

The Old North Bridge club-side rugby team came into the game Saturday, with big hopes of 'rolling all over UMass'. They quickly ate their words as the University of Massachusetts rugby team came out on top, 25-16.

UMass took an early advantage on the field with George Economo going for an early try in the first half, but was taken down by ONB in the end zone.

Action continued with the ball staying down in the ONB end zone. Coming out of a scrum, ONB got called on a penalty, which game the ball to UMass, and a chance to score.

In a situation such as this, where UMass had the better field position, the team with the ball will 'kick to touch'. This is normally used in the defensive end where it would be a lot easier for the offensive players to get out.

Extra yardage for the Minutemen was gained on this play and the action continued; but not for long. ONB was quickly called on another penalty, and UMass took the advantage to run a penalty play. In a penalty play the side with the ball can choose what play to run. UMass chose to kick for the points.

In this play all the men set up in a wedge with the backs lined-out and the kicker on the line of play.

Joe Kennedy was the kicker for the UMass A-side team and he booted it between the posts for the first three points, and the lead in the game.

Economo got hold of the ball and ran for the first scrum of the day, bringing UMass' lead to 7-0.

Regular play continued until the end of the half when ONB got a try coming out of a mall. (A mall is when all the men pack together and try to get the ball out). The scorer for ONB was Larry Walters.

The score at the end of the half brought ONB within three of UMass, 7-4.

Paul Morrison blocked a kick by Dave Garnfors and quickly set up a ruck where UMass got hold of the ball and headed for the end zone. Scorer was wing forward John Sulivan, who furthered UMass' lead, 11-4.

Paul Morrisson carries the ball in Saturday's rugby win over Old North Bridge 25-16.

The second try in the second half came from fly half, Tim Durepo, off a beautiful pass from Phil Crawford, out of a scrum. Kennedy connected to make the two point kick after the try good, to up UMass' lead, 17-4.

Prop Paul Bourden got the ball out of a mall and took it to the end zone for the four points, taking UMass to 21-4.

But this did not last for long as ONB's Larry Walters came on again to score his second try of the game and kicker Garnfors booted for two after the try to bring ONB to within shooting range. 21-10.

ONB scored another try within a matter of minutes by Mark Recco who fell on the ball in the end zone. Again, Garnfors made the connection after the try and ONB were close, 21-16.

Durepo scored a try and pull off a decisive victory for UMass over ONB with a score of 25-16.

Mittwomen drop two, post season play in jeopardy

By ELIZABETH McGOWAN
Collegian Staff

The Lady Knights of Rutgers University ended the University of Massachusetts varsity softball's five game winning streak by taking both ends of a doubleheader yesterday afternoon, 5-1, 4-0. It was the mittwomen's last homestand of the season.

Regional selections for the EAIAW championships playoffs were made late last night and were not available at press time. UMass will be lookint to take its 14-6 season record into playoff action.

The first game against Rutgers was a heartbreaker for UMass pitcher Kathy "K.O" O'Connell and her teammates. After six innings of outstanding pitching by both O'Connell and Sharon Martin of Rutgers, it looked like the mittwomen had a tight 1-0 ball game put away.

However,the Lady Knights' bats came alive in the top of the seventh. After an infield hit and a successful bunt, Rutgers had runners at first and third. A passed ball and a single by second baseman Sue Wallace made the score 2-1. The Lady Knights then padded their lead by three more runs when designated hitter Ida McGrath belted a round-tripper to left field.

Seniors playing their last home game for UMass were honored by Coach Elaine Marasco in a pre-game ceremony. Mary Jo Forbes, O'Connell, and Simmons were given mugs and a rose for their outstanding contributions to the team. O'Connell made her 78th start of her four year varsity career yesterday. Simmons, also a varsity player for four years, has a 1.000 fielding average on the season while Forbes has played catcher, first base, and designated hitter in her last two years on varsity.

4, gave up only eight hits on the afternoon, while striking out one and walking two. Martin, still undefeated on the season, raised her redord to 11-0.

The mittwomen had a difficult time bouncing back from the loss and just did not play at full capacity in the nightcap. Pitcher Bev Torak hauried six-hit shut-out ball for seven innings, in helping the Knights boost their season record to an impressive 25-1.

Rutgers took an early 2-0 lead in the third and it proved to be all they needed to assure victory. After four full innings of play, the Minutewomen had amassed only four hits, including a double by Gaw and a single by O'Connell.

UMass starter Karen Poirier held the Knights scoreless in the fifth and sixth innings, but her teammates still could not push a run across the plate.

After a hit and couple of defensive bobbles by UMass, Rutgers had runners at first and third in the seventh inning. Hits by Torak and third baseman Carolyn Daniele eventually pushed two more runs across the plate making the score 4-0.

Gridders look strong in intersquad scrimage

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The white-jerseyed half of the University of Massachusetts football team won this year's Red-White scrimmage Saturday at Alumni Stadium 14-9 in the game that ends spring training and gives head coach Bob Pickett a look at next fall's prospects in an actual game situation.

Freshman tight end Gary Freker scored the winning touchdown for the White squad running five yards into the end zone after a 27-yard reception from quarterback Barrett McGrath. McGrath connected on seven of 16 passes for 87 yards on the afternoon.

The TD was set up on the first play of the third quarter when sophomore Garry Pearson carried the ball 36 yards to Red's 30 yard line. Pearson got the ball again bringing it to the 27 yard line and on second down and eight, McGrath tossed to Freker.

Pearson also had a hand in the White squad's first quarter TD that gave them the lead they would keep. Two consecutive Pearson carries totaling 20 yards brought the ball to the Red five-yard line and a penalty brought it to the two. Mark Lederhos ran in for the score and Herb Newland's point after made it 7-0.

White's defense, including co-captain Pete DiTomasso and sophomore Joe Graham sacked Red quarterback Dean Pecevich five times. Graham penetrated the offensive line and was credited with two of the sacks.

Late in the second quarter, the White squad's defensive line held the Reds to a field goal after they had had the ball on the White five-yard line. Red running back Rich Jenkins, who sat out last season with an ankle injury, ran nine yards to the five.

On second down, George Lewis dumped Pecevich in the backfield and Graham came up with one of his sacks on the next play. Craig Homenko came through with a 32-yard field goal.

The Red squad brought its score to nine when, in the fourth quarter, Pecevich ran 14 yards on a keeper and nipped the corner of the end zone.

Linebacker Scott Crowell was effective on the Red defensive squad stopping Pearson and keeping him at 77 yards on the day.

and McReddie's single moved him to third, with the runners going, he scored when shortstop Vin Bonanno singled through the hole vacated by URI second baseman Joe Oullette. Lovellette made it 4-2 with an RBI single scoring McReddie.

Barry Bennett's nice snare of a Carlucci line drive turned into an important double play when URI first baseman Tom Healy followed with the first of his two home runs to make it 4-3. But that was as close as the Rams would get.

UMass scored three in the third when DH Kelly McDonald doubled in two runs and scored on a Dean Bennett single, and Kraham added two with his fifth home run of the year, a line drive shot to left that made it 9-4. UMass closed the scoring in the fifth when the Bennett brothers drove in a pair of runs for the 11-5 final.

Cramer had a less than auspicious start in the fourth ("Yuk, I stunk at first."--Murray Cramer) but still managed to get himself out of a jam, giving up three hits but just one run, aided by an Aulenback-to Bonanno-to B. Bennett pick-off of Oulette who wandered too far off second. Cramer then settled into a groove more characteristic of his 5-3 record.

UMass takes on Springfield College tonight, under the lights in Holyoke, with freshman lefthander Tony Presnal, a hometown Chicopee boy, slated to start for the Minutemen.

Trackmen finish 3rd

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

Despite being on the bottom end of a Northeastern University 87½, University of Rhode Island 66½, University of Massachusetts 50 team score, the trackmen made their mark as a serious threat in New England Collegiate track, on Saturday May 2.

John Wright came into the meet with a score to settle with the New England indoor champion in the high hurdles, Bob Holden fro URI. In that meeting indoors, Holden nipped Wright by inches, both running 7.62 seconds for the 60 yard highs.

This time, however, it was Wright coming away the victor, crushing his week old school mark of 14.2 seconds, in 14.0 seconds.

Both even coming out of the blocks, Holden appeared to pull slightly ahead in the early stages. Wright belted the fifth or six barrier before really digging in, then leaving Holden with a powerful surge in the end of the race, winning by a massive two tenths of a second.

Bill Devarney equaled his best seasonal efforts, and his second best sprint efforts as well, winning the 100 and taking second in the 200, running 10.7 and 22.2 seconds for the metric events. Wright followed Devarney in the half lap event, placing third.

Mark Grasso and Chris Omeltchenko pulled out the only other individual wins for UMass. Grasso triple jumped 46'7¼" while 'Omo' took the 3000 meter steeplechase, UMass' best scoring event of the day, with Tony Baugh and Rodney Laflamme third and fourth.

Paul Beaulieu, who was the only UMass entry in the indoor NCAA meet indoors, met up with Jeff Culinane of NU in the 1500 meter run. In the indoor race in which both qualified for the NCAA, (Cullinane 4:01.1 and Beaulieu 4:04.8 in the mile), Cullinane blasted the last quarter mile to outleg Beaulieu. Saturday's 1500 was no different, the Huskie sprinting away with 200 meters to go, and winning by 2.8 seconds in 3:53.4.

Army hands Gorillas first loss

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

WEST POINT, NY—At the start of the fourth quarter, things were actually looking up for the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team. By scratching and scrambling, they had managed to revive their previously dormant offensive attack somewhat, and had tied the score at eight on Lee Vosburgh's second goal of the game.

Also, the sun had started to make a legitimate appearance over Michie Stadium, the first time of the day. Everything was seemingly going well.

Then the United States Military Academy's Band began to play the William Tell Overture.

This might have been what sparked Army at this point and even the Lone Ranger could not have rescued the Gorillas as the Black Knights ran off a string of six unanswered goals en route to their 14-10 victory Saturday, Massachusetts' first blemish of the season, their record now at 10-1.

What was especially notable about nationally seventh-ranked Army, which last week upset third-ranked Syracuse 11-10 in overtime, besides its almost flawless defense, was its ability to maintain a consistent pressure game at the same level of intensity from the first faceoff to the final whistle.

"They (Army) took it to us," Massachusetts head coach Dick Garber said. "They played a real pressure game all day long. The game was even most of the way through and I thought we would pull it out after we tied it at eight."

Although the Gorillas may have entertained thoughts of taking back the lead which they had lost following two Army scores after Chris Corin's game-opener had put Massachusetts up 1-0 in the first quarter, Army's junior attacker Frank Giordano would have none of that. Following on the heels of the Black Knights' effective foiling of Massachusetts' attempt at an offensive run in the first five minutes of the fourth period, Giordano figured in the scoring of the middle four goals of Army's run of six, assisting on the first and tallying the next three himself.

One need look no further than the method by which the Black Knights scored their first two goals of the game to get a pretty clear picture of the way this contest went. Army took the faceoff following Corin's score and the Knight faceoff man passed back to defensive midfielder Neil Hamill, who sprinted upfield to the Massachusetts cage and let a twelve-footer fly for a quick score.

Army's second goal, which gave them a lead they would never relinquish, also originated from the "D" as defensive middie Tom Donvan laid one in off a Ken Dahl pass three minutes later.

The Black Knights effectively demonstrated why their defense, not counting a 17-5 swamping at the hands of Johns Hopkins, has allowed just 5.5 goals per game as they stymied the Gorilla offensive attack, the first team to do so this season.

"Army really upset our inside attack. They forced us to go one-on-one and we weren't able to get the shots we wanted. We had a couple of good chances, but our guys just missed them," Garber said.

For the second time this season, the Gorillas were outshot. Hofstra did it earlier this season and Army did it convincingly here 56-32. Surprisingly although they were outshot 19-4 in the second quarter, all four Gorillas shots were for scores.

Another telling statistic is the fact that Massachusetts was not on top in the ground ball department for the first time this season. This is probably more of a result of the overall team quickness of Army rather than a lack of Gorilla hustle. The Knights showcased the fine art of pokechecking throughout the game, breaking up many Gorilla rushes and creating their own easy scoop attempts in the process.

When it is noted that Army compiled 14 goals, the second highest score against the Gorillas this season, it is too easy to lay the blame on a breakdown in the defense. But it was not the case in this game. Massachusetts netminder Chris Bennedetto did get beat a few times, but many of the shots were one-on-one breaks where most offensive attackers would have passed off instead of forcing a shot as Army did. The sophomore goalie did have 21 saves and kept the Gorillas in the game in the second and third periods with several exceptional efforts.

Celtics take series

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics, led by Larry Bird's 23 points, completed their remarkable playoff comeback Sunday by wiping out an 11-point second-half deficit and beating the Philadelphia 76ers 91-90 to move into the National Basketball Association's championship series against the Houston Rockets.

The 76ers led 67-56 during the third quarter and still clung to an 89-82 advantage with 5:23 left in the intensely physical seventh game of the Eastern Conference finals. But Boston scored nine straight points, the last four by Bird, while holding Philadelphia scoreless for 4:54.

Cedric Maxwell sank one free throw and Nate Archibald sank two, center Robert Parish made a turnaround jumper and Bird converted two free throws to tie the score 89-89 with 2:51 to go. Bird, the 1980 rookie of the year, then came back with a 15-foot bank shot from the left side for a 91-89 lead with 1:03 to play.

Following a pair of turnovers, Philadelphia had a 3-on-1 fastbreak, and Maurice Cheeks was fouled by Gerald Henderson with 21 seconds on the clock. He made just one of two free throws to leave Philadelphia trailing by one.

M.L. Carr missed a 20-footer for Boston, and Philadelphia's Bobby Jones gathered in the rebound and called time out with one second left. Jones' inbounds pass bounced off the top of the backboard, and the Celtics had the emotion-charged victory.

As the final buzzer sounded, more than 1,000 spectators from the capacity crowd of 18,276 at Boston Garden poured onto the famous parquet floor in a jubilant celebration.

By winning, the Celtics became only the fourth team in NBA history to capture a best-of-seven playoff series after falling behind 3-1. The others were the 1968 Boston Celtics, 1970 Los Angeles Lakers and 1979 Washington Bullets — all of whom also did it in the semifinal round.

Of the three previous comeback clubs, only the 1968 Celtics — who also beat Philadelphia in the semis — went on to take the title. The current Celtics are hoping to match that and win the 14th championship in the history of the tradition-steeped franchise when they take on the Rockets in the finals, which opens here Tuesday night.

UMass sweeps, Thompson chucks

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

There was a score to be settled Saturday afternoon at LorJen Field and if, as it is sometimes said, revenge is sweet, the University of Massachusetts baseball team should be checked for tooth decay after their doubleheader sweep of Rhode Island.

It was, after all, this same URI team that had swept UMass two weeks ago--the beginning of the end of Minuteman playoff hopes.

"I think we had something to prove," said UMass third bascman Barry Bennett. "I still think we're the better team."

One could only agree after UMass, now 17-16, got tow of its better pitching performances of the year from senior ace Chuck Thompson and junior lefthander Steve Cramer to take both games, 3-0 and 11-5, to pull the Minutemen above the .500 mark. UMass has also now won three straight. The Minutemen took the second game of a doubleheader against Sienna, 5-2, Thursday night behind sophomore Adam Grossman, who had a nohitter through 5.1 innings.

In the opener Saturday, Thompson (6-2) threw just 71 pitches in his three-hit shutout, the first by a UMass pitcher this year, as the 'ol sinker-slider righthander struck out two and walked no one.

"I didn't really have good stuff today," said Thompson, who didn't allow a runner past second base. 'I guess I just threw a lot of strikes."

A lot of strikes, indeed. Thompson went to just one three-ball count and, after giving up two hits in the first inning, retired 19 of the next 20 men he faced, at one point 11 in a row, the last eight in order.

Because Thompson had thrown so few pitches, UMass head coach Dick Bergquist decided to start his ace in the second game. Thompson went three innings, allowing three runs on three hits and two walks. From there, Murray Cramer (5-3) took care of things, giving up two runs in his four innings to pick up the win.

While the pitching was rolling, the UMass offense was doing just fine, thank you. In the opener, UMass got all they'd need off URI starter and loser Ron Barber (2-1) in the third. After Mark Litano and Warren McReddie singled, catcher Jim Aluenback drilled a stand-up triple to the gap in right center for a 2-0 lead. Aulenback made it 3-0 when he slid under URI catcher Tony Carlucci's tag after a Keith Lovellette groundout.

The last out of the opener, a tap back to the box, showed how effectively 'ol Sinker Slider Chuck pitched. Thompson made ground balls all day, which firstbaseman McReddie's 13 putouts-- not to mention Thompson's own five assists--attested to.

URI jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the nightcap, but UMass came back par usual, scoring four times in their first off URI starter and loser Tom Messier for a 4-2 lead. Dean Bennett, who had three hits on the day, led off with a walk, stole second, moved to third on a deep fly by brother Barry, then scored on a Litano single past the drawn in URI infield.

Litano then scored on a sacrifice fly by Jhn Kraham. After Aulenback had walked Continued on page 15

Gazelles qualify for Nationals

By RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, RI—A split was enough to qualify the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team for the National Tournament.

The Gazelles came back against Yale University 9-8 but were not enough for the mighty Harvard University Crimson losing 9-4 this weekend at the Eastern Athletic Intercollegiate Association of Women (EAIAW) Regional Tournament at the University of Rhode Island.

UMass led 2-0 in the first few minutes until the Bulldogs warmed up and handed UMass one goal after another. By half-time Yale scored five unanswered goals as the Bulldogs were in control 7-5.

The Gazelles knew they had to win either this game or tomorrow's to attain a National Tournament birth. Obviously they decided not to put themselves in the uncomfortable "do or die" situation because they blasted Yale in the second half.

"We made a few adjustments in the offense," Coach Pam Hixon said, "And that offense combined with strong defense allowed us to comeback".

Hixon cited Margie Anderson and Whitney Thayer, who combined for six goals, as a key factor in the come back. Laurie Vincello, Judy Strong and Lynne Herbert also contributed on goal each.

Harvard wasted no time displaying their aggresive offense and sound defense picking up two goals in the first two minutes.

UMass had a couple of chances to shoot on net but unfortunately things like the post and the Crimson goalie to often got in the way.

Anderson scored two and the Crimson reciprocated making it 7-2 at the half.

Hixon must have some magic words that she repeats to her team at half-time conferences because, never fail, the Gazelles race onto the field with an air of confidence they often lack in the first half of their games.

Sue Caples and Thayer each scored and it was 7-4 until the last three minutes. UMass (seeded third) was now playing right up to the Crimson, who were seeded first in the region. For a brief moment an upset looked possible, but Harvard again reciprocated with two goals and it was over, at least for now.

Harvard, UMass and Yale will compete in the National Tournament at Pennsylvania State University the weekend of May 16th.

Confronting the issues of Political,Repression,Racism and Capitalism

THE NATIONAL BLACK INDEPENDENT POLITICAL PARTY CONVENES AT CORNELL

Manning Marable Delivers Keynote Speech at NBIPP Conference

Dr. Manning Marable, associate professor of Black political economy at Cornell's Africana Studies and Research Center, has played an active role in the formation of the National Black Independent Political Party. Dr. Marable, a renowned political activist, spoke on the need for a viable political structure. He grounded his position on the bankruptcy of liberalism and the historic development of Black politics. His presentation also included an overview of the creation of the party and an explanation of its workings.

Manning's historical presentation provided an illustration of the political evolution and importance of the party. He spoke of W.E.B. Du Bois and Marcus Garvey's contributions to the fight for broad based political action versus emphasis on electoral politics. Broad based political action combined with participation in the electoral process is the NBIPP's manner of confornting the issue facing us.

The issues are political repression, racism, and capitalism, We must understand that capitalism, by its very nature, breeds politica l repression as well as this thoroughly racist society. Liberalism and accommodation, as an end in themsleves, are useless and unrealistic. Black people must strive to know themsleves as well as their enemies, and use this knowlegdge to create a revolutionary plan based on reality.

The NBIPP is a party founded on the "bottom-up" principle. In other words, we must organize on the grassroots level before seeking a national perspecive, thus insuring the inclusivity of our realistic program. The NBIPP's support of grassroot initiative is in direct contradiction to the two party system. However, it is not to be viewed as a third party, but a new party, "our party."

The current membership of the NBIPP is over ten thousand members, and over a thousand local affiliations. Dr. Marable urges all Black people serious about changing the total condition of our people (revolution), to join the Party and assist in its drive to organize.

Rise of of the KKK and Right Wing Scapegoat Politics

Keynote Speaker: Nelson Johnson

There are various indications around the country that the Ku Klux Klan is becoming increasingly powerful. Ronald Reagan's election supposedly represents a swing to the right, but it is really more than that. Actually, Ronald Reagan was utilized as a "demi-god" figure by the bourgeoisie "rulers" of the United States. Mr. Johnson asserts that these rulers realized that western imperialism is "squirming " in its deathbed, and believes that America must become fascist in order to allay the inevitable. given this sad state of affairs, we must realize that revolution will not take place if we remain unorganized.

The workshop addressed several general issues. According to Mr. Johnson the NBIPP can help push the masses towards revolution, but cannot carry out revolution itself on the level necessary to liberate our people. Another issue was our response as a community towards the white left and the white working class. Would whites see our point of view and would they wish to participate in a campaign designed to counter racism. After addressing these and other issues the members of the workshop proposed resolutions they would like to see forwarded in the near future.

I. White workers are aristocratic because of the wide difference in income between themselves and Africanamericans. This economic disparity is the cause for the white feeling of superiority.

2. We should find out if whites are willing to oppose the government.

3. Whites on the whole will not be willing to sruggle against racism.

4. It would be difficult to get the two races together to carry out class war against the capitalistic oppressor. So we should spend more time getting our own act together before worrying about whites uniting with us.

In conclusion, Johnson said we must be clear in defining the source of our problem, because our definition of the problem source will directly influence our perspective. He said, "we must maneuver everyone towards the target of combatting capitalism.

The Effects of the Mass Media

Keynote Speaker: Harold Cruse

Television is the arm of the system. An overview of the role and relevance mass media plays in a political struggle was discussed. Media was identified as a manufacturer of a non-tangible product: ideas. these ideas affect behavior, our concept of the world, and cultivates racism. Thus, there is a continuing need to monitor ideas media promotes and create our own ideas that sustain a positive black consciousness.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

I. Apply mass pressure on area stations to promote black shows.

2. Develop and maintain a community review board that monitors area stations' programming.

3. Stress educational use of media, especially with kids. Stim ulate discussions on programs; shape thinking.

4. Develop and maintain a bureau within the National Black Independent Political Party responsible for gathering information and disseminating this information.

5. Specialize in academic areas on campus and bring back a report to group. Specialize in professional areas in America and bring back a report to the NBIPP.

6. Develop and institutionalize a monitoring of media to identify and clarify situations within NBIPP.

The Nature of the Draft and U.S. Imperialism

Keynote Speaker: James Turner

The recent efforts to initiate registration and possibly bring back the draft can only be understood in relation to America's relations with the Soviet Union and the underdeveloped world. To a large extent, the enormous wealth and prosperity of America has resulted from systematic exploitation of the physical and human resources of the Third World. Since 1973, American military and political setback in Vietnam have resulted in revolt by the Third World against the unequal economic relationship. This has also resulted in a shocking series of military and political setbacks for American client states in the Third World at the hand sof indigenous movements seeking to bring about social and political change. The most recent of these setbacks was of course Iran. In order to hald this direct threat to its existence, the ruling elite of America has decided to use all the political, military, and economic resources at its disposal to maintain the international status quo.

the main thrust of this new reaction has moved in three basic directions. The first involves the reincarnation of the old "red Scare" notion, where the Soviet Union and all forces of international socialism are portrayed as being at the root of America's international problems. This argument is given added credence by the fact that the Soviet Union has attained relative equality in military field with the U.S. and has begun to impliment a more aggressive foreign policy. The second, encompasses the modernization of the armed forces (of which the draft is a crucial element). And fin ally the third element of this trend encompasses an intensive propaganda campaign directed toward the American people in order to gain at least their tacit support for America's new foreign policy.

The workshops offered several solutions to oppose these moves. two of the more pertinent involved Black Americans making a moral choice not to participate in the armed forces and the second encouraged blacks to participate as much as possible in the anti-war activities.

Male and Female Relationships

Keynote Speaker Dr. Zala Chandler

Dr. Chandler initiated a dynamic lecture by stating that the oppression of the black woman has to be addressed when confronting the issue of male and female relationships. She read a poem entitled, "With Love, Caldonia", by Wilesse Comissiong which gave the message that Caldonia is the type of strong, creative black woman who will survive and struggle for the inevitable task of revolution.

The black woman like Caldonia has to bear the burden of triple jeopardy; race, class, and sex. She is suppressed for being black, and is looked down upon for being part of the lower-income status. In addition, she is subjugated for her sex. She is the "slave of the slave." today, sisters realize that in order for all black people to attain liberation, the black woman must be free to "hold up her half of the sky" as an equal along side the black man. In order for this process to take place, black people must work together to purge themselves and the society into a society that ends all exploitation. Black women must not exchange one white oppressor for a black one in the name of nation-building or of revolution. [The role of the black women in class society?]

She must make revolution! She must organize and be a part of the force that overthrows capitalism. She must organize and be a part of the force that establishes socialism-society where women in general and black women in particular can take their rightful place as owners of production and creators of genuine equality. "The bottom line is that there can be no positive black male and female relationships in this capitalistic society.

Organizing Skills

Keynote Speaker: Dr. James Garrett

The Organizing Skills Workshop dealt with finding viable methods for organizing communities around significant issues. Several main points were stressed during the workshop such as finding an issue to organize around, understanding and analyzing our history, and taking a realistic assessment of our present situation. A salient point made by Dr. Garrett was that our consciousness shapes our demands which are usually of a petty bourgeoisie nature fashioned in a militant manner. He went on to emphasize the need for strong theoretical goals so as not to repeat historical mistakes.

The following outline deals with the issues and recommendations covered in this workshop:

Objectives for organizing:

A. Understand your history
B. Analyze history
C. Analyze present situation

Purpose for Organizing Skills

A. Promote Black consciousness
B. Select immediate goals (objectives usually long range)
C. Decide on strategy to achieve goals
D. Implementation of strategy/recommendations
1. linking like people to like problems to show people they share these problems
2. problem solving-must convince people that they can help themselves
3. Go through system-exhaust all legal means
4. Organizing small to large-"You don't have to begin with masses...there is nothing wrong with organizing one person."
5. Democracy not bureaucracy. Organizers have a tendency to be autocratic. Objective should be move in, sustain, and build the organization.
6. Expose constituency to different points of view/experiences. the need to hear and discuss different points of view in order to go through the process of analysis.
7. Student organizations should be related to a community base. Organize for collective survival instead of individual survival. expediency should not be the primary objective. (Don't move just to be moving, have goals and objectives.)
8. Self discipline. When you are active, you know that your time is limited, so budget wisely.
9. Delegate responsibility. You can capture fervor by involving people.

Program of Organizing
A. Political Education-address history, culture, economics, and politics
B. Women-address survival of black women in male/female relationships and life experiences in general
C. Youth/students-address various issues facing black youth on and off campus
D. Human service-issues relating to housing, welfare, and health
E. Community security-organizing around infiltration
F. Workers-address welfare of workers(i.e. wages, benefits, and compensation)

This is a model for political thrusts provided by Dr. Garrett:

Main objective	self-determination/socialism
Long range goal	revolutionary front (NBIPP)
Middle range goal	build NBIPP
Short range goal	build national response to present crisis
Strategy	create programs of struggle jobs-cutbacks racist violence war
Tactics:	raise demands at high level Jobs-cutbacks call for individual institutions Rallies, demonstrations, boycotts Consolidate single and multiple issue groups Make clear statements of issues Establish forums Political education sessions Information sessions

Thought for participants: Books vs. struggle. Study together and struggle together.

Why Youths Join Gangs

by Yat Man

It depresses me every time I'm home in New York City's Chinatown when I hear of youth gang members killing one another. Yes, I'm talking about 13 and 14 year olds who haen't even seen a glimpse of life, getting their heads blown off. I'm talking about 13 and 14 year olds carrying .38 caliber guns and using it against other youths for no sound reason except to promote their macho image. Oh! I know what you're thinking, you're thinking that youths that get involved in delinquent activities should face up to the consequences. I agree, but, do all the youths that join gangs really know what they're getting into? Are there external factors imposed by society which pushes youths to join gangs? Do 13 and 14 year olds know of the Great White Media Machine's way of brainwashing people, especially the young? These are some of the questions when answered can explain why youths join gangs.

City Life

I guess when you're growing up in the city you learn things fast and the first thing you learn is you don't take shit from anybody. For Asian youths, it is no different--they form their own gangs to make sure nobody gives them shit. Many youths jump on the bandwagon and get into delinquent activities because their frineds are in it and peer pressure can be very powerful. You may ask why doesn't the community organize activities to get these kids off the streets? There aren't many activities for teenagesrs and very few sports facilities are available. Presently, Chinatown has no public indoor gym and has only one major park which is often used by other minorities and elderly citizens. Therefore, where can they go except to the streets especially when the streets offer money too.

Alienation

In addition, the framework of this society is alienating and impersonal for Asians . This factor is especially hard for the young to deal with. In the classroom Asian yuoths have to deal with institutionalized racism. Outside the classroom, Asian youths have to deal with their fagging forefathers' image of the Hop Sing waiters, and houseboys. The youths are caught between two extremely opposite cultures. While the American culture stresses individuality and agressiveness, the Chinese culture stresses conformity and passivity. Cuaght in this unique situation the youths deal with it this way: they take the positive values from each culture and form their own subculture. For example, they'll wear tight Sasson jeans but tell the white folks they know kung fu. In effect, the youths form gangs to present positive images of themselves in order to combat the dominant white culture and submissive Asian culture.

Macho Trip

These kids are pushing a macho trip because they see on the screen what Marlon Barando did and What Charlie Chan and Fu Manchu didn't do. The media has brainwashed these kids to the point where they feel that in order to become assimilated they must be macho and violent. Because in the movies the tough guys always got what they wanted. Where to turn is the question many youths ask themsleves. Their parents who work 12 hours a day in restaurants and garment factories aren 't able to supervise them. The media perpetuates dehumanizing stereotypes. Their own community is afraid to deal with the gang issue. The only people they can turn to for understanding and comfort are their peers. Thus, their peers, many of whom are in the youth gangs, provide a sense of security along with the sense of power.

No Easy Solutions

There are no easy solutions to this problem. One thing I'm aware of is that the community, especially the Chinatown community, must address and deal with this gang issue. Youth recreationsal centers with sports facilities must be open to divest youths' interests from deiinquent activities to positive recreationsal activities. Counselling centers must be used to bring parents and youth together in terms of communication and understanding. Older, college-educated youths must use their experiences and knowledge to set a positive role model for the younger kids. But before any of these solutions mentioned can be implemented, people must have adequate knowledge of the problem. Therefore, you must read, write and discuss these problems among your friends.

Dr. Evangeline Darrity Speaks at Black Womens Weekend

submitted by the Third World Women's Task Force

+Dr. Evangeline Darrity, Associate Dean of Studies at Mount Holycke College and Dean of Third World Affairs at the same institution, spoke Saturday afternoon at Amherst College. Held in Converse Hall, the lecture and subsequent discussion were sparsely attended. Nonetheless, the knowlege from experience which Dr. Darrity imparted upon the audience prompted much needed dialogue on several general topics of concern to those present. These issues included Black male-Black female interpersonal relationships; Black women in the work force; Black women and the women's liberation movement; and career choices and objectives for Black women who hold bachelor's degrees.

§The need for Black women to be aggressive in the workingworld, was a message stressed adamantly by Darrity. 'Aggressive' should not be misconstued as a negative term, she further impressed upon the women present. Rather, it should be understood that in a job situation, a Black woman should not expect her designated superior to 'hand' her better working conditions, higher salary, or an earned promotion. In many cases, then, Black women must be 'aggressive' and initiate discussion of these areas of concern.

§With relation to the women's liberation movement, Darrity directed attention to the historical roles of Black women. For Black women, being members of the work force is not a new occurence. Moreover, Darrity explained that collective Black women have never been fighting for 'liberation' in the sense connoted by the women's liberation movement, which impliedly addresses concerns specific to middle-class, white American women.

§The active presence of Dr. Evangeline Darrity in the Pioneer Valley provides for a much needed personal resource for Black students at the five colleges, and especially Black women. She is a warm, extremely cordial person, who seems more than willing to share her knowlege with us. Let's keep in touch.

Black Students on White Campuses: A Fight for Survival

Keynote speaker: Michael Stevens

The state of Black America affects what happens on white campuses and vice versa. We must be active to evoke changes. there is a lot of pressure put on blacks at white institutions that make us forget about our communities. there is internal and external turmoil.

We are told that white schools are better and that the educational level at black schools is not good. No matter how many blacks come from white schools , the greater leaders come from black schools.

Because of pressures to show that we are not typical blacks, we have to withold and supress our true selves to prove that we are okay. By going to white schools and going for masters, we lose more than we gain. We do not even realize it until it is toolate.

We must unite our energies towards the black struggle. Anything else is unproductive. We can not make a decision to be in the revolution because we have been in it since we were born.

If the cream of the crop (blacks that are educated) that forms the elite is at white schools, then we're getting killed there. We are going to be educated to death with white ideals that are wrong for us. We can not detach ourselves. The struggle is at school. It is not a break or picnic. If it is, then we have lost already. the good minds are being corrupted by not keeping in touch with our communities.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

I. Networking on the campus and community of goals and organizations.

2. Intellectual militance and violent actions are evident. there must be radical black thoughts on white campuses.

3. Consciousness must be raised. there needs to be a place on campuses to vocalize ideas and get together.

4. there needs to be a change of the black image in white minds.

5. Black Studies programs must be re-evaluated.

To the Editor:

On Friday, April 24th, eighty students travelled to the Board of Regents meeting in Boston, and were met by many students from some of the State's other colleges. We went to this meeting to protest the Board of Regents proposed tuition increase of $202.

Despite the fact that many students presented logical and thoughtful explanation s of why a tuition increase would be a disaster for students of working and middle-class backgrounds, and would force thousands of students to drop out of school, the Board of Regents passed the increase without batting an eyelash.

this arrogant attitude on the part of the Regents and our State Legislature, which has proposed a cut in the UMass budget of severe proportions, must be fought.

The Coalition, which was formed to fight these attacks on our right to a quality, low cost education is having a meeting Monday at 6 p.m. in Machmer W-25. All students are encouraged to attend. It is time to build a campus-wide movement which unites the broadest forces to fight these trends. together we can succeed in making education a right and not a privilege.

Re: "Keeping Black Music Alive," Oscar Brown Jr. articles, Monday, 27 April 1981

Must Oscar Brown Jr. degrade women to keep Black music alive?

Oscar Brown Jr. used "the endless possibilities of the 'trickster' persona," all right, but he used them to the degredation of women. Consider his song about the snake: the story of a woman who took in a snake only to have him bite her. When she cried, the snake called her a silly woman and said, "You knew I was a snake before you took me in." Very funny.

When Oscar Brown, Jr. played the female role in that and other songs, he assumed breasts, wiggled his hips and sang in a high-pitched, giggly voice. From his performance you would think that women were just nervous twitches and titters. In his keynote address "he accused the media of butchering...minds." What was he doing when he presented and perpetuated such negative images of women?

Silent Accomplice

Silenciosa

Manto blanco de pureza,
Nacarada cobija silenciosa,
Porque has tu de ser
complice de esta tierra?
Porque silencias tu
esos quejidos de llantos amargos
y congelas sutilmente estas manos que con empeno tratan de zafarse
del yugo de tus patronos?

.....Sabes,
Me das mucha pena
hermosa frazada aliciente,....

Pero ya nuestra llama va deritiendo tus particulas y tus vanos intentos se han de convertir en rios sangrientos arrastrando todas aquellas muertes que bien sabes tu,
eran i nnecesarias
y en esas aguas turbias
tus patrones pagaran sus seudas retorciendose en violentas rafagas

Silent Accomplice

Pure white blanket silent, pearly cover;
Why must you be an accomplice to this land?
Why must you silence
those bitter cries and moans?
Why do you subtly freeze those hands that deftly try to free themselves from the yoke of your masters?

You know.....
I really feel sorry for you,
such a lovely soothing quilt...

But our warmth is beginning to melt your particles little by little..... and your intentions will turn into rivers of blood, dragging with the flow all those deaths which you well know were uneccesary and in those turbulent currents your masters will pay their debts writhing in your viloent currents
.....and you will regret your wasted past, when you were once beautiful and silent you will guiltly admit the images on your banks.
On all the land that surrounds you you will see the fruit of your death
In your valleys
there will come forth colorful songs of fertile verbs.

The Third World Theater Series is a University-based program bringing an array of talent by visiting professional theater companies. Presently in our fourth successful season, we are proud to present "Flowers and Household Gods" produced by the Pan-Asian Repertory Theater of New York City.

Set in Chicago during the late 60s , this drama depicts the Kagawa family's gathering at their Issei (first generation Japanese) Mother's funeral. It shows the cultural conflicts and transformation of Japanese people from Japan to the United States.

The play will take place on Saturday, May 9, 1981 at Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 pm on the University of Massachusetts Campus.

Black Youth: Crime and Unemployment

Keynote Speaker: Barbara Arnwine

RECOMMENDATIONS:

I. Defeat(through lobbying)the sub-minimum wage bill.

2. Support free enterprise zoning in the ghetto ONLY:
a. where the investments is overwhelmingly labor intensive and utilizes the existing labor supply.

b. when investment in human capital are earmarked to progressive skills congruent to the rapid technological advances of our society, and

c. where the investors are legally committed to support, financially, the achievement of positive black living conditions.

3. Redistribute income within the black community. EX: Churches or other social organizations can let 20 percent of donations be earmarked so that black youths can be paid to take care of elderly, maintain property, etc.

4. Reinvest into the black community.

5. Form a special committee of the NBIPP to oversee the writing of a national policy on black youth and use pressure to insure its implementation.

Sands, Irish Nationalist, dies

Bobby Sands (AP Laserphoto)

Associate Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Irish Republican Army guerrilla Bobby Sands died early yesterday in the 66th day of his hunger strike at Belfast's Maze prison, the British Northern Ireland Office reported.

It said the 27-year-old Sands, who had campaigned from his jail cell and was elected to the British Parliament on April 9, died at 8:17 p.m. EDT yesterday in the prison's hospital wing.

His death was expected to bring a new storm of violence to this British province, torn by a decade of bloody underground warfare between Roman Catholic and Protestant extremists.

Sands was the 13th Irish nationalist hunger striker to die in British jails this century and the first to perish in Northern Ireland.

The Northern Ireland Office issued a statement saying: "Mr. Robert Sands, a prisoner in the Maze prison, died today at 1:17. He took his own life by refusing food and medical intervention for 66 days."

Sands lapsed into a coma early Sunday and never regained consciousness.

His family had been at his bedside along with a Catholic priest.

Mobs of rioting Catholic youths had staged git-and-run attacks against Belfast police and British troops with firebombs and acid-filled milk bottles Monday night as the emaciated Sands was sinking toward death.

Ignoring pleas for calm from Protestant and Catholic leaders, Sands' family and Irish nationalist activist Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, roaming gangs of up to 300 youths stoned police and troops throughout the day in the Falls Road section of West Belfast.

The area once was dubbed "ambush ally" by British soldiers and is the heart of Catholic militancy and Irish Republican Army sympathy.

Firebombs were hurled at police patrols in another Catholic area, the Short Strand, where there were two arrests. Police said mobs overturned and burned two trucks, and one policeman was injured.

Police fired plastic bullets to break up the gangs, but they quickly reformed on adjacent streets.

Outside the Divis Flats, a flashpoint along the sloganpainted Falls Road, youths built barricades across entrances and children shouted obscenities at police.

Students and police named in $1.8 million suit

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts sophomore Matthew L. Ryba has filed suit for $1.8 million from two other students and two UMass police officers in connection with Ryba's arrest last October.

Ryba, of Amherst, is suing students Kevin M. George and Stephen B. Turner, both of John Adams tower in the Southwest Residential Area and officers David R. Williams and William F. Murphy, all of whom he says violated a number of his civil rights during a disturbance in John Adams that preceeded his arrest.

The four men named in Ryba's suit have received summonses to appear in the Hampshire District Court on a date not yet specified. George, an assistant head of residence, and Turner, a resident assistant, yesterday gave University lawyers their summonses so that the lawyers might represent them.

Sidney Myers, associate counsel for the University, yesterday said the lawyers will determine this week whether or not to represent George and Turner in the case.

In separate interviews yesterday, Ryba and George gave different versions of the October incident.

In an interview yesterday, Ryba said he and two friends, Mark Pendleton and David Deneu, all residents of Cance dormitory at the time, entered the John Adams lobby around 2 a.m. on October 5.

In an effort to gain admission to the dormitory, Ryba, formerly a resident of John Adams, said he showed a security worker a key registered to a room in John Adams.

Ryba said he was then assaulted by George and Turner, and arrested by officers Williams and Murphy, who were near by because of another incident. Ryba said Pendleton and Deneu, meanwhile, were waiting in an elevator for him and returned to the lobby as he was taken away by the police.

Ryba was found innocent in January in court of all charges that had been lodged against him. He said that Pendelton and Deneu were not involved in the fight, but he added later that they were arrested that night and were also cleared in court.

George, also in an interview yesterday, said he recognized Ryba as a former neighbor in John Adams. Knowing Ryba no longer lived in the dorm, George said he assumed the key was in Ryba's possision illegally.

George said that as he attempted to confiscate the key, a fight broke out between Ryba, Pendleton, and Deneu, and Turner and himself.

Ryba's suit against George, Turner, and the two police officers seeks $400,000 in damages for false arrest; $400,000 in damages for malicious prosecution; $800,000 in damages for violation of civil rights; $200,000 in damages for infliction of emotional harm, and $45,000 in damages for assault and battery.

Withdrawal now allowed for exempted language students

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Staff

The college of Arts and Sciences' Steering Committee voted yesterday to allow students with the appropriate high school language equivalency to withdraw with a "W" from their 110-140 level language courses through May 20.

"The change in the language requirement and the lateness of the decision made on April 15 created a logical inconsistency," said Assistant Dean of Arts and Sciences James W. Shaw in explaining why students are now allowed to withdraw so late in the semester.

The CAS faculty voted April 15 to allow students to forego taking the previously mandatory four semesters of a foreign left many students who could have qualified for the exemption taking courses this semester that were no longer required. Yesterday's decision was based on fairness to the students, Shaw said.

Yesterday's decision was based on fairness to the students, Shaw said.

Students who have had four years of one language, or three years of one language and two of another in high school, now have the option of withdrawing with a "W" if they so choose.

Previously, students who wished to withdraw from a class after the normal two-week add-drop period could only do so by the fourth week of the semester. After the fourth week withdrawals with a "W" WERE GIVEN ONLY UNDER EXTRAORDINARY CIRCUMSTANCES.

The new withdrawal option is not retroactive to last semester, nor will it apply next Fall. It is valid for courses in progress this semester only.

The option does not apply to advanced language courses. Presumably, people taking upper-level courses are not trying to fill the basic University language requirement.

A "W" indicates that a student withdrew from a course with no mention of grades or performance, though it is recorded in the student's transcript.

Shaw said students should contact Ellen Snyder in room E-22 in Machmer Hall to find out if they qualify for exemption. Those who qualify will be given forms that must be signed by a faculty advisor. The forms will then be sent to the Whitmore Administration Building.

Transportation secretary suspended

BOSTON — Already reeling from soaring debts and declining revenues, Boston was dealt another blow with suspension of the state transportation secretary — board chairman for metropolitan Boston's transit system — pending an inquiry into alleged kickbacks within the system.

"We just don't see how Barry Locke could operate effectively with this cloud hanging over his head," said gubernatorial spokesman Gerard Morris after Gov. Edward J. King suspended Locke as transportation secretary.

King announced the suspension Saturday after learning the state attorney general's office was investigating alleged contract payoffs within the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, which runs bus, rapid transit and commuter rail service for Boston and its suburbs.

Locke, 50, chairman of the MBTA board of directors since June, 1980, was placed on unpaid leave of absence and removed from involvement in MBTA and state functions.

The MBTA often suffers from financial problems. The system shut down for one day last December after running out of money.

Locke was unavailable for comment Sunday. A woman at his home said he was out. When contacted Saturday, Locke said only, "I don't know anything about it."

Califano writes that Carter was insecure as leader

ATLANTA — Jimmy Carter as president was insecure, caught in a crossfire between his staff and Cabinet and obsessed with news leaks, former Cabinet member Joseph Califano has written in a book about the Carter administration, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The newspaper quotes Califano as saying Carter was caught between feuding conservative and liberal advisers and was saddled with a Cabinet that "had little respect for the Carter staff and no clear sense of where the president was leading them," The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution said in their combined Sunday editions.

The book covers the first 30 months of Carter's presidency, the newspaper said. Carter dismissed Califano from his post as secretary of health, education and welfare in 1979.

Jody Powell, Carter's former press secretary who remains close to the former president, said Carter would have no comment on Califano's 454-page memoir, "Governing America: An Insider's Report From the White House and the Cabinet."

Powell said, however, that Califano's account demonstrates that "whatever lingering doubts I had that we had judged Joe too harshly have been substantially relieved. Hell hath no fury like a fat-cat Washington lawyer scorned."

Califano's book is scheduled for publication May 29 by Simon & Schuster Inc., the newspaper said.

The newspaper quoted Califano's memoir as saying:

— At a top-level weekend meeting at Camp David in 1978, Carter said: "The problem news leaks that we do have I attribute primarily to the White House. Some leaks from the White House are inexcusable — derogatory remarks about certain Cabinet officials. If I could find out who did it, I would kick his ass out of the White House."

Califano said that statement left him "incredulous," because he said he had been convinced for some time that Powell and former White House Chief of Staff Hamilton Jordan "continued to cut up several Cabinet members anonymously."

He added: "By now I suspect he Carter had ordered or at least condoned much of it. My God, there is some Elmer Gantry in this born-again president, I thought."

Nuclear limitations talks to begin with the USSR

ROME — U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. announced to the Western alliance yesterday that the United States intends to start negotiations with the Soviet Union by the end of the year to limit nuclear forces in Europe.

Haig also said at a private meeting of 15 NATO foreign ministers that President Reagan sent a lengthy handwritten letter to Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev responding to a letter from Brezhnev in March. No details of Reagan's letter were revealed. Brezhnev's letter described his proposals for improvement of East-West relations.

Conference sources said Haig told the ministers he would have preliminary talks on limitation of medium-range nuclear missiles with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko during the U.N. General Assembly session in September. Lowerlevel talks to establish ground rules might be held earlier, the sources said.

Woman awarded 9 million in cosmetic surgery damage suit

CHICAGO — A woman left a speechless quadraplegic after cosmetic surgery on her nose was awarded $9 million by a jury in her damage suit after she testified that the one thing she wanted was for her pain to stop.

The 12 Circuit Court jurors never heard Eileen Tannebaum describe her condition aloud — she testified by making high-pitched sounds meaning "yes" or "no" as a therapist pointed to a board with 64 words.

Mrs. Tannebaum, 46, of suburban Highland Park, appeared in court for about five minutes, testifying from flat on her back in a bed.

Doctors said Mrs. Tannebaum's arms and legs were permanently paralyzed after her brain was deprived of oxygen during surgery in 1975 at Northwest Hospital.

GRC investigations questioned

Editor's note: This is the second installment in a two-part series examining continued health and ventilation problems in the Graduate Research Center.

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Research Center (GRC) was shut down in May 1979 for a week due to a high number of work related complaints. Women throughout the building complained of menstrual irregularities, while men complained of headaches and fatigue.

UMass officials suspected that a substance called toluene, found in subsequent blood and urine tests of staff and students, had somehow spread throughout the building and was at the root of the problem. This theory was never proven and further investigations failed to explaine the mysterious problem.

Five months after the closing, the National Institute for Occupational Health and Safety, (NIOSH) was called in by Dr. Sidney Shapiro, former dean of natural science and mathematics, to further investigate the building. Shapiro described NIOSH, a division of the Health, Education and Welfare departments, the nation's foremost expert in occupational health.

The group released a report which concluded that "the ventilation system is functioning in a manner such that adequate protection of employees and students is not being provided." It recommended the system be repaired so as to operate under design specifications.

Not everyone agreed, however, with Shapiro's high estimation of NIOSH, and of the quality of the subsequent investigation.

"As far as I'm concerned they did not have an intelligent satisfying answer to what happend," said biochemistry professor Linda Slakey.

Research lab technician Helen Boland, whose health was adversely affected while working in the Graduate Research Center, left her job in the fall of 1979, when she discovered she was pregnant. Roland said she also felt the NIOSH report was not complete.

"The day they came to UMass was during the time of Love Canal. They forgot half of their equipment, and when they came they put half their stuff under a radioactive hood clearly marked radioactive," Boland said.

Boland said that because NIOSH investigators had forgotten their gas meters to conduct an experiment where gas was to be released "they had to measure the amounts by hand."

Boland said she thought that action was dangerous.

Boland, who recently returned to work at GRC said she would not have returned if she felt it was unsafe. She said it was difficult to think about the GRC problems which she was active in trying to change while working there three years ago.

"It really depresses me to go back and remember this," Boland said. "It reminds me of the frustration we experienced. I remember one professor was heard saying, it just goes to show you that women don't have a place in science."

Health Services Director Barry Averill said he thought the group NIOSH sent were professional and very capable.

"When they were here they had to improvise because they forgot some equipment," Averill said. But, "it was a perfectly acceptable practice," he said.

The science professor, who asked not to be named, said when officials use the word "improvise" it's just another way of saying "they blew it."

Tower A of the Graduate Reserach Center.

Averill also said he thought the closing of the Graduate Research Center has hurt the Health Services Department.

"Our reputation got mussed up. I think that's a tragedy. It destroyed the credibility of our reputation," he said. "People think that this is just another federal coverup. That's just not true."

Conference confronts women's issues

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK — Women's creativity, ambitions, fears, and their role in the working world were discussed by more than 250 participants attending a conference on Saturday in New York City.

"Ambition and Achievement; Their Meaning for Women" was the title of a day-long conference sponsored by the Women's Institute, an association of psychologists and psychoanalysts.

"Today, most of the interesting writing is being done by women...work that brings us a message," said poet and author Janet Sternburg. Sternburg is the editor of a recently published anthology entitled The Writer On Her Work, which she described as a presentation of "the individual voices of women writers."

Jacqueline Wexler, president of Academic Consulting Associates, defined creativity as "the ability to make sense out of nonsense."

It is the nurturing qualities of women in positions of power, Wexler said, that can save American industry.

She also said "the greatest asset of young women today is their honesty about their ambition," and that they are better prepared to actualize their potential than a generation ago.

University of Massachusetts sociology professor Alice Rossi attended the conference and was a member of a panel discussion on "Time Management and Creativity."

Dr. Ethel Person, a psychiatrist and psychoanalyst, led the second panel on "Women Working: Fears of Failure, Deviance and Success."

Fear of failure in women inhibits ambition, Person said. It results from low self-esteem caused by having a maternal role model many regard as worthless, she said. Person also said women often fear deviation from the socially defined roles of the female. She feels this "fear of success" is actually fear of ostracism.

Elizabeth Janeway, author of Man's World, Woman's Place, led the final panel discussion entitled, "The Value of Career Identity." She defined career identity as "moving with a purpose towards some goal."

Janeway said it is important for women to "recognize the self as subject, not as other." Women learn self-doubt, she said, but they must learn to trust themselves, which leads to trusting the capability and endurance of other women."

Campus crime and theft statistics contradict

ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

A lack of staff has led to an increase in property theft at the University of Massachusetts, but at the same time, an effective crime prevention has led to a decrease in other types of crimes and arrests, according to UMass Public Safety officials.

According to the 1980 Annual Report of the Department of Public Safety, which was released last week, theft of private property increased from $201,099 worth in 1979 to $223,751 in 1980. Theft of state property increased from $44,701 to $73,443 in the one year period.

In addition, according to the report, the number of criminal arrests decreased from 257 to 168 from 1979 to 1980. The number of automobile accidents increased from 242 to 298, while the number of citations issued dropped from 468 to 308.

Lawrence Holmes, associate director of public safety for administrative purposes at the University, yesterday said larceny and other types of crimes have increased in the past year largely because of a crime prevention program utilized by the department.

"We'd like to think...prevention, our key element, is working," Holmes said yesterday. "We make the community aware that reduction in crime is a community problem. The biggest crime on campus is theft. We can reduce theft significantly, by the placement of barriers, through prevention theory."

Holmes said one form of prevention has been to engrave students' property with identifiable marks. He said the Alpha Phi Omega fraternity goes into the dorms to engrave students' belongings and studies have shown that 44 percent of the students cooperate in the program, as compared to 10 percent who would come in to the police station to borrow the engraving equipment on their own.

Holmes said the decrease in arrests stems from a lack of personnel in the department. He said the department's 34 full-time officers, who are split into three shifts, handle calls on a "priority basis."

"A lot of shifts go from one call to another," Holmes said. "There's no time left to maintain traffic enforcement."

Phillip Cavanaugh, associate director for operational services, said the state estimates required police force strength at 2.5 officers for every 1,000 people. At UMass, he said, the department has estimated an average of 35,000 people are on campus daily, including both full and part-time students, faculty members, administrators and visitors.

As a result, Cavanaugh said, UMass should have 56 full-time officers, which is 22 more than they now have. In an effort to alleviate the problem, Public Safety has asked the state legislature for an additional $83,000 to add five officers to the force.

Michael Bavli, Israeli Consul General, spoke on his government's official view on Middle East affairs as part of a local celebration for Israel's 33rd anniversary last night in the Campus Center.

Political climate in Mid-East discussed by Israeli Ambassador

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

An ambassador representing Israel to New England last night gave a small Campus Center audience Israel's official views on the political climate in the Middle East.

Consul General Michael Bavli's speech was part of this week's continuing celebration, "Israel at 33," sponsored by several Jewish student and community groups.

Bavli spened his remarks by saying that a summary in the last 33 years is a positive one. He said the concessions his country made to Egypt during the Camp David peace talks stands out as one of Israel's strongest points.

"Peace with Egypt was not an easy accomplishment, but a complicated one," said Bavli. He added that Israel expected peace to come between itself and Egypt after President Anwar Sadat told them he recognized Israel's right to exist.

"The core of the problem (in the Middle East) is the Arab's refusal to recognize Israel as a sovereign state," Bauli said.

He also said any Arab country that would negotiate peace with Israel would be given the same concessions that were rendered to Egypt.

Bavli said that one of the concessions given to Egypt was the autonomy that will be granted to the people of the Sinai Desert, an area that provided abundant oil to Israel.

"If those concessions are what it takes to make peace, then we have made a good deal," Bavli said.

Bavli called the Palestinian conflict in the Middle East a "painful human problem," but said the problem is with the Palestinian Liberation Organization's (PLO) "solution of destroying the Israeli state."

"Peace with Egypt is not easy"
—Israeli ambassador

"The Palestinian cause is hi-jacked by the PLO," Bauli said, adding that Israel's stand is not to negotiate with a hi-jacker.

Bavli said the PLO's influence in Lebanon, along with the presence of the Syrian Army is causing inner conflict. He said the return to the status quo of three weeks ago, the withdrawl of Syrian missiles and an end to the siege of Christians in Lebanon is necessary to end the conflict between those countries.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

By STEPHEN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

A sign of the times: We live in a truly violent age, a world of so-called civilized women and men. It is, in reality, a world based on a decaying form of fear, a sickness caused by our own fiendish neuroses. Just look at the countless senseless assassinations and assassination attempts by guntoting psychopaths of the past few years - I don't have to give examples, you know - such a waste. Look at Bobby Sands' crazed reach for martyrdom - it'll do nothing but trigger more needless deaths. Look around you, at the violence on campus - the jerks who stab one another, the fear-inducing creeps who make obscene phone calls, the assholes who rape. Violence is all around us.

It should come to no surprise that films reflect this insanity. What is really disturbing is that a large number of these films, like a purposeless cancer, can be so exploitative and actually condone such madness. Films, if they can be called such, glorify the killer. Films such as Halloween, Friday the Thirteenth, its sequel, The Funhouse, The Texas Chainsaw Massacre, and a host of others revere in the terror of seeing someone brutalized by some brooding stranger. The stranger, often motiveless, is the ultimate sadist. We, the audience, are the resulting masochists. We have the audacity to joyfully cringe in anticipation of a filmic victim's approaching stabbing, decapitation, and slow graphic death, while at the same time being shocked by real life violence. We are so hypocritical - when will we ever realize it though?

Another sign: Remember this date: Monday May 11. This day will see the one-night-only free-admission Amherst premiere of The Dozens, the award-winning dramatic feature produced in Massachusetts. The Dozens is a non-exploitative film that focuses on women's roles and relationships through the story of a young single mother in trouble with the law. The Boston based film will be screen in Room 174-178 of the Campus Center at 7:00 p.m. The showing will be followed by an open public discussion on women, crime, sex roles, and criminal justice. The entire event is sponsored by the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy, which is based here in Amherst. It promises to be quite worthwhile - check it out.

The Dozens premieres in Amherst May 11 in Room 174-178 of the Campus Center at 7:00 p.m.

Applications are now available at the Senate Office for the position of S.G.A. Student Attorney General

All applications are due in the Senate Office no later than May 8, at 4:00 P.M.

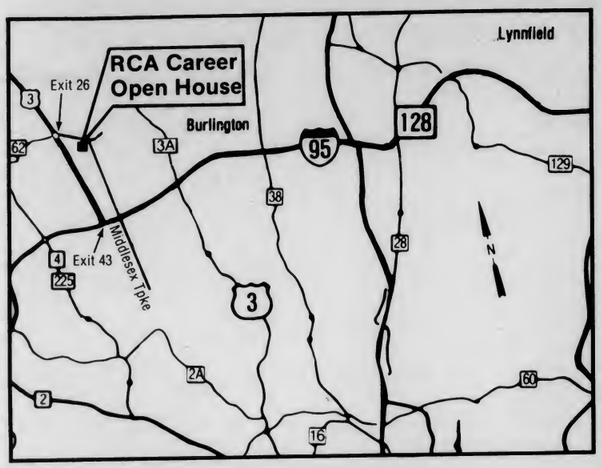
Graduating Engineers

There's still time to join The Tradition on the Move!

Attend RCA's Open House

Friday, May 8
Saturday, May 9



Career opportunities are available at RCA Burlington, right now! RCA technologies extend from mini- and micro-computers to distributed processing, electro-optics, automation, and C3I systems. As a recent graduate in electrical engineering or computer science, this means an opportunity for a variety of challenging work projects ranging from tiny devices to super-systems.

We are the only RCA plant in New England and employ 300 engineers. The informal structure means that achievers get high visibility. And you always have the backing of RCA's worldwide corporate resources. Our employment has doubled in the last 5 years alone, while sales have tripled! And the future looks even brighter.

You are cordially invited to our Open House where our managers will be happy to discuss an RCA career. A buffet will be served. The Open House will be held Friday, May 8th from 5 PM to 9 PM and Saturday, May 9th from 9 AM to 2 PM. The location is shown on the map.

Kurds and class conflict

This is a contribution to the recent discussion in the letter columns of the Collegian concerning the longstanding dispute in the Armenian-Turkish relations and the current situation in Turkey.

The unfortunate hostilities and atrocities against the Armenians during World War I can only be evaluated within the context of the complex configuration of class forces and socio-political developments in the Ottoman Empire in the latter half of 19th and early 20th century. When viewed from this perspective, and stripped of racist reasoning, the atrocities appear almost historically inevitable, although by no means justified.

Yet these historical conditions are often forgotten and thus not considered in an evaluation of the history of the period. Instead, strong emotions of bitterness, passed from generation to generation—fuelled by official non-recognition of the atrocities committed by Turkish governments since the formation of the Turkish Republic—perpetuate a nationalistic-racist hatred aimed at the Turkish people three generations removed from the atrocities. These emotions find their targets of opportunity in innocent Turkish diplomats stationed abroad.

The first point that needs to be stressed is that the forced march of the Armenians was not carried out by the Turkish people, but by the Ottoman government, prior to the formation of the Turkish Republic in 1923.

The Ottoman Empire encompassed several ethnic groups and therefore upheld an Ottoman identity, rather than a Turkish one, despite the Turkish origins of the ruling class. In the name of maintaining the unity of the Empire, all ethnic groups, often the Turks themselves, were "oppressed" under the Ottoman rule, whenever they posed a threat to this unity.

Yet the wave of nationalism spread by the French Revolution did not stop short of the Empire's borders, eroding not only its borders but also the cosmopolitan official ideology from the late 18th century on. The rise of the Armenian nationalist struggle, and the gradual replacement of the Ottomanist official ideology by Pan-Turkism at the turn of the 20th century, can be understood in this context. Pan-Turkism, like any other nationalism of this brand, meant unification of and prosperity for Turks and Turks only, even if this were to be achieved at the expense of the well-being of other ethnic groups.

Why did this ideology find its target in the Armenians and not in any other ethnic group?

One reason was that it was the Armenian mercantile classes that had economically prospered as the intermediaries of European economies on the Ottoman soil, following the establishment of free trade relationships with the European economies in mid-19th century. This free trade relationship, whereby the cheap manufactures of the expanding capitalist economies flooded the Ottoman markets, proved ruinous to the Empire. It brought about financial bankruptcy of the government and the subsequent mortgage and control of the economic resources of the Empire by the European governments. The Armenian mercantile classes, whose growing prosperity presented a vivid contrast, came to be held responsible for this general economic decline.

According to the Pan-Turkist ideology then, reversing the decline and the creating a Turkish-Moslem capitalist class was to be achieved via the expropriation of the land and business of the Armenian mercantile classes. The hostility was generalized from the mercantile and landowning classes to the Armenian population, in part because of the atrocities of the Armenian secessionist movement against Turks in regions where Turks were minorities. This hostility could only be aggravated by the overt financial, military and political support the Armenian movement received from England and France, who had important econimic stakes in the Ottoman territory.

This historical picture is presented by no means to justify the inhumane forced march of the Armenians during World War I, but to illuminate the economic and political conditions for it. Further, it attempts to clarify Turkey's implied responsibility for the incident by locating the class forces involved.

With the ethnic diversity of the Turkish Republic greatly reduced prior to the formation of the Republic, maintaining an official ideology of Turkish unity has been easier since 1923. Today there is a significant Kurdish minority (around 8 million) deprived of basic econimic rights in Eastern Turkey.

We fully sympathize with the wish for a long-delayed official recognition by today's Turkish government of the past atrocities against the Armenian people. Yet, given that today there are only around 40,000 Armenians in Turkey among a population of 50 million, we can only condemn any desire to form an Armenian state within Turkey's present borders as utopian, reactionary and aggressive, like any other attempt to revive national boundaries of past millenia.

As for the current situation in Turkey, the coup of September 12, 1980, has marked the end of one of the few remaining democratic regimes in the Third World. The junta has abolished the constitution, which had guaranteed a broad range of democratic freedoms for the past twenty years, banned all political activities and arrested thousands (30,000 by official count). In addition to death sentences, the "shoot to kill" orders for security forces, and torture (which has become systematized) are claiming the lives of a number of "suspected terrorists." Investigations into torture cases and confirmation of a number of these indicate the junta's concern for a semblance of legality, but also attest to the existence of widespread torture by the security forces. Similarly, despite claims by the junta that the press is free, there is a news blackout, since the Turkish press observes self-censorship.

The coup came in response to the ineffectiveness of the democratically elected governments in curbing growing political violence and in dealing with the economic crisis. The U.S., Turkey's NATO allies, and the apologetic Western press were relieved by the coup to stop the political chaos which threatened NATO's southern flank. Turkey's foreign financial creditors were also pleased to be reassured by the junta that the domestically unpopular economic measures, recommended by the International Monetary Fund, are to be implemented. These measures involve significant economic sacrifices on the part of the Turkish working-class and the poor peasantry, and come at a time when the powerful labor movement is being severely persecuted.

We urge all to keep a critical eye on the developments in Turkey and invite you to unify energies with us in battling the current rise of repression against the working-class and Kurdish minorities in Turkey.

Kudos for Holocaust remembrance

For those of us in the University community dismayed over the past few years of manifestations of anti-semitism and other expressions of racial, ethnic and sexist prejudice on our campus, the past week devoted to the remembrance of the victims of the Holocaust has been a heartening reminder of the humane values which a great University can and should embody.

It is painfully ironic that the events commemorated should themselves recall how ultimate is the distance which a society may travel from the humane when anti-semitism is unleashed. The commemoration is also a chilling warning that the ultimate logic of anti-semitism, regardless of how it is phrased, leads to the gas chamber and the crematorium—and to the spiritual oblivion of societies which condone it.

For Provost Baritz and his staff one can have only praise and gratitude. The quality of the programs they arranged—from Nobelist I.B. Singer, our own distinguished composer, musicians, and scholars, to the searing final address of Dr. Robert Jay Lifton—raised the University to the highest level of the national and international observance of this dark turning point in human history. We can only hope that this will be the first of such annual commeorations and that its effects will be manifest throughout the year in our University community, and beyond.

This is art?

I don't know how many of you were fortunate enough to see the beautiful project in front of the Fine Arts Center on Tuesday, but I know I was lucky enough to see it. Yes folks, some genius was clever enough to support a number of brown paper lunch bags about six inches off the ground so they would blow or sway in the wind. Do you believe it? As a result some person is going to obtain a college degree for this, his or her B.F.A., Bachelor of Fine Arts. I know if I had put the bags there I would have received a fine for littering, but he or she is an art major so it's labeled..."Art".

This even reminded me of another time I was left speechless by the Arts Department. I happened to go through the gallery under the FAC concert hall, and there it hung, a most magnificent piece. Green wax had been melted on to a piece of white paper and in the lower right corner a slit three inches by one-quarter inch had been cut out...that's deep!

How about those two masterpieces that adorn our FAC permanently? An iron rod that was painted with three colors—note the great difficulty with more than one color—and the paint had been pulled while it was still wet to create the points on it. It's just beautiful—kind of reminds me of a piece of World War II surplus barbed wire dipped in paint. And the clincher, a huge piece of scrap metal that looks like the torpedoed hull of a ship. That piece of iron was bought in 1975, and cost $15,000. To put that into the correct perspective, due to six years of inflation that's equivalent to paying $28,000 for it now. Boy, was that a great way to spend $15,000.

For some, I guess, unobvious reason I can't understand why the arts people complain about how their money is being cut.

Andre La Montagne
Orchad Hill

A good example

I would like to thank the UMass Arts Council and the Orchard Hill/Central area governments for allowing such a fine concert to take place on Sunday, May 4th. More gratefully, I commend all those who were in attendance for the respect and consideration shown towards the other concert-goers throughout the day. Even when students were standing up in front of the stage for the performance of the final group of the day, there was no evidence of pushing or shoving.

Although there is some litter still remaining on the hill, I was pleased to see many students dispose of their trash in the appropriate barrels, and clean up the areas they occupied during the concert. Some students even went around picking up trash at various times throughout the day.

Because of the efforts and cooperation of the organizations responsible for the concert itself and the students who attended the concert, the day was very successful. Let's hope the upcoming Community Day will prove to be just as successful, without a reoccurrence of the problems experienced last spring.

Dead Kennedys provide excitement at the Nail

Dead Kennedys with The Vandalz
Rusty Nail Inn, April 30, 1981

By STEVE WINNIMAN
Collegian Staff

"Costs a lot of money to look like us, doesn't it? You F---ing punk rockers!" Thus spoke the one and only Jello Biafra, lead singer of the Dead Kennedys at the Rusty Nail last Thursday, at what proved to be the most exciting concert this area has seen all semester.

The Dead Kennedys employ two roadies whose only function is to pull Biafra back onto the stage after each of his many headlong dives into the audience. Biafra treats his body as just another piece of equipment, exercising no more caution with it than with a microphone stand. The roadies never even made any effort to make the crowd unhand Biafra: they just grabbed his feet and tugged until they got him back. All along, Biafra doesn't miss a beat or a word; "Leave the microphone cord alone" were his only words of caution.

If the Dead Kennedys visually amount to the Jello Biafra band, it's the nearly immobile instrumentalists, guitarist East Bay Ray and bassist Klaus Flouride who keep the manic musical intensity of the group moving. (The drummer for this show was not the "Ted" who plays on the album—probably a session player hired for the tour.) Although the Dead Kennedys' songs may not be musically complex, it takes a musician of no minor caliber to play at the speed which Ray and Flouride do without messing up the songs or losing steam. Everything Biafra is visually, the guitarists are musically, and the combination makes the Dead Kennedys as good a live band as can be found.

The hour-plus set covered nearly all of Fresh Fruit For Rotting Vegetables, the group's only album to date, as well as a fair selection of new and unreleased material. "Holiday in Cambodia", "California Uber Alles", "Let's Lynch the Landlord", and the final encore, "Viva Las Vegas" were among the show's high points. They also made clear the show's only failing: the lousy sound. Either the guitars were too loud or the vocals too soft; whatever, it made it hard to pick up the words unless you knew them already, and it made the unrecorded songs forgettable. However, the manic excitement the Dead Kennedys provoked more than made up for this.

Currently, the Dead Kennedys are the only "punk" band who don't seem like they're four years behind the times. Although their musical rawness shouts "1977," it's clear that this band is not just going through the established punk moves. While their politics are fiercely left-wing, the lyrics do amount to more than mere slogans, and the band is careful not to lose itself in the outrageousness-for-its-own-sake garbage of a group like the Plasmatics. The degree to which the Dead Kennedys really do mean what they say is proven by their dedication to rock and roll as they see it, coupled with their refusal to abandon those elements of themselves which will prevent them from being accepted on a large commercial scale (such as their name).

It's worth noting that, two years ago, Jello Biafra ran for mayor of San Francisco on a platform which included the decree that downtown businessmen be forced to wear clown suits. He came in fourth in a field of eight candidates.

Opening for the Dead Kennedys were the Vandalz, a local group. While their high-powered rock and roll sounded good, it was hard, after seeing the Dead Kennedys, to regard them as much more than a diversion. Why aren't they booked for spring concert?

WFCR celebrates anniversary

When WFCR began as a 10-watt transmitting station at Springfield Technical High School 20 years ago, the people at the station probably never imagined it would become a 35,000-watt broadcaster in a nationwide chain of public radio stations.

Today, WFCR serves not only the Five College community but reaches Hartford, Framingham and eastern New York State.

The station, which was developed by the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council which comprises representatives from the University of Massachusetts and Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, celebrates its 20th anniversary tomorrow with a reception at its studios in Hampshire House.

The celebration will last for the month of May and will include various special programs from the station's extensive archives.

The jubilant celebration comes in contrast to last year's controversy about the cancellation of Spanish programming by the station's General Manager Robert Goldfarb.

The special programming will include a special concert series on Saturday nights as well as the rebroadcasting of lectures given in the Five College area by such notables as B.F. Skinner and Bella Abzug.

WFCR was once a relay station for Boston-based WGBH. Nine years after it went on the air WFCR became a link in the Eastern Educational Radio Network (EERN) and since has become an important part of the National Public Radio network.

Woman assaulted after party

A University of Massachusetts female student was assaulted and battered on Sunset Avenue Friday morning while returning to campus from a fraternity party, Amherst police said.

The student claimed the man jumped out of some bushes, grabbed her, and forced her to the ground, police said. She was able to fight off the man and he fled, police said.

Police are investigating the incident.

UMass student, Kevin F. Giblin, 21, of Attleboro, was arrested for being a disorderly person while police were investigating a disturbance at Swiss Village Saturday, police said.

UMass Student Wade Landgraf, 22, of Leominster, was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol after he crossed into the oncoming lane on South Pleasant Street and forced a police cruiser off the road, police said.

Walter Smith, 19, of Greenfield, was arrested Sunday for driving under the influence of alcohol after driving over a curb at the intersection of Main and Southeast Streets and struck a tree, police said. He was treated at Cooley Dickinson hospital for minor injuries, police said.

A Greenfield man sustained minor injuries when he lost control of his motorcycle Sunday. Police said 19-year-old Douglas R. Cassidy was traveling east on Eastman Road, when he swerved to avoid some ducks in the road. He was treated at Cooley

Union Program Council officials, and at least one administrator are scheduled to appear before the Hadley Board of Selectman tonight to determine if UPC will receive the proper permits to hold Community Day on May 17

UPC Talent Coordinator Frank Gironda, Treasurer Andrew Gordon, and Administrative Coordinator and Production Manager Nancy Seraphin are scheduled to appear before Hadley Selectman at 7:30 p.m. in Hadley Town Hall. They will present their plans for concert security and alcohol control and answer any questions Hadley officials may have, Gironda said.

"We're fully capable of presenting our plans and answering any questions concerning them," Gironda said.

Gerald Grady of the office of Community Relations will join UPC officials at the meeting, and other administrators may also appear, Gironda said.

UPC officials met with Hadley Police Chief Adolph A. Pipczynski on Friday to discuss problems Hadley may have with the event, Gironda said.

FBI director to speak at Amherst

FBI Director William H. Webster will speak at 8 p.m. tomorrow at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel.

Webster, a 1945 Amherst alumni, will hold a question and answer period after his speech. The topic of the speech was unknown as of yesterday.

Appointed to his current position in 1978, Webster was previously on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and a Federal District Judge for the Eastern District of Missouri.

Webster holds honorary degrees from Amherst College, DePaul University, William Woods College, Drury College and Washington University.

His speech tomorrow is sponsored by the Harlan Fiske Stone Law Society.

Projector stolen from Marston Hall

An overhead projector and cart valued at $126 was reported stolen from Marston Hall at 4:33 p.m. yesterday, University of Massachusetts police said.

In another incident, a window was smashed and drawers in the room gone through on the first floor of Goessmann Laboratory, police said. Nothing was reported missing in the incident, reported at 11:28 a.m. yesterday, police said.

A bicycle valued at $160 was reported stolen from Baker residence hall in the Central Residential Area at 9:45 a.m. yesterday, police said.

Another bicycle was reported stolen from McKimmie residence hall in the Southwest Residential Area, police said. The bicycle was valued at $175, police said. The incident was reported at 12:17 p.m. Saturday.

Dickinson Hospital, police said.

A tape deck worth $200 was reported stolen from a car on Shay Street Friday morning, police said. Police also said a brown wallet was stolen from the locked car.

Over $100 worth of food was reported stolen from a sorority Friday, when a window was pried open, police said.

A golf bag and a set of golf clubs valued at $1,200 was reported stolen from a car at Hickory Ridge Friday, police said.

Police said the door of a Townehouse apartment was kicked in Saturday, and a $300 stereo is reported as missing.

RALLY—The 68° weather made it a perfect day to march across the Arlington Memorial Bridge enroute to the Pentagon. From left to right, Elizabeth Moose, 91, from New York, a representative of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, helps out at the information booth. Moose said she is a frequent participant in peace rallys. Debbie Jantzen, also from New York, yells chants to the crowd as they make the last lap in the march. A crowd of reportedly about 100,000 gather in front of the Lincoln memorial for the opening rally at noon on Sunday.

Netwomen take season finale, qualify for Easterns

By Antony Kundert
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team dominated the University of Rhode Island to win 8-1 in the last match of the season Saturday. Their season record ends at 4-4. "They played the way they're capable of playing," coach John Beal said. "Especially by winning five of five three-set matches."

The match on the Boyden Courts was delayed after a thunder storm wet the courts. An hour later the match began on courts that were dried with brooms, squeegies and the sun.

In singles play, number one for UMass Elizabeth Sullivan won easily in straight sets 6-3, 6-1 over URI's Heather Mahan. captain Joanne Vennochi at number two went three sets with Beth Shetzley to win 4-6, 6-1, 6-4.

"I lost my concentration in the first set and I couldn't catch up. After that I just played my game," Vennochi said. "It went through my mind a lot that this was the last regular season match of my college career and that made me feel really sad, but we still have the Easterns."

Paula Natale playing in the third spot lost her first set due to "too many unforced errors." She rallied and took the second and third sets for the final score of 6-7, 6-1, 6-4. Number four Sue Lachiatto also went three sets and beat Jackie Roche 5-7, 6-0, 6-2. The final win in singles play came from number five Trisha Sullivan who was the last to finish. She battled URI's Michele Maynard in three close sets 6-4, 5-7, 6-4.

UMass was able to sweep the three doubles matches. Number one doubles Helen Najarian and Carolyn Tarbell won in three sets 3-6, 6-1, 6-3.

"We really got aggresive in the last sets," Tarbell said. "We were both at the net and were able to put vollies away."

Lynn O'Sullivan and Didi Courtright made short order of URI's number two doubles team 6-1, 6-3. Playing together for the first time as number three doubles were Chris Carson and Harriet Thorpe who crushed their opponents 6-1, 6-0.

The season is not over for the netwomen, they have been selected to compete in the division II Easterns at West Chester State College in Pennsylvannia on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of May. There will be 19 schools participating including Colgate, Georgetown, and Temple.

Teams can qualify for the Nationals by placing in the top two in this event. Individuals can qualify by winning their categories for example number one singles winner qualifies.

"If the level of play is the same as last year we should win, but it seems to be much stronger this year," Beal said.

It's a good precaution, used by many other regional selection committees.

If the EAIAW had done so, maybe Kathy O'Connell, Mary Jo Forbes and Brenda Simmons could graduate in four weeks with more than just fond memories of their senior years.

Jackson sets new record at New Englands

by James M. Graham and
Timothy F. Tonner
Collegian Staff

With a team of only eight competitors, the University of Massachusetts Women's track team placed eighth in the New Englands held last weekend at Boston University's Nickerson Field. The women of the University of Rhode Island won the meet over pre-meet favorite BU.

The highlights for UMass in the field events came when Nadine Jackson set a new school record in the discus and teammate Karen Snow placed third in the javelin. Jackson, who is only a freshman, finished third in the discus with a throw of 141'2", breaking the old school record of 129'2" which she set earlier in the season. Snow threw the javelin 131'5" against a strong wind at Boston College where the throwing events were held.

"Snow was looking for the win, but the weather was bad and the conditions were tough. No one threw well," coach Banda said. Snow has thrown the javelin over 150 feet before.

In the running events, UMass' top distance woman Judy McCrone doubled in both the 5000 and 3000 meter runs. On Saturday, McCrone ran the 5000 in 17:07.3 which was good for fourth place and went on to place second in the 3000 on Sunday running a 9:44 behind nationally ranked Judy St. Hilaire of the University of Vermont who ran a 9:22.3. Cathy Petrick also competed in both events but failed to place.

"This was the first time Judy has doubled in a big meet. She ran a good time for the 3000 meters. The Easterns are this weekend and we're looking to improve her time to move her up in the National ranking," coach Banda said.

Caroline Gardiner ran a personal best of 4:50.8 in the 1500 meters, but failed to make the finals. Iris McDonough and Sally Anderson both ran the 800 meters but did not make the finals.

UMass' top scorer for the season, Micki Callahan, finished third in the seven event heptathlon with 4,105 points. Callahan won the long jump, 220 yard dash and hurdles in the event which also includes the high jump, javelin, shot put and the half mile.

"It's only her second time competing in the heptathlon. I was very happy with her performance," Banda said.

The two-mile relay team of Gardiner, Anderson, McDonough and McCrone placed fifth with a time of 9:29.2.

Next weekend McCrone, Callahan, Snow and Jackson will travel to the Easterns held at Penn State.

that hit the third base bag with none out in the ninth. Presnal had earlier saved his own skull with a nab of a cannon shot by Fairbanks in the sixth, also with none out, that could have set up a big inning for Springfield.

In fact, all told, things really came together for Tony Presnal and the Minutemen last night.

"He pitches with as much poise as anyone we have and he's a freshman," said UMass head coach Dick Bergquist. "He was really pumped up tonight pitching in front of a familiar crowd. He had a strong game, with good velocity."

And the Minutemen. The same Minutemen who were giving up runs in bunches three games ago, have suddenly seemed to grasp their potential. Chuck Thompson, Steve Cramer and now Presnal have combined in the last three games to give up just 14 hits and 6 runs. The win over Springfield College is Massachusetts' (18-16) third in a row, and the reason is the pitching.

Last night's game here, the second annual MacKenzie Field classic between the academic neighbors, had the makings of a real pitching duel.

Chief righthander Carl Schmitt, now 3-4, had an effective curveball of his own. He gave up only one hit through the first three innings, Litano's first that was deadened when the speedster was caught stealing on a bullet peg by catcher Larry Soucie.

But Schmitt was touched in the fourth when Barry Bennett's double to right center was followed by Litano's second hit and Jim Aulenback's run-scoring infield grounder, making the score 1-0.

Presnal (4-3) met up with some minor trouble in the fourth when he gave up back-to-back infield hits. But, a lineout to short, a foul pop to the catcher Aulenback, and the freshman lefty's third strikeout of the game ended the inning.

Springfield tied the game in the bottom of the seventh when Jeff Bogus, a hard-hitting third baseman, reached on a fielder's choice and scored on back-to-back singles by Enselek and second baseman Charlie Fisher.

The end was agonizing for coach Charlie Roys and the Chiefs. In the top of the eighth inning, Barry Bennett singled, but was forced out after an attempted sacrifice by Litano. Litano, however, became the winning tally when, after Aulenback singled, Schmitt lost the strike zone and walked Warren McReddie and Keith Lovellette to force in the second UMass run. Presnal allowed just a walk in the last two innings to capture the victory.

They could possibly finish with the best record ever if they win their last three, and they would also set a new mark for wins in a season with thirteen. The most goals scored in a season record (220) is also within reach as the Gorillas have tallied 179 through 11 games.

A look at 'lax'

AROUND THE CREASE—Apparently, the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association (USILA) pollsters have finally decided that the Black Knights of Army have proved their mettle with recent wins over previously third-ranked Syracuse University and fourth-ranked Massachusetts. In the latest poll, Army has jumped from seventh to third place behind perennial power Johns Hopkins, which is still undefeated at 11-0, and second-ranked North Carolina...The University of Virginia is in the fourth spot and the Gorillas are tied for fifth with Midshipmen of Navy...There are bound to be plenty of people who will take the opportunity to shake their heads and put their "I told you so" expressions on their faces at last Saturday's loss at West Point by Massachusetts, the Gorillas' first game against a nationally-ranked opponent since game one versus Cornell. It's too early for that however. The Army game was no fluke. The Knights took it right at Massachusetts and played some outstanding hustling defense. What also must be considered is that the Gorillas did not just lie down and die when they were behind. They battled back to tie after three quarters and were still playing at full speed when they were down six goals in the fourth. It's ridiculous to castigate the Gorillas on the basis of one game. They will be there Friday afternoon when Syracuse shows up and they'll be ready to play...The top eight teams in Division I qualify for the post-season NCAA playoffs. If Massachusetts wins at least two of their remaining three games, they should easily make the cutoff. If they win all three, they'll have a decent shot at finishing in the top four which would qualify them for home field advantage in the playoff...

The Black Knights-Gorillas matchup was preceded by a junior varsity high school clash. Then came the college game. The Massachusetts players were not even off the field after their game when the Army football jogged onto the field to play their intersquad Black-Gold game. The day was still not over as New York high school rivals Melville and Yorktown were set to have a showdown right after the football game. No wonder the astroturf looked a little worn...This was the second game that Massachusetts played on the turf this season, having beaten Hofstra earlier this year at the Flying Dutchmen's field. Some Massachusetts players had astro-grabber turf shoes while several others opted for the reliable high canvas or leather Converse All-Stars. The field was a little wet from the thundershowers the night before. It didn't really become much of a factor until the fourth quarter, however. A few Army players slipped and fell in the first half, but that was it. The wet surface hurt the Gorillas in the fourth when Weller got a fastbreak all alone and slipped at the back of the Knight cage before he could get a shot on net. On the next series of plays, two Massachusetts defenders fell down 15 feet in front of the Gorilla cage and an Army attacker was left unmolested to go in for the score...

Presnal paces mittmen to win

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

HOLYOKE — While Tony Presnal basked in the afterglow of his crafty pitching performance, an instant nirvana termed "the cool of the evening," the freshman knew he had disappointed few people at his homecoming on MacKenzie Field last night.

The Chicopee native's four-hit, 2-1 decision over Springfield College, the best nine-inning performance by a Minuteman hurler this season, was sweetened by the presence of a battalion of Presnal Patriots, including the lefthander's father, brother, and sister.

Situated in the stands along the first base line, the group rose to their feet with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning. Their crescendo of applause, a la Fenway Park, was incessant until Presnal struck out the last batter, three time victim Tom Enselek.

It was UMass baseball in the cool of the evening.

"That crowd was excellent," Presnal said. "I had pitched a complete game against New Hampshire, but this time, with my friends and relatives in the stands, I was really pumped up."

He was indeed. His curveball and particularly his slider crept up to the plate like an uncoiling snake. Through six innings he gave up only two infield hits and struck out six batters. His four safety allowance was more than made up by the hitting of Massachusetts' Mark Litano (three for four) and Barry Bennett (two for four, one run scored).

He was the beneficiary of two fine UMass defensive plays. The first was a rundown by Litano of a Joe Fairbanks gapper in the third inning, and the second, a fine scoop by Barry Bennett of a Bob McDermott grounder

A nasty mix of politics and sports

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

There are always the purists, the idealists, who claim sports and politics don't mix; that there's no place for both of them in the same breath.

Like it or not, they all too often do mix.

And head coach Elaine Marasco and her University of Massachusetts softball team now know that better than anyone else.

Commentary

"I mean, you try to think these things are done fairly," says Marasco, the second-year coach whose team was snubbed by the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) playoff selection committee. 'But then you look at what is done, and you have to wonder."

What was done is simple: the old political snub. Nothing more, nothing less.

UMass, with its 14-6 record, was ignored by the selection committee, while one of the four playoff berths went to Adelphi University—the same Adelphi team that UMass swept a doubleheader from last week; the same Adelphi team that UMass is superior to in every statistical category.

You figure it out.

"It's a shock," said Marasco, who plans to request a formal explanation of the committee's decision. "All year I've been telling my kids not to worry, because the selection committee just looks at what you've done. I tell them that all year, they believe me, and now look."

Marasco and her team will tell you straight off, they didn't start out well.

"We're a young team," Marasco says. "it took us a while to get going, but the last few weeks we've been playing really well."

After dropping three of their first four games, UMass went on to win a remarkable 13 of their next 14 games.

And even Sunday afternoon's sweep at the hands of Rutgers didn't seem completely threatening. Rutgers, after all, is 25-1, probably the best team in the East. The selection committee, in fact, seeded Rutgers first, UConn (16-6) second, Rhode Island (22-10) third, and that fourth spot—that fourth spot that everyone thought was going to UMass—went to a team which UMass shut out twice.

"I feel bad for all the kids, but especially (senior pitcher) Kathy O'Connell and (senior centerfielder) Brenda Simmons," Marasco was saying yesterday morning. "The kids on the team will get another chance, but for Kathy and Brenda not to go to a playoff this year is a sin."

So, O'Connell, who finished her four-year UMass career with a 39-9 record, and Simmons, who played four years of errorless outfield, will sit at home and look in the box scores for the results of the playoff games they should be playing in.

Of course, the fact that the Adelphi head coach is chair of the selection committee this year had nothing to do with the team selections.

Sure.

There is no denying that politics exist in intercollegiate athletics, and UMass has seen it before. But there is something that can be done. The EAIAW should require that members of post-season tournament selection committees resign if their particular school happens to be in contention for one of the playoff spots.

JV-eight win paces men's/women's crew teams

By JIM FLOYD and ANNA ROELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's junior varsity eight set the pace for the UMass crew teams at the New England Championships this past Saturday by capturing first place and the New England title on Lake Quinsigimond in Worcester.

The UMass men's and women's teams placed all seven of their boats in their respective finals during the course of what had to be considered an up and down day for UMass.

The junior varsity pulled away from the six boats which had qualified for the final at the start of the race and never trailed.

UMass finished four seconds ahead of the second place United States Coast Guard Academy.

Crew coach Dave Kumlin was both pleased and proud of his JV troops and pointed to mental strength as a key to their victory.

Members of the boat are Beth Jacoby (coxswain), Doug Hanks, Steve Koeninger, Jim Rogalski, Jon Blumberg, Rick Doherty, Joe Wolff and Bob Murray.

In the varsity eight race UMass, the defending champion, finished in second place two seconds behind Coast Guard and three seconds ahead of the University of New Hampshire.

Kumlin was slightly less pleased with the performance of the varsity boat.

"The varsity was just outraced. Coast Guard got a lead at the start, kept it and held it the whole way. The level of intensity in the boat just wasn't as high as it should have been," Kumlin said.

Kumlin also pointed out that the varsity will have a chance to avenge itself at the Dad Vail Regatta this week.

"Coast Guard won this battle but there's another battle at the nationals coming up this week," Kumlin said.

In the women's varsity race, the UMass eight boat rowed one of their best races this season, placing second in the 2000 meter race, with a time of 7:02.3, just 1.3 seconds behind Connecticut College.

"If we had had about 50 more meters we would have blown by them," UMass women's coach Barbara Roche said.

"It was the best race they ever rowed," Roche said. After the first 300 meters of the race, UMass passed enough boats to leave the rest of the race up to UMass, Connecticut College and UNH. At the 1000 meter mark, UMass pulled away from UNH and it was just Connecticut and UMass for the last 500 meters. UMass pulled up two seats at the sprint mark, but it wasn't enough to beat Connecticut to the finish line.

The women's novice-8 boat won their qualifying heat race without using a sprint. But when they reached the finals Saturday afternoon they lost a lot of their speed and stroke time and placed fifth with a time of 7:30. "They just had a bad race," Roche said. "They had trouble getting their power and swing together."

The freshmen eight continued to have its troubles this week and once again they paid the price in terms of placement in their race.

After easily qualifying for the finals the boat ran into technical problems when an oarsman's seat came off of its runner. This cost the freshmen about twenty strokes of full power before they could continue.

"I felt that they would have been right with Coast Guard (the eventual winner) if it weren't for the jumped slide," freshman coach Ron Reece said.

The freshmen finished in fourth place.

What had been the second freshmen boat all spring was divided into a varsity and a freshmen four for the New Englands. Both raced in the finals and the varsity four finished fifth while the freshmen placed sixth.

The men and women will both travel to Philadelphia this week for the Dad Vail Regatta where UMass hopes to win the national title.

UMass students mourn death of IRA's Bobby Sands

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students mourned the death of Irish nationalist Bobby Sands at a rally outside the Student Union Building yesterday afternoon. Sands died after 66 days of refusing food in protest of Britain's policy of denying political prisoner status.

Representatives from Puerto Rican pro Independence, Latin American Solidarity Committee, Young Socialist Alliance, Union of Iranian Students, the People's Committee on Solidarity with Palestinian people and the Asian Student Association all spoke on Sands' death drawing parallels to the political struggles of their particular group.

Mairead Casey the spokesperson for the Irish Solidarity Committee the sponsors of yesterday's rally said she wanted to "dispel" the two major myths pushed by the American media. "The first is the fallacy that there is a religious war between Catholics and Protestants in Northern Ireland and the second is that the British troops are there to keep peace," she said.

"The British have oppressed Ireland for over 200 years, there is no way the British troops can be seen as peacekeeping forces," she said.

Sai Akemoto a representative of the Asian Student Association compared the current problem between the British and the Irish to the British invasion of China in 1840. "The British forcibly opened up China and began an opium war in the 1840's, making the Chinese into drug fiends," he said.

The rally which lasted about an hour attracted an estimated crowd of 150 students. Students lined the entrance of the building with signs protesting the conditions in Northern Irish prisons and the imperialistic policies of the United Kingdom in general.

Peter Bahmer, the speaker for the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee began his speech by requesting the audience to pause in a moment of silence of the Irish "martyr."

"The media said he wanted to die because he was a religious fanatic, but he was murdered by the British."

"The British are just like the Americans in that they don't want to define the meaning of a political prisoner," Bahmer said.

Casey concluded the rally by saying that Americans implicitly support British imperialism and torture. "The American support of British imperialism is hidden by the media coverage of stories about Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer. This country is dominated by British culture though."

Professors debate problems of U.S. economy, its future

By JOSEPH BARRETT
Collegian Staff

In the muggy School of Business Administration auditorium filled with instructors and students, six professors last night debated the problems with the United States economy and its directions for the future.

The debate ranged from professors who found current leadership in society and the way readers are educated to be the root of the problem, to others who blamed world instability for the present adverse economic conditions. Moderated by S.B.A. Dean Harry Allan, the debate revolved around the question: are American institutions failing to serve society because of the education and practice of the institution's managers?

Leonard Rapping of the Economics department said that business must shoulder the responsibility of restructuring itself to meet changing economic needs, while Sociology Professor Jay Demerath argued leaving the problem to the business sector was "like leaving militaristic goals to the graduates of West Point."

Elliot Carlisle, Management professor, said it was evident that U.S. industry has been lagging for the last thirty years. He cited three overlapping trends contributing to the problem: consumers buying foreign goods; international business deemphasizing devlopment in the U.S.; and stockholders wanting short-term profits over long-term gain. Carlisle said "we simply do not stress long-term growth in our business schools."

Barbara Burn of International Programs felt that blaming American institutions was wrong; "These institutions cannot be controlled, they are affected a great deal by what goes on internationally." Sociology Professor Jay Demerath agreed, saying these institutions are rooted in the American society. "In stable times, institutions flourish, and in uncertain times such as these they are hurt," said Demerath. Burn felt that business, government, international affairs experts and academians should work closer together to spur new ideas.

Political Science professor Jean Elshtain challenged this proposal, saying, "Maybe our current problems stem from too close a relationship between the business and government. Whose interests are really being supported: the peoples' or the governments?"

Elshtain added that, "We are witness to a steady and troubling erosion of belief in American institutions and the ability to serve the people's needs. Liberals and Conservatives in government both tend to treat the masses as inert bodies to be manipulated," said Elshtain. She characterized this as a "technocratic politic," where society becomes "too technical" for most people to be consulted for solutions. Elshtain suggested going back to real democratic principles and away from this trend.

Professor George Odiorne of the Management department challenged the idea that our economy is indeed losing strength, blaming inefficient government for many of our problems. "We've lost self-esteem, then we went into self-doubt; I certainly hope we don't wind up with self-hatred," said Odiorne.

Economics professor Leonard Rapping said the institutions are failing us, calling for "a restructuring of the American economy away from militaristic trends and instead towards the applied sciences and innovation." Rapping said the bureaucracies resist change, contribute to the problems today, and that change must occur. "Certain options are necessary through the institutions. We must build confidence in these institutions instead of kicking and shoving a bewildered populace into an uncertain future."

UM student reportedly gang-raped

A University of Massachusetts student was allegedly gang-raped at a South Amherst apartment complex sometime after 5 p.m. Sunday, according to Amherst police.

Police said the woman had attended a concert at Orchard Hill and was returning home when three men grabbed her and two, possibly three, reportedly raped her.

No suspects have yet been named by police who will hold a press conference this morning to present more details. Police said they are investigating the incident.

Hadley selectmen grant UPC licenses for community day

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

HADLEY—The Hadley Board of Selectmen last night granted entertainment, beer and wine licenses to the Union Program Council for the May 17 Community Day but warned that this year's concert would be the last if there were major problems.

"If you don't pull it off this year, in good shape, I'll vote against this next year," said Selectman Joseph F. Wanczyk.

Because Alumni Stadium is in Hadley, UPC is required to obtain permits from town officials for Sunday's entertainment and to sell beer, wine and food.

After about 20 minutes of discussion over concert plans with UPC, University officials and Hadley Police Chief Adolph A. Pipczynski, the Board voted 2-0, with one abstention to grant the one day licenses.

Selectman Brian Glazier said he did not favor granting the licenses but abstained from the vote.

Last Thursday, Pipczynski said he did not favor granting the permits because of problems with crowds, drugs, alcohol abuse and vandalism with the past two concerts.

After the Board's vote, Pipczynski said, "I had a feeling this would be the Board's decision. But as a police officer, as Police Chief, I cannot say this (the concert) is the best thing."

UPC talent coordinator Frank Gironda told the Board that the tone, and the size of this year's event would be scaled down in response to Spring Concerts of the past two years. He said he expected about 22,000 people to attend.

In 1979 and 1980, the concerts attracted more than 30,000 people each year and were marked by drug and alcohol abuse. Damage to University buildings after last year's concert was estimated at $2,000.

Gironda said no containers or coolers would be allowed into the stadium, people would be searched as they entered and ticket sales would be limited to students in the Five College area.

There will also be a specific area for purchasing and consuming beer, which will be sold to people who have proof of age. After IDs are checked, people would be given a wrist band to show they are over 20 years old.

Gironda said the nature of the bands would set a "mellow" tone and that lecturers would speak at the concert on the theme, "The future of higher education."

The total budget tor the event has been reduced from last year's $115,000 to $45,000, he said.

Education commissioner quits after 8½ years

BOSTON — State Education Commissioner Gregory R. Anrig is quitting to become president of the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J. Sept. 1, it was announced late yesterday.

Anrig, 49, of Needham, has been education commissioner in Massachusetts for 8½ years — including the years of turmoil while Boston's school system was being desegregated under court order.

He previously was director of the Institute for Learning and Teaching at the University of Massachusetts, Boston, and earlier, executive assistant to former U.S. Education Commissioner James Allen.

Anrig, in an interview, described school desegregation in Boston as the "toughest conroversy I faced.

The issue "was fundamentally the constitutional rights of children," he said, and he is "proud the (Massachusetts) Board of Education is one of the only state boards in federal cases across the North not found guilty of wrongdoing under the 14th Amendment" to the U.S. Constitution.

"While attention focused on Boston," Anrig said, "Springfield and New Bedford were peacefully desegregated under state board order."

Anrig said he takes most satisfaction from implementation of the state's special education law, requiring an extra investment in education for handicapped children, and changes in the school finance formula which directed more state aid to school systems in the poorest communities.

Noting that he won't be leaving until September, the commissioner said that he will continue working to soften the impact of the local tax-cutting Proposition 2½ law on school budgets.

"The major issues are going to be battled out in the next couple of months in the budget process of the state Legislature," Anrig said of Proposition 2½, adding that he will continue to be involved.

Anrig and the board had campaigned against the law approved by voters in last November's election.

As to his successor, the commissioner said he will make recommendations to the board, which makes the choice, if asked.

"Above all, my successor will have to have the full support of the state Board of Education, as I have had for the past 8½ years," he said.

In a statement announcing the resignation, Anrig also said, "the ETS presidency is an outstanding professional opportunity."

The testing service designs and administers admissions examinations for entry into college, graduate and professional schools and conducts research on testing theory, learning and educational policy.

Anrig will succeed John W. Turnbull, who is resigning after 11 years as president of ETS.

Boston may rehire police, firemen

Associated Press

BOSTON — The state Supreme Court ensured yesterday that Boston's destitute public schools will stay open, and at the same time, the city won permission to spend enough money to rehire 400 laid-off police and firefighters.

In a two-page decision, the Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling that Boston must keep its classes operating for the full academic year — even though the 64,500-pupil system has exhausted its $210 million budget.

"The city defendants have conceded that the closing of the schools will result in irreparable injury," the court said.

At issue was an order by Superior Court Judge Thomas Morse, who said the students have a constitutional right to attend school for a full year.

At the same time the high court gave its ruling, Morse was telling city lawyers in another courtroom that he had no objection to using part of an emergency $9.4 million infusion of state cash to provide fire and police protection. That money was provided Monday to reimburse Boston for city school construction.

Harold Carroll, the city corporation counsel, told Morse that the city will use $3 million of the money to rehire 200 police and 200 firefighters who were given termination notices in a budget cutback.

White had said Monday that he had a moral and legal obligation to use all of that money for the schools unless the judge allowed otherwise.

However, in court yesterday, Morse said that he had only required the city to keep the schools open.

"That order does not explicitly refer to the $9.4 million," he said.

The judge said he did not want to become involved in the day-to-day workings of city finances.

Seven police stations and three fire stations were also closed as a result of the financial troubles that White attributes to Proposition 2½, the taxcutting law passed by the voters last November.

A city spokesman said that besides rehiring the police and firefighters, the city will reopen police and fire stations in South Boston and East Boston.

The station closings have been especially unpopular in several Boston neighborhoods, which have been disrupted by frequent demonstrations.

Protesters have taken over shuttered police and fire stations in three neighborhoods, and for several mornings last week they blocked rush hour traffic on the city's major commuter roads.

Students at Villanova University stage a pep rally yesterday to protest the decision of the board of trustees to abolish the 87-year-old football program. More than 300 students attended the rally in the Villanova Fieldhouse.

Transportation secretary named

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King swore in Commerce Commissioner James F. Carlin yesterday to replace Transportation Secretary Barry M. Locke, suspended pending results of a probe of possible Greater Boston mass transit agency payoff.

King said the Carlin appointment filled what he described as "an opening in the cabinet structure in the administration."

While Locke was suspended until results of the payoff probe are in, King said Carlin is "approaching the new job as if is permanent."

The transportation secretary automatically is chairman of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's board of directors under a recent law reorganizing the MBTA.

Reagan optimistic as budget vote nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan lobbied down to the wire yesterday, leaving nothing to chance as the House neared a vote on a 1982 budget blueprint likely to wind up much to his liking.

"You know me. I run scared all the time," Reagan said at the White House.

By most counts, however, conservative Democrats stood ready to join with the Republican minority to hand Reagan a stunning victory in the House — a budget plan tailor-made for his deep spending cuts and three-year, 30 percent income tax rate reduction.

Despite pessimism from Democratic leaders fighting the Reagan plan, White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes predicted the final vote, expected Wednesday or Thursday, will be close.

Bobby Sand's burial tomorrow

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The body of hunger striker Bobby Sands was carried home from Maze Prison yesterday in a black hearse that moved slowly through the riot-torn streets of Belfast's Roman Catholic strongholds. Grieving residents draped black flags from their windows to mourn the latest IRA martyr.

Firebomb-hurling rioters clashed with British troops and police in the worst riots in the last two weeks of trouble surrounding Sands' hunger strike. At least 21 people were injured, three critically.

But the level of violence yesterday fell short of that predicted by those who said Sands' death would trigger civil war.

Mormons resist missile placement

SALT LAKE CITY — Saying that Mormon pioneers came West to spread "the gospel of peace," Mormon Church President Spencer W. Kimball issued an unsual plea to President Reagan yesterday not to put the MX mobile missile system in Utah and Nevada.

The 86-year-old Kimball, considered a prophet by the 4.7 million members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was joined by his two counselors, N. Eldon Tanner and Marion G. Romney, in urging that an alternative be found to concentrating the missiles in any one area of the nation.

U.S. may negotiate with Soviets

ROME — The North Atlantic Alliance closed one of the most divisive chapters in its history yesterday with a ringing endorsement of the Reagan administration's decision to start arms reduction talks with the Soviets by year's end.

In a communique issued at the end of a two-day foreign ministers' conference, the 15 NATO allies said they "welcomed the intention of the United States to begin negotiations with the Soviet Union" on cutting the number of medium-range missiles deployed in Europe.

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said the decision to negotiate 8— announced Monday — would help NATO resist a hard-nosed Soviet campaign aimed at stopping deployment of 572 medium-range American cruise and Pershing missiles in five European nations beginning in 1983.

Delmond and Dugal elected as graduate executives

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

The graduate student community at the University of Massachusetts voted on Monday and Tuesday in favor of unionization of Teaching Assistants, and also approved the increase in the Graduate Student Senate contribution to the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority to prevent a cutback in bus services.

The graduate students also elected unopposed candidates Jack Delmond and Sanjiv Dugal to the offices of president and vice president respectively.

At last night's meeting, the graduate senators held closed elections for the positions of treasurer, and executive officer (secretary). The Graduate Student Senate elected Paul Weiss, a doctoral candidate in sociology GSS Treasurer, and Terry Szold, a regional planning student GSS Secretary.

Weiss said he plans to fight cutbacks towards graduate assistants, and said he would "try to keep down tuition hikes and convince state legislators that the university is not a financial drain on the state."

Szold said she would increase the financial security of the Graduate students, and "attempt to improve the overall quality of life on campus."

In other business, Senator Phyllis Rodin presented a motion which will be taken up next week to recommend to the Human Relations Committee of the United Nations intervene in the conflict of Northern Ireland.

Student presence urged at budget talk

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Coordinating Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate yesterday heard plans to increase student attendance in Boston this month when the state House of Representatives votes on the budget allocation for the University of Massachusetts.

Ken Moore, chairman of the public policy team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, said Rep. Barbara Gray (R-Framingham) informed him that the state budget recommendation of the House Ways and Means Committee, including the allocation for UMass, is scheduled to be made public on May 11. Moore said discussion of that budget recommendation will begin in the House of Representatives one week later, on May 18.

Moore said SCERA is attempting to provide student presence during the entire discussion of the budget, which he estimated would last two or three days.

Moore told the committee that SCERA will also seek student attendance at a "lobby day" to be held in Boston on May 12, the day after UMass's recommended budget is scheduled to be announced. Moore said Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst) will address the group and he asked the 22 members of state legislature who are also UMass alumni to attend.

Moore also commented on positive reaction received from Rep. Gray and other legislators, and from parents of students, concerning the recent letter writing campaign conducted by SCERA. The campaign requested that parents and students write letters to their state representatives explaining their views of the recent tuition hike.

In other business, the committee voted on a structure of a search committee to fill administrative positions within SCERA.

Professional staff members will be hired this summer to fill the positions of Director and two staff assistants for SCERA.

A motion by Al Campagna to form one search committee composed of two sub-committees, one to interview candidates for Director and one to interview candidates for staff assistant, was passed by the Committee. According to the motion, the entire search committee would first screen candidates for both positions.

An earlier motion by Moore to form only one search committee with no sub-committees was defeated, seven votes to three.

The Committee also voted to pass a motion by Lisa Nazzaro to approve the rationale behind the existance of TIX, requested by members of TIX for the purpose of obtaining a Recognized Student Organization budget from the Budget Committee. Members of TIX said the organization's purpose is to provide advance sales of and a central location for sale of tickets to student events, and to prevent misappropriation and mismanagement of funds associated with such sales.

Women against porn plan 3 days of events

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

The film, "Women against Pornography" will be shown tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian Church in Northampton as the first event in a three day series of community education and organization programs sponsored by the Northampton group Women Against Violence in Pornography and Media (WAVPM).

Thursday night feminist author Andrea Dworkin will lead a panel discussion on "The Feminist Case Against Pornography" at Wright Hall, Smith College. On Friday a speak-out will be held on the West Lawn by the Campus Center lawn on several topics.

Elizabeth Dworan group spokeswoman said WAVPM is not anti-sex, but rather is concerned with the "equation of violence with sex in movies." Dworan cited examples of movies popular among college students such as : Prom Night, Friday the Thirteenth, Silent Scream, and Dressed Dressed to Kill. Quoting a Boston Globe article she said such movies are "focused on the attack of young women, and in the majority of the films the killers are sexually frustrated young men. They are selling a violent response to sexual frustration." She said WAVPM doesn't have a final answer on the issue, but are starting through community education.

Dworan said she has found women to be sympathetic to the issue. "Women intuitively feel the media is degrading, that it doesn't reflect their values." She said while men are not hostile or sympathetic they don't see how deeply pornography also effects their lives.

Although the group is feminist oriented, Dworan said she hopes men and nonfeminist women will also attend the events. She said she would like to see studv and consciousness raising groups arise from the series, and hopes the series will "start planting seeds of analysis in people's minds." Dworan said they are up aginst "very elite pornographers and people in the media, who reflect off of and encourage the macho image."

The three day series of events will begin on Wednesday night with the showing of "Women Against Pornography," at the Unitarian Church in Northampton. Thursday night Andrea Dworkin will lead a panel discussion on "The Feminist Case Against Pornography," at Wright Hall, Smith College.

The Friday afternoon speeches will include "Third World Women and Violence", "Pornography and Freedom of Expression" and "Rape on Campus". There will also be music with Debby Fier, Julia Burroughs, and Laurie Anderson. Following the speakout four different workshops will be held in the Campus Center, these will feature some of the topics covered at the speak-out. A final showing of the slide show will be presented at 3:00 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Dworan said she is expecting a turnout of between 500-600 people. She also said she is seeking volunteers to work for the panel discussion and at the speak-out. For more information contact Elizabeth Dworan 586-8127, or D.J. Bell.

Two University of Massachusetts women took matters in their own hands yesterday to protest the Collegian's what they said was inadequate coverage of an assault of a woman near Southwest on Friday, April 30.

Defacing the brief article which appeared on page 11 of yesterday's Collegian the women underlined the two brief paragraphs with a yellow highlighter and then in bold letters with red ink wrote, "Why is this hidden on page 11? One out of every three women are raped in their lifetime."

The women then hung the entire page of the paper on bulletins boards around campus.

Debbie Lavoy a sophomore from Amherst and Lisa Thomson a senior from North Leverett sat outside the Student Union building in the afternoon sunshine with a stack of day old Collegians and a handful of magic markers.

Lavoy explained the reason for their concern. "We're sick and tired of seeing tiny little hidden articles of violence against women.

Fran Basche, managing editor of the Collegian said the placement of the article on page 11 was an oversight of the technicians in charge of layout. "It was a mistake and should have received better coverage," she said.

Woman runner finds public supportive but finds male competitors a bit sexist

By SALLY REGE
Collegian Correspondent

Magdalena Mazer, of Amherst, two-time finisher in the Boston Marathon did not run this year. "I was training hard," she said, "about 80 to 85 miles a week." Just before the marathon she found out she was two months pregnant and decided not to race. "Pregnancy shouldn't keep you from running, it just slows you down," she said.

Mazer, 35, first started running one to two miles daily when she was pregnant with her first child, now four years old. She clocked a nine minute mile during her ninth month of pregnancy. An increasing number of women, like Mazer, are training at long distances and running marathons.

Studies show women are at a disadvantage in shorter races which require muscular strength, but in longer races such as the marathon which require endurance, women are catching up to their male counterparts.

In the Boston Marathon alone, the time-gap between the winning man and woman has reduced by 70 percent since 1972. This year's top woman ran five percent faster than last year's while it took her male counterpart nine years to obtain an equivalent increase in speed.

Mazer says she finds the public supportive of women runners. In many smaller races, however, the directors and male runners don't care for female competitors, she said, "Often when a woman passes a man in a race he says 'Oh shit! A woman? I must be really out of shape!'" Mazer also said the male winners of a race often receive their prizes before any of the women. Men tend to win sporting goods and running shoes. Women might receive prizes of nail polish and cosmetics. "I find that a little sexist," Mazer said, laughing. "That's not something to give to an athlete."

Mazer got her start running shorter races. "At first, I said, 'no I hate it, I'm not competitive,' but once I started racing, I loved it." She ran in about 20 races including the Holyoke St. Patrick's day race, the Northampton YMCA race, and the Greenfield YMCA race. Her first marathon was in Plattsburg, N.Y. in 1978. She later ran in a Richfield, Connecticut marathon with a time of 3:13 which qualified her for Boston. In the 1979 Boston Marathon she clocked 3:05 and ran again in 1980 with a time of 3:20.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Candid visions of UMass told from the heart of a senior

By KIMBERLEY GREEN
Black Affairs Staff

Getting a picture of UMass from the perspective of a senior always seems interesting when one takes into account that they probably had a very different impression of this place before they came here.

Black Affairs chose as their interviewing candidate, Nancy Brooks, a 21 year old Management major from Boston, Mass.

Brooks who attended a predominantly white high school did not experience the severe culture shock prevalent among most black students who are away from home for the first time. Instead she just felt solitary.

"Coming from a white school, I didn't realize how outnumbered we (blacks) were until after being here a few months," she said.

Brooks is apparently one of the more active members of the UMass community. She is Co-Director of the Malcom X Center located in the Southwest Residential area, a member of the Black Mass Communications Project, (B.M.C.P.) in which her main activity is a radio show on WMUA, the campus radio station, and Co—Chairperson of the Southwest Residential College Budget Committee.

These activities have allowed her to meet new people and have consequently aided her with coursework. But the activity that has had the most impact on her stay here is the Malcom X Center.

"I have gained enormous personal satisfaction working at the Malcom X Center, a center that is constantly under financial attack," she said.

Brooks said this gratification is present because she has the knowledge that she is doing something for others, "keeping the center open and available to black students."

Brooks said that although the Center is never slashed outwardly, it is done discreetly through proposed budget cuts. "Usually it's just cut the money more, more...," she said.

Aside from this is Brooks' belief that, by her being female and in a leadership position, her authority and ability may have been questioned more than if she were a male in that same position. "Since I'm a woman, they say, wait! A woman telling me what to do," she said.

Black Affairs asked Brooks how she felt about having attended a white institution instead of one that is all black. This is a question typically asked of black students who attend white institutions.

"I think I may have lost a sense of community and fellowship found among black students, because it's (fellowship) stronger on campuses that are of the black majority. "Reason being," she continued, "we (at white institutions) are so few."

But being a black student at an all white university is not totally detrimental because by being around people of other races, one learns how to relate on a more universal level. Even more importantly this experience can teach one how to survive in the working world. In Brooks' case it will be the corporate world.

"I've gained experience particularly valuable to me when working in a large corporation in America today. These corporations will be made up of a white majority and limited to blacks. I've picked up survival tactics that will help me in the corporate world," she said.

The bright, articulate woman said she tries to pass these tactics on to other black students who may not be as comfortable as she when relating to people of other races.

Although racism is a big issue throughout the world, Brooks said that it was sometimes hidden on this campus. Nevertheless, some situations make this fact more apparent than others.

For instance, there are very few blacks in visible positions within service organizations around campus. This can be shocking for freshmen coming to the University and don't know which way to go. As a result when they go to these organizations and don't see any familiar faces, they may be more apt to say, forget it. Brooks willingly gave her feelings on this concept.

"Black people in service organizations make me feel more likely to go to these places. For example, financial aid, if it was totally white—run I'd be more apprehensive about going there."

She said this was probably due to the notion that she would probably think that they couldn't possibly understand her situation.

"Having blacks in visible positions within support services on campus, adds to my inclination to go to these services for help, she said.

Another area where Brooks saw racism was the School of Business. Here there are no recruitment procedures for blacks and a small number of black students who have no support systems to meet their needs.

"They may not have a specific policy stating, 'we discriminate racially,' but since they have so few black students and no support services, the fact is evident.

"I think it is an inherent result of racism at the institution," she continued.

Although some areas of academic life have no specific services for minorities, there are places where a minority student might feel comfortable when confronted with a problem. Some of these include Placement Service, Health Services and the Dean of Students' Office.

Donald Lang, a deaf-mute accused of killing a prostitute is shown behind bars in a Chicago jail, his story is one of a 16-year legal odyssey.

On the whole going to a white university isn't that much different from going to one that is black. The number and variety of general activities available at UMass is enormous. There's the radio station, Collegian, Union Video Council, Student Senate, Union Program Council, the choice is almost unlimited. Some possible exceptions that seem to be more or less planned for white students are events such as Spring Concert, other concerts, etc. But this phenomenon works the other way too. Minority groups have events planned specifically for them such as the Malcom X picnic, concerts, etc.

These specially planned events do not have to cause dispute, when each group understands the other. According to Brooks, understanding is one way to improve race relations.

"My theory of improving race relations between whites and blacks starts with awareness, this goes for black students as well as whites. "Each must be aware of the others needs," she added, and "from awareness comes understanding, and from understanding you can possibly get acceptance. But even if there is no acceptance, understanding can bring harmony.

In spite of controversies related to this matter, Brooks feels that the 4 years was well worth it because she got what she came for.

"Personally, I've achieved a goal of gaining a college degree," she said. "And by working at the X, I've gained valuable field experience in my major," she added.

For most students these are the most important aspects of college life. Yet these principles may be hidden behind social, academic and personal pressures that may lead one to think life may be better somewhere else, or like the old cliche, "The grass is always greener on the other side." But in reality it is closer in proximity to, "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours."

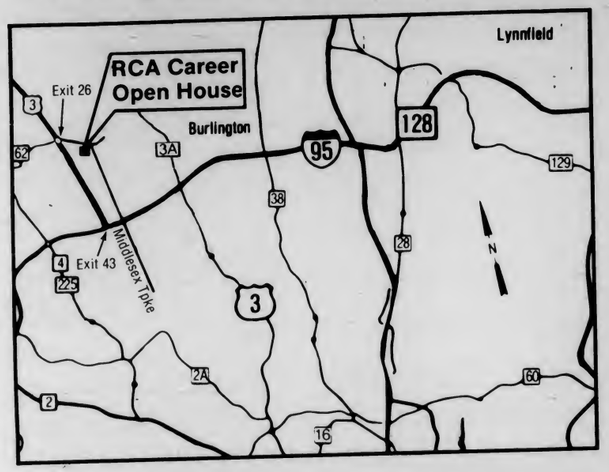
Graduating Engineers

There's still time to join The Tradition on the Move!

Attend RCA's Open House

Friday, May 8
Saturday, May 9



Career opportunities are available at RCA Burlington, right now! RCA technologies extend from mini- and micro-computers to distributed processing, electro-optics, automation, and C3I systems. As a recent graduate in electrical engineering or computer science, this means an opportunity for a variety of challenging work projects ranging from tiny devices to super-systems.

We are the only RCA plant in New England and employ 300 engineers. The informal structure means that achievers get high visibility. And you always have the backing of RCA's worldwide corporate resources. Our employment has doubled in the last 5 years alone, while sales have tripled! And the future looks even brighter.

You are cordially invited to our Open House where our managers will be happy to discuss an RCA career. A buffet will be served. The Open House will be held Friday, May 8th from 5 PM to 9 PM and Saturday, May 9th from 9 AM to 2 PM. The location is shown on the map.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Letter writers close minds to responsibility

Every couple of weeks for as long I've been here someone has written a letter-to-the-editor criticizing those people they call "radicals."

Sometimes a particular incident, like what happened at the recent visit of the former hostage, provides a clear target for these people, other times they just get fed up with all those "un-Americans" and decide to do their patriotic duty by ridiculing them and defending our country.

Jackson Katz

In just about every one of these letters, the "radicals" are portrayed to be either troubled, lonely souls looking for a cause, or "sixties leftovers" who don't realize that they're living in the eighties, or just plain negative people who vent their frustrations by tearing everything down. They're not for anything, the saying goes, they're just against everything.

They're sick, these letter-writers say, of having to listen to all those "maniacal and ideologically distorted ramblings" of a number of different "commie" groups who sit at tables in the Campus Center and hand out leaflets in the Student Union and hold rallies and demonstrations to call attention to their wild-eyed view of the world.

They're tired and growing very impatient with those people, those people who criticize the United States, who aren't grateful enough that they have the right to express their opinions in this country. They should go to Moscow, so many of these letters say, and see how far they'd get trying to exercise their right to free speech.

So they write these letters-to-the-editor, they rag on some radicals, they make their points, they prove their patriotism, but, somewhere along the line, they forget to open their minds. They don't bother to look into the issues. If one of those radicals is protesting something, it's probably just another distortion or overreaction.

They never stop to think that if people in this country, especially young people, didn't protest political, economic, and social injustice, many of the oppressed peoples of the world would have no other voice short of the guns and bullets they fight back with when they have no other choice. They never consider the fact that since we, not, say, Russian citizens, have the right to criticize and question our government, that we may have an added responsibility to do so.

Secure with their monopoly on reality, they don't accept that there is more than one way of looking at the problems of the world, and that what Uncle Sam and Exxon say is so is not necessarily the way it is.

Smug in their pride, they choose to disregard the fact that human societies have evolved and progressed not because everyone just sat around and kissed each other's asses and told each other how good they had it, but because groups of people, often small in number at first, had the idealism to dream of a better way and the guts to stand up when they had to fight for it.

And finally, these letter-writers, who praise our country and wrap themselves in the American flag, choose to ignore the fact that this country was founded by a bunch of idealistic revolutionaries, whose original dreams for this society have been distorted past what they possibly could recognize were they here to see it today.

Like so many other middle-class Americans, they choose to not think about these things, but alas, they don't care, for ignorance is bliss. It's just too bad that since everyone should have the right to express their opinions, we have to put up with their close-minded condescension every couple of weeks in the letters section of the Collegian as we try to change and better this world that we all have to live in.

Guest column The police can't do it alone

Objectivity.

I cover the Amherst Police beat for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and I pride myself on my objectivity. I write stories on stabbings, assaults, fatal car accidents, drunken drivers, and rapes. I talk to victims, assailants, cops, nurses and dead victims' families and friends. Sometimes it makes me sick, but I keep my objectivity.

Not this time.

Mark Mulcahy

A woman reported that she had been gang-raped Sunday night on her way back from the Orchard Hill/Central concert. Three men were supposed to be involved.

The woman, a UMass student, didn't register a complaint right away. Not because she didn't know what had happened, but probably because she knew what was going to happen.

First, she's going to have to go through counseling. This is the most humanistic phase. The staff of the Everywoman's Center, which provides rape counseling here at UMass, consists of genuinely concerned people, but she will still need to recount the incident.

Next, there's the police. They'll need details on what the men looked like, were any names mentioned, and what happened. Although this will surely be hard on the woman, Amherst police try to be as considerate and helpful as possible in these cases.

The last step involved in this pursuit of justice is also the most difficult. The courts. She'll probably be brought through the proverbial wringer here. She may be questioned about her background, her virtue, her sexual experience, the way she was dressed.

You might ask why she would do this. Revenge? I doubt it. Fear of retribution? Probably not. Most likely she is going through this so that it won't happen again. Maybe to you or a friend of yours.

Now you may be asking, "So what? What am I supposed to do?"

First off, if you know anything about what happened or who the rapists are, call the Amherst police.

Next, take a little of the energy that you're devoting to partying and an ounce of the support you're giving to the Spring Concert, and transfer some of it to support for the Everywoman's Center and other worthwhile groups that don't necessarily affect you directly.

Finally, help prevent future situations of this type by watching out for that 'crazy' guy who you think is so funny when he gets drunk and makes passes at all the women.

There is a need for all to be concerned with the prevention and punishment of the crime of rape.

The police can't do it alone.

Letters

He hopes you understand the point

What has been going on in Northern Ireland in the last couple of weeks has actually been going on there for hundreds of years, and it's about time we wake up and realize what is really taking place.

Ever since the British have ruled Ireland the Irish have rebelled against them. For their own benefit, the British have continuously oppressed and exploited the Irish people. In the 1840's (when all of Ireland was governed by England) there was a massive potato famine. During this famine one million people died of starvation while Irish grain was exported. What did the British do to help the Irish then? Britain wouldn't even let Irish immigrants into their country. Most of them emigrated to America, Australia or New Zealand. This is just a small example of British hospitality to the Irish.

The British view the Irish like the Nazis viewed the Jews, like Americans treated the Indians, and like Americans still treat many other minorities. The Irish finally achieved a partial political solution in 1921 when the 1921 Treaty of London established the present-day 26-country Republic of Ireland.

The northernmost province, Ulster, was divided to form what is now called Northern Ireland. The division of Ulster was done schematically to give the Protestants a 2-to-1 majority over the Catholic minority. With most Protestants being loyal to Britain one can imagine the treatment of the Catholics.

On Bloody Sunday, January 31, 1972, for example, 13 people were shot to death by British soldiers while taking part in a non-violent demonstration in Free Derry. Were the soldiers ever convicted of anything? No, instead they were commended by Britain on the fine job they had performed. Not one of the victims was found with any type of weapon. A good job?

Catholics and Nationalists in Northern Ireland have continually gotten the short end of the stick. What they want is basic civil rights, and for the British to get off their land.

And then there is the story of Bobby Sands. After being arrested and sentenced by a court with no jury, no witnesses, no defense, he still tried to help the cause. So after four years of solitary confinement with no clothing, Sands tried to bring a point across by starving himself to death. He is dead now, and I hope you understand the point.

Keep your butts

The following is a question which I pose to cigarette smokers: What happens to your butts when you throw them on the ground? Answer: They stay on the ground. And now, students, I pose a second question: What happens when thousands of people, everyday, feel it proper to throw their butts on the ground? Again, the answer is simple: A tremendous litter problem comes into existence.

While participating in the "clean-up-UMass" campaign last Saturday, I was overstruck with the amount of cigarette butt litter on campus. To the thousands of people who faithfully contribute to this, I remind you that this campus, and this planet, do not need your generous contributions. They are ugly. They exist in massive quantities. And the only thing that they bio-degrade into is the degragation of this campus.

I realize that this practice is not deliberate. It is simply a situation that people do not seem to think about.

I would have much rather spent my time picking cans and bottles on Saturday, but I simply could not let myself bypass these massive cemeteries of the common cigarette. The result? I spent two hours on one hundred yards of land. It made me sick, as I hope this letter will make you sick as the reality of this problem comes to your attention.

Put those butts back into the cigarette pack if you are not near a trash can. Throw them into your backpack. Put them in your pockets. What's the problem? Your backpack will smell like a tobacco factory? Your pockets will be full of loose tobacco filters? Just as you do not want these hideous litter bits, why do you think that other people want them for their viewing pleasure? Why do you think that the earth is willing to accept the corpses of your habit?

Police report bicycle thefts

Five bicycles valued at $930 were reported stolen from five different locations on campus yesterday, University of Massachusetts police reported. The bicycles, reported stolen from Prince and Thoreau residence halls in the Southwest Residential Area, North Village, and a bicycle rack between Hamlin and Arnold residence halls in the Northeast Residential Area were all locked to bicycle racks when they were stolen, police said. There is no apparent connection between the thefts, police said.

Police also received reports of chain saws valued at $2,410 reported stolen from Tillson Farm at 2 a.m. yesterday, police said. The padlock on the door was cut, they said.

In another incident, a guitar and case valued at $154 was reported stolen from an unlocked room in Cashin residence hall in the Sylvan Residential Area, police said.

Socialist to speak on lawsuit

The president of the Boston Socialist Workers Party will speak tonight at 7:30 in Campus Center room 101 on the party's $40 million lawsuit against the FBI, the CIA, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) for illegal harassment.

Sally Morrow will discuss the trial's progress as well as its political significance. The event is sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance and the Distinguished Visitors Program. Admission is free.

Couple clinic planned

Campus Chaplain Dr. F. Peter Sabey and Virginia Sabey, a health nurse practitioner at Hampshire College, will lead a couples enrichment workshop on Saturday at 559 South Pleasant St. The workshop is free.

For more information, contact the United Christian Foundation in the Student Union Building. Those interested in participating should register by tomorrow, Thursday by 5 p.m. by calling 545-2661.

Salvadorean students to speak

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Two members of the National Executive Committee of the All General University Association of El Salvador, that country's national student union, will speak tonight in Thompson Hall at 8 p.m.

The students will speak on the military takeover of the El Salvadorean Universities and the subsequent exile of thousands of students. A videotape of last June's take over will also be shown.

The United States Student Association is sponsoring a nationwide tour for the students. Local sponsors of the event include Young Worker's Liberation League, Patria Libre, the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity League, the Commuter Assembly and the SGA. The coordinating Committee of the SGA allocated money for the speakers last night.

Our fares are worth waiting for.

Do you know what a youth stand-by fare is? No? Well, it's an empty seat no one reserved at regular prices. Air New England is prepared to make those seats available to you for extraordinarily low prices if you're 21 or under. So you can fly somewhere and back on Air New England for a lot less than you ordinarily could. For example, a round-trip ticket from any of our New England cities to Boston only costs 50 bucks. (That's beans!)
Or a round-trip from cities like Cleveland to Rochester, or Burlington to New York only costs 75 bucks. (How d'ya like them apples?)
Fly stand-by with Air New England. Because if you can stand the thought of waiting a bit, you stand to save a lot of money.

You Can Change The World of Tomorrow - By Molding THE BOY OF TODAY!

Perhaps someone gave you a helping hand? Now, maybe you can pass on that help to someone else.

In 1859, a chance meeting between a poor priest and a street urchin resulted in a world-wide movement that is still alive and well today — and still growing.

The priest, who later became St. John Bosco, realized there were hundreds of boys who were hungry, homeless and without hope. By giving them bread, he reasoned, only a temporary solution could be achieved. There had to be a way to help them help themselves. Education or learning a trade was the only answer.

With a method based on reason, religion and kindness, he crowded out evil through a program of play, learn and pray. That he succeeded is very evident today in the number of Fathers and Brothers who carry on his work.

As the third largest Catholic order, the Salesians of St. John Bosco work in over 93 countries throughout the world . . . in boys' clubs, technical and academic schools, guidance centers, summer camps and in foreign missions.

But for all its size, the Salesians are a closely knit community with a warm family feeling. After all, a religious order can only reflect the warmth and the greatness of its founder.

Amherst police report arrest, thefts

Anganile Mualukomo, 24, of Amherst, was arrested on a warrant for assault and battery and surities to keep the peace (told to keep away from the complaintant) Monday, Amherst police said.

Rochelle Chavis, 42, of Amherst, was arrested on a past warrant of assault and battery Monday, police said.

A Hampshire College student reported his motorcycle stolen Monday, police said. While the owner was filing the complaint, a witness spotted the motorcycle 200 yards away torched, police said.

Harold A. Burnett, 21, of Malvern, Pennsylvania, was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol, operating an unregistered motor vehicle, and operating an uninsured motor vehicle, after he drove his car into a ditch yesterday morning, police said.

Tools, worth $300, were reported stolen from a West Street service station Monday night, police said.

A Cross Lane resident reported there was a pregnant possum in their garage Monday afternoon, police said. Police reportedly capture the possum and set it free in woods behind North East Street.

Sound Advice

Jefferson Starship
Modern Times (Grunt Records)

This is when I truly realize that the magical sixties are gone—when longtime bands I've always admired turn out commercialistic crap. Jefferson Starship has always been sort of an enigma anyway, sometimes being really poetic and heady, other times being as mindless and routine as the worst fly-by-night band. Modern Times falls definitely in the latter category, Modern Blahs would've been a more apt title.

The album offers nothing new. Although Grace Slick sings back-up on one number and a duet with a new lead singer Mickey Thomas on another, her departure along with that of Marty Balin's, really shows. The magic is gone. No longer even slightly melodic, Modern Times is just a showcase of guitaristic Craig Chaquico's heavy metal riffs, as was last year's Freedom at Point Zero.

Singer Mickey Thomas, who, before joining the Starship, recorded the hit "Fooled Around and Fell In Love," is partly responsible for the group's new commercialistic sound. His vocals simply don't have the sensitivity or passion which was so prominent with Slick's or Balin's singing. There is no real emotion, just singing. Now that Slick has re-joined the band full-time things may pick up.

Modern Times' best piece is "Stranger," a duet sung by Slick and Thomas. Slick's vocals, strained and pleading, perfectly reflect the meanings behind such lyrics as "Eyes that look like mine/ He said you know I've called before/ What is veiled now soon will be shown/ Come walk with me through the unknown." The rhythm surges—Aynsley Dunbar's drumming creates a steady beat accented by Pete Sears' pulsating bass. "Stranger" is a strong song. Yet the remainder of Modern Times pales in comparison.

It is really quite pointless to say much about the album's lyrical content—except that it is banal. The best example of this banality is "Alien." "Alien" is bad, a total rip-off of Queen's ridiculous "Flash Gordon," complete with slow opening beat.

—Steve Murphy

Rox
Rox [Boardwalk Records]

On the whole, the inhabitants of Wheeler House don't really like Rox. According to these self-proclaimed connoisseurs of Rock and Roll, "Rox is a pre-fabricated group that plays pre-fabricated music." True, their music does tend to go in one ear and out the other, but as it passes through my semidiluted brain cells, I get the feeling that it is basically a painless experience. Something like eating lime jello with a tour guide from Disneyland.

ROX in this case, is the name of The Band, The Album, and even the lead singer; Mike Rox, a would be Sean Cassidy with a slightly affected voice, who has a penchant for singing as if he has a mouth full of sour wine.

Actually, I really don't mind this album for there are a number of reason why it isn't soooo bad, for instance:

1. It was free. 2. The Jacket had all four corners intact. 3. The artwork on the cover and on the label was nice. 4. It provides me with the chance of hearing the styles of ten separate bands for the price of one.

According to my friends at Wheeler, Rox rips off and copies the styles of just about anyone who is on the charts today. You can almost tell what bands they are imitating just by the titles of their songs: "Zizi's Love" sounds like something David Bowie would subject us to, "Nervous Energy" is contrived enough for Pink Floyd, "Cartoon People" is Boomtown Rats material. For Joe Jackson fans, there is "That's What Your Girlfriend Said" and the "hit single" "DDDDDDDDDance" is sung with the same self assured stutter that Rocky Burnett blasted out his hit "Towing the Line" just last summer. And I bet you can guess who they mimic with "I'm No Elvis Costello."

It doesn't just stop here. Throughout the rest of the album there are strains of Frank appa, Boston and even The Rolling Stones. It's like a one band tribute to the wonderful world of Rock and Roll. In fact, the only groups that aren't represented are The Partridge Family and The Grateful Dead.

If a style can consist of bits and pieces of the styles of hundreds of other bands then ROX certainly has it. If a band is to be good, it must be natural. On "Out Tonight," an innocuous little ditty, they take advantage of the talent of the whole group without any pretense of greatness.

I can't vouch for the stage presence of this group for they are a brand new and otherwise unknown to me, but, if they pick up on a few Rock and Roll standards, dress nicely, behave properly in public, and polish up their act, there is no reason why they can't have a successful career as a warm up band for someone already established, or perhaps on the club circuits (preferably at someplace like Las Vegas, Los Angeles or Miami or anywhere else inoffensive electronic music is appreciated.)

★ Sound Advice

Robin Lane and the Chartbusters
Imitation Life (Warner Bros.)

The Fools
Heavy Mental (EMI)

In the past couple of years Robin Lane and The Fools have burst out of the Boston club scene and landed recording contracts with major labels. Both bands have just released a second album. For the Chartbusters (who have also had a five song live EP) it marks a definite progression; for The Fools it shows sharp decline.

Robin Lane has come up with a fine album full of melodic pop-oriented songs. Lane's full ranging voice can be heard over intricate musical patterns weaved by the Chartbusters. They manage to create a full and interesting sound, which transcends the bar scene they were bred in, while maintaining the rough edges of a club band.

Lane's lyrics speak of the problems of stardom and society, but there are songs just for fun. She has a flair for writing tuneful hooks, which the listener gets drawn into, yet has more substance to them than regular AM garbage. Although you can recognize the Chartbuster's sound immediately, this isn't just a repackage of their first album.

The Chartbusters opentheir LP with their radio song "Send Me an Angel." The sound brings to mind images of The Byrds, yet with a new wave tinge to it to freshen it up a bit. Lane's roots are in folk music. (Among her credits are background vocals on Neil Young's Everybody Knows This is Nowhere LP.) obviously influence her new wave music.

"No Control" stands out as one of the strongest cuts in this collection. A hard rocking number, a la Blondie, this is one of those tunes that's hard to get out of your head. The non-sensical lyrics (with a Boston setting) add humor to the song.

There still can be heard faint traces of the Chartbuster's night club roots; this further enhances the charm of the record. They write songs that are danceable but contain a studio sharpness. The Fools, on the other hand, have not been able to shake their night club affiliations and have produced an album of redundant slop.

The Fools exhibited some potential on their first album The Fools Sell Out, but on Heavy Mental they only manage to offer a couple of listenable tunes.

On the whole this effort is a total washout. The material generally consists of two and three chord progressions with the aggravating singing voice of lead singer Mike Girard, and Doug Forman's bass mixed up too loud.

The Fools are supposed to offer clever lyrics, but their wit is conspicuously absent. Most of the songs are simple dance numbers totally lacking in creativity. The only redeeming factor is Rich Bartlett's lead guitar. He occasionally offers an interesting riff, but the flashes of brilliance are few. Over all he repeats the same chords again, and again, and again.

The Fools appear destined to play on the same level of talent for some time to come. They seem content to remain a night club act that people bounce to, while Robin Lane and the Chartbusters show real promise. Perhaps this album will give Lane the national attention she and her band deserve, and propel them out of the New England club scene in which they seem to be eternally stuck.

Robin Lane and The Chartbusters

Holly Near
Fire in the Rain [Redwood Records]

Yes, there are songs other than "My baby takes the morning train" that are catchy enough to hum and sing all day. Fire in the Rain, Holly Near's latest album, offers a melodious blend of political and love songs.

Near wrote all of the songs on the album and delivered them in a clear voice that ranges in tone from honey to honky tonk. While other artists are writing about eating Cadillacs and kissing pineapples, Near addresses the problems of sexual harassment on the job, unemployment, war, and nuclear rain.

"Foolish Notion" deals with war and capital punishment; the structure of our society. Special attention might be paid to these lyrics today:

"Why do we kill people who are killing people
To show that killing people is wrong
What a foolish notion
That war is called devotion
When the greatest warriors are the ones that stand for peace."

Logic and "real life" situations are characteristic of the content of Near's songs. As a result, live audiences feel directly involved in her music, as will radio listeners if this album gets the air play it warrants. There's nothing abrasive in Near's musical politics.

Near's "Working Woman" is as sappy as Dolly's "9 to 5," but she takes the issue farther. I also doubt that Near would go for a television skit portraying a song about women with a cast of solely male dancers.

Near also takes care with her love songs. She goes deeper than the surface of relationships and deals head on with the complexities of friendship and love. "Golden Thread" centers on the importance of overcoming jealousy and yet has a humorous touch (more evident when performed in concert with the interaction of the audience).

With Fire in the Rain Near alternately seranades and politicizes the listener. She handles both functions skillfully.

Huskies drop mittmen in ten

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

If baseball is a game of inches, it is also a game of misfortune and second-guessing.

For the second time this season, the University of Massachusetts baseball team was stung in ten innings by the University of Connecticut, a 7-6 affair at Earl Lorden Field yesterday.

The Minutemen did erupt for three runs in the eighth inning to take the lead, 6-4. The rest of the contest is just a bad memory for UMass as a combination of three piecemeal runs and two backfired coaching directives by Minutemen head coach Dick Berquist sent the hosts on their long walk back to the Boyden Gymnasium locker room.

stands at 18-17, this game should never have progressed to the bottom of the ninth inning.

Reliever Dan Cook shut down the Huskie offense from the sixth inning through the ninth, giving up only one hit, a double to Mr. Two-bagger himself, UConn's Mike Johnson (he finished with three RBIs). With confidence and a two-run lead, Cook looked to be the winner.

However, Connecticut's John Gallic lead off the ninth with a single into left. Johnson then hit a hard grounder to third that was thrown away by UMass third baseman Barry Bennett, putting runners on second. A Mike Grumoli sacrifice fly brought UConn to within one, 6-5.

A harmless fly out by Tom Capalbo let everyone breathe a sigh of relief. One UMass fan left the stands to go to his car. He should have stuck around as Huskie Jim Considine lifted a towering shot to center that sent Mark Litano back. Any other outfielder might not have gotten to the ball at all. But Litano made the grab, but could not hold onto it. It went as a triple: tie game.

Dean Bennett led off the bottom of the ninth with a walk on four pitches. Everyone in the ballpark expected the next hitter, Barry Bennett, to bunt. After Berquist pulled the senior aside for consultation, Bennett brought his bat back on Huskie Joe Frager's second delivery and attempted a slash bunt.

It backfired. Bennett pulled the ball toward the middle of the infield where it became an instant double play and both runners were erased.

UConn (20-16-2) scored the winning run in a neat fashion. Shawn Granger singled to left and moved to second on a sacrifice bunto by catcher Doug Eliot. He later scored on a single through the left hole by Gallic.

One run behind, the Minutemen's last chance to stay alive fell a foot short. Jim Aulenback led off the bottom of the tenth with a single. Pinch runner Joe Larkin moved to second on a sacrifice by Warren McReddie. Keith Lovellette cranked a single to right, but Larkin, sent home by third base coach Bergquist, was cut down in his attempt to score by a perfect peg from Kevin Trahan to Eliott, frustration, and second guessing.

As they have done consistantly at home this season, the Minutemen came back during the course of the game. Starting UMass hurler Adam Grossman yielded two runs in the first inning and a single tally in the third, but the Minutemen would have no more of it.

Back-to-back singles by Lovellette and Vin Bonanno, who each had three hits, set up John Kraham's two-RBI double that made the score 3-2.

Doubles were ripped all day by the Huskies. Of their first eight hits, six were of the two-base variety. Back-to-back two-baggers by Gallic and Johnson in the fifth gave the visitors a two run lead, 4-2.

The Minutemen started the comeback with a single run in the fifth, thanks to a single by Dean Bennett and a sacrifice fly by Litano. In the gallant eighth, Litano doubled and moved to third on a fly out by Aulenback. After McReddie walked, Lovellette knocked in Litano with a single. McReddie and Lovellette later scored on a single by Bonanno and a sacrifice fly by John Kraham respectively.

LEFTY HURLER—Minuteman Adam Grossman readies a pitch in an early inning of Massachusetts' 7-6 at the hands of UConn.

Rugger adjusts, scrums the UMass way

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

American sports cut out so many people: if you are not tall enough, you cannot play basketball; if you are not big enough, you cannot play soccer; not so in rugby.

"In rugby there are no physical requirements, there's always somewhere you can play even if you're not big enough or fast enough. It's a thoroughly enjoyable game and you get used to the bumps and bruises!" says Paul Morrison, wing forward on the University of Massachusetts men's rugby team.

In rugby there is a front line and a back line. The front eight, who are your forwards (including Morrison), do the hard work. The backs are the first to support: they are the first line of defense and the last line of attack.

Morrison is on the front line, and what he does at his position, wing forward, is to control the ball in the back of the scrum. He waits for the ball to get past the two lines of forwards on his team, and when the ball gets to him, he either picks it up or lets it out with his feet to the scrum half. His position is very strategic because it is up to him to get and release the ball, quickly and efficiently, to the player waiting for it, which is usually the kicker.

Morrison is an exchange student, majoring in American History, from the University of Kent in London and has been playing rugby since he was 11 years old.

"The thing I remember most about my first game of college rugby was that it hurt a lot. We played a big club-side team and they hit hard!"

"In America it's a slightly different game; here, they hit as hard, but play faster and more enthusiastic." sc.

Morrison said it was frustrating early on to adjust to the way rugby is played in the U.S. He said that the men did too much running around with the ball and did not try to gain as much yardage as possible.

Morrison said that U.S. rugby players overstretch themselves, trying to gain as much ground as possible as fast as possible. Americans like to run the ball too much, whereas the English employ tactical kicking and control the ball much better.

"It's the first down syndrome that you Americans get from football - you have to get that first down or you don't feel safe."

"In England we try to make as much ground as comfortably as possible. We try to set up good plays. I think that's the major difference between the two."

Morrison also feels that, from football, some of the players get "the idea of killing or maiming your opponent instead of easing them to the ground!"

"There are times when American players can hit hard unnecessarily instead of trying to run around the opponent with the ball and bring them to the ground as in England."

However, Morrison does feel that UMass has come to grips with the game and have made phenomenal improvements.

"I feel that UMass could play any of the sides that I've played at home (England), and I don't feel they would be disgraced."

The improvement that UMass has made can be exemplified in the scrimmage against Chelsea College from the University of London, in England. Chelsea is regarded as one of the top college teams in England, and UMass managed to play a strong game against the Englishmen and finish the game with a tie.

"I enjoyed the game. It was a lot of work for our forwards, but I was thoroughly pleased with our team's performance. I thought we gave them a good fight and I'm pleased that we held them to a tie."

Even though rugby is thought of as a rough sport, Morrison emphatically states that it is much less rough than playing football.

"In rugby you can only be hit if you're the man carrying the ball, whereas in football anyone can get hit. So when you're carrying the ball and you know you're most likely to get hit, you get psyched for the hit, and when you're expecting it you don't get hurt as much as if you're not."

"It also has to do with the way we hit, and this is where football is a lot rougher. In rugby we try to pull the man down rather than hit the man down. We get our head out of the way and pull them over our shoulder instead of directly hitting them as in football."

"The plays are so much more off the top of the head in rugby. In football you can't use your brain, you have to follow a play. In rugby you can decide for yourself what to do, in football the coach tells you what to do."

Morrison said ruggers have a lot more fun when they are playing as opposed to other teams who are out on the fields/courts for one thing: to win. Ruggers can play and look on it as if it was a Sunday afternoon game of touch with the guys.

"Sure, everybody wants to win, but you have to have sportsmanship; having a good time is very important."

"Fifty percent of rugby is the social aspect, easily. Half the reason I play rugby is for the social life. It's a great sport; a social game. Once the game's over you get right down to the keg!"

This is one reason why Morrison is against seeing rugby turn pro - all the social fun would come out of it and people would be playing just to turn a profit.

Morrison said he is fully enthused about U.S. rugby and he feels that in another five years, there's "no reason why the U.S. shouldn't have one of the best teams in the world."

Paul Jaffee of the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team holds his concentration before returning a shot last weekend at the New England's held at Amherst College. UMass finished fifth in the tournament.

IN ONE EAR & OUT THE OTHER

I find Manfred Wolf's article, "Costa Rica is not Nicaragua" upsetting for two reasons: one, his irrelevant and uninformed remarks about Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Mexico; and two, his chauvinist American attitudes towards "vacation" countries.

First, Costa Rica is affected by the problems in El Salvador: its military forces are a possible intervention force should Washington decide to invade El Salvador. True, for the swinging American tourist El Salvador and Nicaragua are hardly a paradise now, but they were never a paradise for their own people. At last the Nicaraguans and the Salvadorans have the chance to make their countries democratic, peaceful, and orderly, for they are ridding themselves not of cultural diversity (Wolf's explanation for their problems) but of the American businessmen and plantation owners who have crushed them for 100 years.

I had hoped that the ugly American tourist, expecting the rest of the world to kiss his feet, had died out — but he has risen again in the form of Mr. Wolf. Countries should be praised for their cultural treasures, not for subservience to Americans.

Costa Rica may well be a paradise for those looking for single's clubs. If it is a paradise, let it stand on its own merits, not on faulty comparison. Ampersand is a good music paper — leave the travel guides to those who have something intelligent to say.

In reference to your Readers Poll, you may have been disappointed in the responses you received, but I am more than disappointed at your analysis of those responses. How dare you ask, "Who is Leo Buscaglia?" especially when your offices are located in California.

Leo Buscaglia is a professor at the University of Southern California who teaches courses in, and tours nationwide conducting lectures on, the subject of love. He has written two books with which I am familiar. One of those is a marvelous volume, now available in paperback, entitled simply LOVE. Not only are Professor Buscaglia's lectures well attended, but many times they are videotaped by schools and television stations to be shown at other times.

Leo has an excellent rapport with his audiences, especially when he speaks at colleges and universities. It is not unusual for him to spend an hour after a lecture talking with, listening to and HUGGING people who come up to the stage to see him.

Rottin' and a 'Rollin'

AND NOW FOR the third Fitzcarraldo item in three months: ailing Jason Robards was replaced by Klaus Kinski, and now he and Mick Jagger and director Werner Herzog are happily rotting and filming in the Peruvian jungle. This film is supposed to take a long time, but we're told (nay, promised) that the Rolling Stones will indeed tour the U.S. this June. This could also make life complicated for Stones drummer Charlie Watts, since Watts may be encouraged to tour with Rocket 88, a collection of pre-rock jump blues musicians also starring Ian Stewart, perennial pianoman on Stones tours; ex-Cream bassist Jack Bruce; and early British blues guru Alexis Korner. Atlantic just issued Rocket 88's live LP.

Enough, Already

LOOK FOR THREE, count 'em, three TV series based on females in the armed forces: Private Benjamin (already on the air), after Goldie Hawn's film that started it all; Hot Wacs, about a group of women sent to an island full of men; and Wendy Hooper, described as "a female Gomer Pyle."

THERE WERE TWO versions (of several originally planned) of the Israeli raid on Entebbe; now at least six versions of the Iranian hostage crisis are stewing, but the first into production is based on the Canadian embassy rescue of Americans from Teheran. The less-than-appealing title is Escape from Iran: The Canadian Caper (caper?). Filmed in Toronto, directed by Lamont Johnson, it will be a two-hour CBS docudrama.

IF WE CAN stand one more Elvis movie, This Is Elvis has just emerged amidst much Warner Bros. hoopla. Producers promise never-before-seen footage of the King (home movies and other tapes from Elvis' collection), plus an actual duet between Elvis and Frank Sinatra, in which Sinatra sings Elvis' hit "Love Me Tender" and Elvis simultaneously croons Sinatra's "Witchcraft." The whole shebang is produced by Andrew Solt and Malcolm Leo, who did the TV special Heroes of Rock and Roll.

WHO SAYS MOVIES aren't sensitive to college trends? No less than three flicks are now in the works based on the campus killer game, assassination: Tag (starring Robert Carradine and Linda Hamilton), KAOS (Killing as an Organized Sport), and The Killing Game. The latter is of particular interest to us, since it is written by two Ampersand contributors, Bill Braunstein and Eric Estrin (see Mel Brooks feature this issue).

THREE SEPARATE FILM biographers of jazz great Charlie Parker are in the works — to star Richard Pryor, Billy Dee Williams and Ben Vereen, respectively. The assorted filmmakers may decide to pool their resources into one film

HE SWEARS THIS one is the last: Sylvester Stallone is about to launch Rocky III.

Sign 'em Up

TIM HUTTON is being considered for the lead in Sophie's Choice (the narrator's role), to be directed by Alan Pakula (Starting Over). No Sophie yet . . . Linda Ronstadt won't appear in the Los Angeles version of Pirates of Penzance; her replacement has not yet been cast, but Rex Smith will definitely be replaced by Andy Gibb . . . John Belushi and Dan Aykroyd will star in Neighbors, based on the Thomas Berger novel; director will be John G. Avildsen, writer Larry Gelbart . . . Richard Gere won't star opposite Bette Midler in Hot Streak (formerly titled Jackpot), as rumored here last month; it'll be Ken Wahl (Fort Apache, the Bronx) . . . And after that, Bette heads for How I Danced with the Prince, co-starring John Hurt. 'Tis rumored that Bette is considering the lead in an American remake of The Toy, surely one of the lamest French comedies of the last decade. Richard Pryor supposedly has the title role, an out-of-work journalist who becomes a rich kid's plaything . . . Tennis player John McEnroe was not, contrary to popular rumor, offered half of the title role in the film version of the cartoon Terry and the Pirates. But McEnroe Senior, father and manager of the ace kid, told Ampersand "We would think about doing movies if someone offered us a serious role." We?

Collaborations

ACE ANIMATOR RALPH BAKSHI will collaborate with sword-and-sorcery artist Frank Frazetta on a film called Fire and Ice, Bakshi to animate Frazetta's drawings. "I also wrote the story," Bakshi told us — but he wouldn't give it away. "It's in the fantasy genre, as opposed to science fiction. I'll try to live up to Frank's work." Bakshi said the film won't be ready until about a year from now, and will be closer "to Frank's comic book work" than to his Conan illustrations (Bakshi said both he and Frazetta had turned down the live-action Conan currently being filmed by John Milius). As for their working partnership, Bakshi said, "Frank likes pizza, and we're both from Brooklyn, so it's like going home again."

TV STAR VALERIE BERTINELLI (One Day at a Time) is going to marry blood-and-guts guitaritst Eddie Van Halen.

Flick Facts

THE KING OF COMEDY boasts a bizarre cast and plot: Robert De Niro plays a comedy fan who kidnaps talk show host Jerry Lewis and holds him hostage. The ransom: Lewis must teach De Niro a stand up comedy routine. If people laugh, Lewis goes free; if not, his head gets blown off. Directed by Martin Scorsese, the film also stars Harvey Keitel.

STIR CRAZY cost $8 million to make and earned $91 million; principals Richard Pryor, Gene Wilder and director Sidney Poitier all had percentages. Over here, fellas.

GEORGE C. SCOTT has optioned the book The Last Days of Patton, written by Patton: Ordeal and Triumph author Ladislas Farago, about the last nine months of Patton's life. A previous film, The Brass Target, also dealt with Patton after the war, but it was, as they say, highly fictionalized.

CHARMED LIVES, the best seller by Michael Korda about his colorful Hungarians-in-Hollywood family, will be filmed, but only the last part — about uncle Alex and his young wife. To be written and directed by Nicholas Meyer (Time after Time).

SAMUEL FULLER, the director-writer whose Big Red One earned critical acclaim last year, will next do White Dog, based on the Romain Gary novel, but Fuller announced he would deviate from the book's focus on Gary and his then-wife actress Jean Seberg, and instead would concentrate on the tale of a young woman who inherits an attack dog

Bad Taste Is Timeless

A&M THOUGHT THE group's name was in bad taste," a spokesperson for the Dead Kennedys independent label, IRS (their records are usually distributed by A&M), told Billboard recently, "but we think of them as the American Sex Pistols."

A&M's reluctance is especially whimsical in light of an album cover and promo shot they put out about a month earlier. It depicts the "artist," Patrick D. Martin, grinning wickedly and holding pistol-grip devices, apparently detonators. A thick wire leads from each device to the miniskirted crotch of a female model, seen only from the waist down. If A&M's policies have a rationale, it must be that sexual mutilation is terrific but political satire is repulsive.

FORMER MAMAS AND PAPAS founder and currently cured junkie John Phillips says he's still planning to reorganize his group, but it would include only two originals — Phillips himself and Denny Dougherty, plus Phillips' daughter, actress MacKenzie Phillips, and Spanky MacFarland, who had a number of hits in the late Sixties with Spanky and Our Gang.

This Month's Lawsuit

ACTRESS SALLY KIRKLAND filed a $2 million damage suit against actor Dennis Hopper for allegedly cutting her with a knife during filming of Human Highway, Neil Young's epic. Kirkland is also suing Young and the film company. Meanwhile, Young's representatives don't even want to admit he's making a movie; they refuse to say if he appears in it (he does), what it's about or whether it's finished. We did learn that Young's manager Elliott Roberts is the producer, filming began three years ago, stopped for awhile and resumed one year ago. No comment from anyone on Hopper's accused knife wielding.

Hiatt on the Block

"IF THE ROOF had collapsed," said an Ampersand correspondent who viewed John Hiatt's recent L.A. club dates, "the record industry would've had to shut down." Indeed, representatives of Geffen, Warners, A&M, Chrysalis and Atlantic all turned up for Hiatt's first performances since divorcing himself from MCA Records and completing a tour as supporting guitarist to Ry Cooder. According to our man on the scene, the notorious Davin Seay (who wrote our March issue feature on Hiatt), "When he finished a set, you got the feeling they would climb the stage and auction him off."

Playing Chess, One More Time

CLASSIC RECORDS BY Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Chuck Berry, Bo Diddley, Little Milton, J.B. Lenoir and even the Rolling Stones once emanated from a funky South Side Chicago studio owned by Chess Records. The Stones, in fact, included an instrumental track named "2120 Michigan Avenue" on an early LP. Leonard Chess died in 1969, a millionaire thirty-six times over, but his studios have long been silent. Recently, however, Gerald Sims and Kathleen Newman, partners in Gerim Recording, Inc., have revitalized the facility at 2120 S. Michigan Avenue, installing 16- and 24-track machines. Welcome back.

Does your car stereo get car sick?

TS-167 KP-7500

You know the nauseating facts.

You're cruising down the highway all set to hear your favorite cassette when suddenly it's devoured.

And when you go to its rescue, your car stereo simply belches out a floor full of tape.

But you can solve all that with a Pioneer Auto Reverse car stereo with ATSC. Our new Automatic Tape Slack Canceller feature.

It automatically loosens tight tape and tightens loose tape before play. Which guarantees your music will be heard and not eaten.

So you'll always have your music the way you want it.

Coming out of your speakers.

And not your dashboard.

"Thanks anyway, but my kid sister can give me a lift. She's got a Jensen."

The Jensen Triax® Three-Way Speaker System.

To some people no car is special without a Triaxial® stereo speaker system. After Jensen invented it, the Triax became the most imitated car stereo speaker in the world. Because it was designed with one purpose: faithful sound reproduction.

A Triax not only has a woofer to recreate low tones and a tweeter to capture the highs, it also features a midrange speaker to reproduce all those subtle sounds between low and high. The result is remarkable clarity across the entire sound spectrum.

And since Jensen hasn't had to concentrate on duplicating the Triax, we've been able to put all our efforts into making it better than ever. Not with gimmicks or gadgets, but with meaningful innovations in the sound.

We've studied absorption, reflection, baffle enclosures and the "closed cavity effect" so that a Jensen Triax interacts with the acoustics of your car. We've also examined road noise, car speed, sound level vs. distortion and the need for higher power handling and driven the Triax high performance even higher.

But enough.

Come hear a Triax three-way car stereo speaker system. After all, we know it's not all the technical talk that moves you. It's the sound.

George Thorogood & The Destroyers:

"Wherever we play, we turn it into a dump!"

BY CHRIS MORRIS

"You've seen the show, right? Then what's the need of an interview?" George Thorogood curls his lip as he says this, revealing a set of large, dangerous-looking teeth. "Fangs" may be the better term, considering Thorogood's apparel. Clad in a scintillating snakeskin jacket (identical to the one worn by Marlon Brando in The Fugitive Kind) and matching boots, he looks like a rattler coiling up for the strike. As Thorogood half-scowls and pushes another cracker into his maw, he eyes my tape machine. I begin to wonder if it's next on the menu.

"If I have to explain it to ya . . ." Thorogood slumps wearily against the wall of his subterranean dressing room in Pasadena's Perkins' Palace, where he is preparing for two sold-out evening shows. He continues, "I mean, you must have a general idea of what it's all about from seeing the shows?"

Responses like these shave years off an interviewer's life span, but Thorogood may have a point. The Wilmington, Delaware singer-guitarist's music — drawn from such diverse sources as the blues of Elmore James, John Lee Hooker, and Hound Dog Taylor, the rock 'n' roll of Chuck Berry and Bo Diddley, and the country and western of Hank Williams and Johnny Cash — is loud, rowdy and direct, and better felt than explained. Thorogood's live concerts are mini-Springsteenian frenzies, with "Lonesome George" himself orchestrating the riot. As the Destroyers — drummer Jeff Simon, bassist Billy Blough, and saxophonist Hank Carter — lay down a barrelhouse roar behind him, the guitarist does a Berry-style boogie duck walk across the stage, pausing to dip the neck of his guitar over the heads of the crowd like a roadhouse Pope blessing the masses. If it's a club show, Thorogood will dance across the ringside table tops, all the while wringing amped-up shrieks and sawmill bottleneck noise from his Gibson 125. He's right: at moments like these, the brain shuts down and the feet start moving.

Thorogood bristles like a porcupine if you request any deep thoughts about his music. "It's dirty, man, it's dirty," he replies. "We just play it, man. We dig it. If it's too loud, we turn it down. If it's not loud enough, we turn it up. What we do, I don't define it anyway. It's entertainment, period. Some of it's funny, some of it's . . . out of tune. That's very funny."

Although Thorogood greets most questions about his career as churlishly as master journalist blaster Frank Sinatra, a rough outline emerges. He first caught the bug for blues and good-time rock 'n' roll about 10 years ago listening to a band whose repertoire bears a marked similarity to the Destroyers' — the Rolling Stones. At the same time, he got a chance to hear the black greats of the style in person, in clubs and at concerts in New England and the Northwest.

"I saw 'em play, not a lot, but anytime I heard they were playing anywhere within 3000 miles, I went to see 'em play," Thorogood says. I ask him if he ever saw Hound Dog Taylor, the late Chicago blues and boogie king whose "Just Can't Take It" appears on Thorogood's third Rounder Records album. "Oh, sure," he replies. Where? "Oh, Washington, D.C., Philadelphia, Cambridge, in Connecticut, Ann Arbor. . . ."

Thorogood began his professional career about seven years ago. The current members of the Destroyers joined up along the way — Simon early on, Blough about two years later, and Carter, whose leathery-toned sax playing enlivens Thorogood's recent release, More George Thorogood and the Destroyers, two years ago. Of Carter, Thorogood says, "He likes to drink. I like to drink. It was a question of time before he joined."

The Destroyers' original trio line-up played "every bar" in New England in their early days, one such gig attracted the attention of John Forward, who brought the group to his friends at Rounder Records, a small folk specialist label headquartered in Somerville, Massachusetts. Rounder went on to release the group's first album in 1977, and the record, which featured Thorogood's raucous talking blues version of John Lee Hooker's "One Bourbon, One Scotch, One Beer," became a national radio hit and a sales dream come true for tiny Rounder.

Two other records — 1978's Move It on Over and last year's More — followed. Thorogood himself refers to the vinyl trilogy as "A Fistful of Dollars, For a Few Dollars More and The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly." A good measure of the Destroyers' growing popularity lies in MCA's attempt to capitalize on the band's success with the 1979 release of some 1974 demos cut by the band for the label. Thorogood, incensed by this rather cheap move, took the group off the road for seven months to avoid inadvertent publicity for the record. Not that he minded that much: the layoff coincided with the baseball season.

"I embarrass myself in the infield," Thorogood says of his playing as second baseman with the semi-pro Delaware Destroyers. The band doesn't tour during the baseball season (drummer Simon is a teammate), but Thorogood makes light of the music press coverage accorded his baseball mania. "They've got this thing blown all out of proportion," he snarls. "It's just an activity I have." Asked about reports that he is "giving up baseball for music," he replies, "If I'm gonna give it up for somethin,' she's gotta be good lookin,' at least."

The sports-oriented conversation turns to professional wrestling, and Thorogood's mood momentarily brightens. "My favorite tag team is Chief Jay Strongbow and Indian Billy White Wolf," he confides. I bring up the name of Handsome Jimmy Valiant, a peroxided pro I used to know in Chicago. That dick," Thorogood mutters. "You ever seen that little pendant that Elvis Presley gave him?" I am about to say that George himself, with his bulky frame and disquieting disposition, would make a good mat bad guy, but I think better of it.

The talk returns to music, and the relative scarcity of original material in Thorogood's repertoire (one instrumental, "Kids from Philly," is credited to "Jorge Thoroscum"). Thorogood replies earnestly, "I've been doing original material off the stage, but the songs aren't any good! If they were as good as the ones we play, we'd be usin' 'em, you dig? I don't even let these guys (indicating the band members) hear some of the stuff, it's too embarrassing."

So the Destroyers will continue to record and play bar-band-tough covers of roadhouse rock 'n' roll and blues? At the word "roadhouse," Thorogood gives me one of his "What-do-you-mean-sir" looks. "When I heard all that music, I didn't really think it belonged anywhere. I didn't think it belonged in a roadhouse or a big place or a bar or on the street or what. We just listened to it." He points to his gleaming boots and says, "It's like sayin' I dig snakeskin boots, nobody's gonna tell me where to wear 'em or where not to wear 'em, you follow?"

With pride, he continues, "Besides, wherever we play, we turn it into a dump. Whether we're playin' or not, it becomes devastated. It's the five-man trio, that's our act."

You may be leaving school — graduating, transferring, or just quitting — but that doesn't mean you have to leave Ampersand.

For a mere $5.00 per year (we haven't raised the price in four years; what other business can make that claim?) Ampersand will come to your door, dormroom, office, beach, yacht, corral or ashram.

It would make a swell gift, too. They'll think it cost lots more than five bucks.

And to celebrate (sort of) our Summer Movie Guide, here's an Ampersand movie camera designed by Joe Kevin Hash, a student at Ohio State University. He earns $30. Others of talent may submit original Ampersands too — make sure the artful creation is in black ink on firm white paper, with name and address on the art. Those who wish to submit seasonal or holiday Ampersands should do so at least two months before the holiday. And now that we're all off for a summer of alleged leisure, we'll expect dozens of astounding Ampersands come July. Right? Send them to Ampersand of the Month, 1680 N. Modern Romance starring Albert Brooks and Kathryn Harrold; written by Brooks and Monica Johnson, directed by Brooks.

Modern Romance has been called Albert Brooks' Annie Hall, and in a few ways that's accurate: it depicts an obsessive, possessive neurotic man's hot and cold romance, reportedly based on one of Brooks' own, but here he gives himself the role of a film editor. Brooks, unlike Allen, is entirely unsentimental, he never begs us to love him, as Allen often does. Brooks refuses to pander, refuses to be adorable — and therein lies his strength and weakness.

While Brooks' satire (when the film director interferes with the editing, or when Brooks and his assistant must add sound effects to a silly space flick) is aimed at the film industry and it's deadly accurate, much more uncomfortable in its hilarity than Allen's Hollywood party in Annie Hall. Allen makes fun of Hollywood as an outsider; Brooks is very much an insider, at times devastating, other times (almost) compassionate.

Brooks' screenplay is uncompromising in its depiction of a jerk, a man who can't or won't grow up, make up his mind or stick with a decision. There are really only two problems with Modern Romance: Harrold's role is underwritten; she seems far too normal to put up with Brooks. She must have had some obsessive quirks of her own, but these are never revealed. And second, Brooks never lets the audience side with him. I wanted to like his character, wanted him to tickle the old empathy gland, but most of the time I just wanted to rattle his teeth.

Modern Romance is terrific; it's just not very likeable. That shouldn't matter — but it does.

Thief

starring James Caan, Tuesday Weld and Willie Nelson, written by Michael Mann, based on the book The Home Invaders by Frank Hohimer; directed by Mann.

After the recent glut of expensive, dreadful and near-dreadful movies (All Night Long, The Final Conflict, Back Roads, Lion of the Desert, etc.), along comes this wonderful sleeper, a film noir dark streets-jewel heist-crime movie with a good love story and, of all things, a message. A point of view. Something to say.

Caan is an ex-con, a master diamond thief with a used car lot and gin mill cover; his henchmen (John's brother James Belushi as the electronics expert and William LaValley as the backup) are also expert; they are like family, close. There is respect, if not exactly honor among these thieves, until a larger-scale gangster (Robert Prosky) butts in, the cops start swarming around for their share of the take, and everything generally gets very mean. Caan, who wanted only to go straight, marry Tuesday Weld, raise a family and forget his illegal trade, must cut himself loose from that dream in order to survive. Survival doesn't seem like much — but working for Prosky is even less.

Caan's movies are not always successful, but they're almost always interesting and rewarding. He holds his own with strong women like Streisand and Fonda; he's tough, masculine, but also sensitive and emotional (one of few actors who has an extraordinary range in his eyes while the rest of his face remains stoic). In Thief Caan is remarkable, a hero in a hopeless life, with enough resonance in a hard stare or a loving glance for two or three movies.

The grainy shots of Chicago and fancy trick shots (following a drill through the hole into a safe, looking up an elevator shaft as debris falls on the camera) are almost, but never quite, obtrusive; writer/director Mann never loses track of the narrative. The tension hurts, which makes the violence alarmingly satisfying. The music by Tangerine Dream is like a million needles piercing the brain: the right kind of music for this film, but too much and too loud. The dialogue is frequently inaudible, an annoying fault in an otherwise dazzling movie.

ADAM & THE ANTS
Kings of the Wild Frontier

(Epic) Suitable gimmicks aren't easy to come by these days, especially now that Adam and the Ants have laid claim to a whole handful. Got this: a (formerly) mohawked gay guy called Adam Ant who dons feathers, warpaint and a pirate-suit, promotes "Antmusic for Sexpeople" and sings stuff like "brush me daddy-o." The weirdest part is that this odd concoction actually works.

First of all, the music is dominated by the Indian motif. The foundation of Kings of the Wild Frontier is formed by two drummers beating out tribal rhythms — both Indian and African. This constitutes the Antsound, as recognizable a musical trademark as has been created in rock music. The Ants feel no remorse name-dropping Geronimo, making reference to the Kiowa, Pawnee and Apaches and utilizing chanting vocals and choruses throughout.

The package is calculated and pretentious, but Adam Ant's vocals are confident, inventive and versatile. When supported by strong melodies and neat-o Marlboro advertisement-style guitar lines, Mr. Ant makes a convincing case for his Antmusic.

But Antsound, being relentless and self-obsessed, grows wearisome. This band isn't content with one theme song, it has five. Which means they spend more time singing about themselves than anything else, as in "The Magnificent Five." Of course, urban cowboys and outlaws spend 24 hours a day in self-absorption too. Maybe, for some, Antmusic is the Ant-idote.

JOE ELY
Musta Notta Gotta Lotta

(Soutbcoast/MCA Records) Joe Ely's problem with vinyl may not be evident to those who've never witnessed his incendiary live show, but for the fortunate who have, nothing he's committed to grooves comes close with the possible exception of Live Shots, an English import featuring some London club dates with members of the Clash sitting in. Musta Notta Gotta Lotta — certainly a prophetic title — is no exception. It's another in a disappointing run, casting Ely — surely one of the most exciting and astute songwriters and song interpreters in the hard country vein — as a pallid and standoffish Jerry Lee Lewis clone.

To be fair, not everything that's wrong with this album is Ely's fault. Musta Notta is not the strongest collection of tunes he's ever attacked, particularly weak are the contributions from long time collaborator, Butch Hancock, who wrote the magnificent "West Texas Waltz," "Fools Fall in Love" and "Boxcars" on earlier Ely LP's. "Wishin' for You," one of two Hancock titles here, sounds like a Jimmy Buffett outtake.

Also ill-advised are half-hearted renderings of Roy Brown's classic "Good Rockin' Tonight" and Shorty Long's "Rock Me My Baby." Herein lies the central, and fatal, conceit of Musta Notta Gotta Lotta — Joe Ely the rocker. Despite the turned-up collar and greased back hair he sports on the cover, Joe Ely is most decidedly not a rock and roll singer. His formidable lyric talent and undeniable sensitivity to nuance place him firmly in a venerable country tradition — he has more to say than a backbeat could ever tell.

Sadly, he has almost no opportunity to say it here. Even with some respectable wordplay in hand — Jimmy Gilmore's "Dallas" or his own "I Keep Gettin' Paid the Same" — Ely is rushed through like a wino given the bum's rush. His phrasing is shot to hell and the search for frenzy relegates his consummate backing band to boogie wonderland.

Joe Ely's sojurn with the English new wave has done the lad no good; the distance he feels from this material is all too evident. Look homeward, Joe, back to where you once belonged.

McCOY TYNER QUARTETS
4X4

(Milestone)4X4 is the latest, and probably final, collaboration for Milestone Records between pianist/composer McCoy Tyner and producer Orrin Keepnews (Keepnews has resigned as head of A&R, McCoy recently signed with Columbia), an association that has found Tyner in many exotic recording contexts.

On this date, McCoy uses bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Al Foster as a house rhythm section, both men giving the leader exactly the rugged, intense supports he thrives on, and he invites old friends Bobby Hutcherson and Freddie Hubbard and new confreres Arthur Blythe and John Abercrombie to each play a side. The program, consisting mostly of Tyner's pulsating originals and selected standards, is a satisfying offering.

Vibraharpist Hutcherson is one with Tyner: the two think and play as brothers, so it's natural that their three tunes are the album's zenith, with Thelonious Monk's "Pannonica" a tour de force for the leader. Taken at a gentle gait, this enchanting piece shows how much McCoy has grown as a pianist. Perhaps inspired by Monk's handsome composition, he plays with a tuneful restraint and lightness often missing in his work, bringing out elegant, tinkling curved lines of immaculate clarity and beauty. Hutcherson's moments come on "I Wanna Stand Over There," where, not needing to pause for breath, he gallops ecstatically over quiet yet probing compings. "The Seeker" is a well-swung medium walker that both men groove on.

Hubbard is without his customary verve and spark though the trumpeter manages to make the most of McBee's "Paradox," riding to a bubbling climax following a rollicking trio outing, where Foster's back beats lay the groundwork for a locked-hands crescendo from Tyner. Bonfa's "Manha De Carnival" is uneventful but pleasant and the trio is dashing on "Inner Glimpse."

Hardly the radical many critics deem him, altoist Blythe scores well here, sporting a bright, singing tone on "Blues in the Minor," building his solo by pushing the volume then hitting long, high, wailing notes. Though his vibrato is too wide on the ballad, "Stay As Sweet As You Are," he acquits himself handily on the uptempo cooker, "It's You or No One," demonstrating a solid technique. Tyner kicks back the structure on "Blues" and heads for

& OTHERS AREN'T... SOME'RE MOVIES

Oh boy, gang, it's sun and surf time (almost). Brace yourselves: Hollywood has a big clot of summer movies which producers hope will arrest your coronaries and your money. Lots of comedies. Hollywood believes summer is for laughing. Here, once again, in no particular order, the season's goodies:

Raiders of the Lost Ark, directed by Steven Spielberg. stars Harrison Ford and involves archeological adventures.

S.O.B. has Julie Andrews and William Holden, Marisa Berenson and Larry Hagman in a satirical Hollywood tale.

Gas, a comedy about a gas crisis (how contemporary) stars Donald Sutherland, Susan Anspach, Sterling Hayden. Its producers like to call it "this year's Meatballs."

Escape to Victory, directed by John Huston, gives us Sylvester Stallone, Michael Caine and soccer star Pele in an action flick (soccer figures prominently).

Clash of Titans. Greek mythology, with Laurence Olivier as Zeus.

Dragonslayer concerns a sorcerer's apprentice in 6th century Britain, starring people we've never heard of and Sir Ralph Richardson.

Blow Out, with John Travolta and Nancy Allen, directed by Brian de Palma (Dressed to Kill). About a motion picture sound man who witnesses an auto accident that turns out to be a "sensational political murder."

Looker, starring Albert Finney, Susan Dey and James Coburn, is a fantasy adventure in which fashon models begin to disappear, replaced by robots. Sort of a haute couture version of The Stepford Wifes.

Underground Aces stars Dirk Benedict; a comedy about those zany hotel parking lot attendants who mangle our cars.

Escape from New York: John Carpenter's first non-horror effort; it's an action adventure set in 1997, when New York City is a walled-in prison. The president's plane crashes inside, the president is held for ransom by the inmates, and hero Kurt Russell must get him out.

Take This Job and Shove It, based on the song, concerns "the plight of the blue collar worker of America against the conglomerate establishment." About a brewery, actually. Stars Robert Hays and Barbara Hersey, Art Carney, Martin Mull, Eddie Albert.

The Night the Lights Went out in Georgia, after another song. All about Kristy McNichol's love, devotion and determination to get her singer brother (Dennis Quaid) into a recording studio. Mark Hamill also stars.

An Eye for an Eye. Chuck Norris, karate, Christopher Lee, San Francisco, revenge.

Eye of the Needle, based on Ken Follett's best seller, is a spy thriller/love story starring Donald Sutherland and Kate Milligan.

National Lampoon Goes to the Movies: four separate small movies are parodies of big movies, with an all-star cast, etc.

Tarzan the Ape Man, supposedly cleaving more closely unto the original Burroughs books, stars Bo Derek as Jane, Richard Harris as her father and newcomer Miles O'Keefe as the muscle man of the jungle.

Heavy Metal. Feature-length animation fantasy/adventure based on Heavy Metal magazine pieces.

Endless Love. Could be called Endless Publicity for Brooke Shields. Also stars newcomer Martin Hewitt, directed by Franco Zeffirelli, based on Scott Spencer's novel.

An American Werewolf in London, directed by John Landis. Howling at the moon, but in England this time.

The Muppet Caper Movie. 'Nuff said.

Deadly Blessing is yet another screamer, this one about a weird religious sect (leader of said sect played by Ernest Borgnine).

History of the World, Part I is Mel Brooks' latest contribution to high brow culture (see feature this issue).

Chu Chu and the Philly Flash gives us Carol Burnett and Alan Arkin as two down-and-outers in San Francisco who happen upon money and adventure.

Zorro and the Gay Blade, in which George Hamilton plays Zorro — and his little-known effeminate brother. Lauren Hutton is the femme.

Wolfen stars Albert Finney. A horror tale, complete with a series of bizarre murders.

Under the Rainbow, with Chevy Chase and Carrie Fisher and dozens of small people; about the casting of the Munchkins for The Wizard of Oz.

Prince of the City stars Treat Williams, based on the book about a New York cop forced to spy on fellow officers.

All the Marbles is a comedy about women wrestlers; Peter Falk stars as their manager.

Superman II, in which Christopher Reeve and Margot Kidder enjoy domestic bliss and other thrills.

Arthur is a comedy starring Liza Minelli and Dudley Moore.

Planet of Horrors. Outer space. We had to have one, right?

Cheech & Chong's Nice Dreams, this time directed by Chong. Further antics of America's favorite aging hippies.

Stripes stars Bill Murray in a "comedy set in the military," but it's not a military satire. You figure it out.

Nobody's Perfekt (cute). Gabe Kaplan, Alex Karras, Robert Klein and Susan Clark in a comedy farce and romance set in Miami.

Cannonball Run. Burt Reynolds, Farrah Fawcett and a cross country race.

Urgh! A Music War is a documentary rock flick with performances by Cramps, Police, Gary Numan, Devo — 40 new wave bands in all.

Mel Brooks Rewrites the History of the World:

LIONS 10, SHORT JEWISH COMIC 10 ½

BY ERIC ESTRIN

Even on the Twentieth Century Fox lot, surrounded by sets of Wild West saloons and Hello Dolly's elevated train station, Mel Brooks manages to attract attention. Running around in a Roman gladiator's helmet, he could be a crazed refugee from a Saturday morning cartoon show, a cross between, say, the Road Runner and Daffy Duck. A young courier cruising by in a golfcart does a doubletake when Brooks jumps suddenly from his position face down on the cement to the top of his car, tilts back the hat, gestures wildly and begins shouting suggestions a-mile-a-minute to a visiting photographer.

Even when he's settled down upstairs in his spacious corner suite, Brooks seems to take as much pleasure retelling guests about his new film, History of the World, Part I, as they do from viewing his frenetic performance.

"I read a lot of history books," he begins. "I've got a book over there, The First Two Million Years. The first two million years were a gas, and then when the vapors coalesced, you had the earth.

"Gas is good," he continues, not waiting to figure out if anybody got the last one. "I used it in Blazing Saddles and it made me a fortune. But seriously, ladies and germs, history is fascinating. . . ."

You can take a comic out of the Borscht Belt, but this babbling Brooks will always be the same Melvin Kaminsky from Brooklyn, telling "Jew jokes" and making up in energy, determination and chutzpah what he might lack in finesse. In fact, sitting comfortably upstairs in knit shirt, blue jeans and tennis shoes, he seems like nothing so much as your sweet Uncle Mel — the one who thrills the kiddies by pulling quarters magically from their ears.

Friends and co-workers praise Brooks for his warmth and professionalism as much as for his manic wit. Says Gregory Hines, a successful Broadway singer/dancer/actor making only his second film appearance in History of the World: "He's a wonderful guy. He can talk camera talk with the camera man, lighting talk with the lighting man — whatever needs to be done. I just got the feeling that when he says to do something a certain way, it's gonna go down right."

Not that Brooks doesn't appreciate good advice. On the contrary, co-writers and performers all praise him for his openness to their suggestions during the filmmaking process. As Hines puts it, "He gives you the creative freedom to let you make an ass of yourself."

Thinner, grayer and a little balder than he was three-and-a-half years ago when he played Dr. Richard Thorndyke, head of the Psychoneurotic Institute for the Very, Very Nervous in his last film, High Anxiety, Brooks is almost 55 now and still eager to play the creative ass, so long as it works on film. In addition, while writing, producing, directing, helping score and performing several major roles in the new movie, Brooks also found time to establish his own production company whose first project, Elephant Man, co-starring his wife, Anne Bancroft, captured eight Academy Award nominations.

"I took Elephant Man to everybody, and I could not sell it to anybody, to anybody," he says. "I took it to every studio in town, and they said, 'A distorted human being shot in black & white? Oh, it sounds like a little downer. A small downer.' I said, 'You're confusing Elephant Man with valium.'"

With comedy enjoying a Hollywood renaissance, Brooks had no such troubles getting History off the ground. He's earned clout not only because he turns out hits, but because he turns them out on time and inexpensively. The new one, for instance, cost about $12 million to make — not much by Hollywood standards, especially since it's so rich in atmosphere from different historical periods.

Where other filmmakers pad budgets with cocaine expenses and travel allowances, Brooks works hard to eliminate waste — a standard he applies to his own life as well. "I don't feel I'm a Rolls Royce," he says, by way of explaining why, with his considerable wealth, he still drives an old Honda Accord. "I'm a little person, you know . . . I would look silly in a Rolls Royce."

Still, the new film is his most expensive, ambitious project to date. The idea for it hit him as he was wrapping up High Anxiety, a salute to Hitchcock-style suspense films. Brooks had already done sendups of several film genres — the Western in Blazing Saddles, the horror film in Young Frankenstein, the oldies in Silent Movie — and he wanted to tackle something bigger.

"I said, 'I'm gonna go past the genre state, right to where it happened. I'm gonna go right to history. History is so beautiful, so grand, so spectacular, that to play little human jokes against it is perfect counterpoint.

"For instance, in the Roman Empire (that's where he got the helmet), Gregory Hines, a young, black actor, and I are running away together, and the Roman army is after us because we've had a lot of trouble with Nero. And we run into Oedipus, and he has a big sign that says, 'Give to Oepidus, I'm blind,' and he's tapping his way along.

"And Oedipus somehow recognizes the black guy, Josephus, and he says, 'Hey, what do you say, Josephus?' And Josephus says, 'Hey, motherf—r, how are you?'

"So a lot of people laugh because we just use the word 'motherf—er,' but a lot of people realize that Oedipus was indeed the only one you could use that appellation for."

No need to tell Brooks that some people might call that a crass way to get a laugh; Brooks has made crassness a personal cause. From all indications, History will outgross all his other films in more ways than one.

"I think taste is one of the worst detriments to good comedy," he explains with obvious commitment. "Taste is in the eye, ear, nose and throat of the beholder, right? Thank God, I am bereft of any smidgeon of it."

Normally gentle and kind-hearted, Brooks gets worked up over critics who fail to appreciate his comic style. When told that Molly Haskell once wrote that he championed the "bulging eyes and bosoms" school of humor, he snaps, "What is a Molly Haskell, and what will she ever contribute to the education, culture or entertainment of her world? She's part of a small army of snipers that don't understand the process and have no talent for it — very much like a eunuch watching the sexual act performed. He can watch it, but he doesn't understand it."

Brooks gets his revenge in History of the World, Part I (no Part II is planned). During the opening segment, which takes place during the Stone Age, his old pal Sid Caesar plays the world's first artist. "And then we have a critic, a caveman critic," he says, delighted with the imagery. "Right away, as soon as the first artist appears, there's the critic."

What the critic does, in typical Brooksian fashion, is stand on a rock and urinate all over the cave wall, washing away the artist's work and chasing admirers away by the foulness of his act.

If Brooks gets antsy over criticism of such scenes, it's because they touch close to the heart of his view of film comedy. "Comedy is a very tricky and delicate process, and the closer you are to the mark, the closer to the truth, the bigger the reaction is going to be," he says.

"Blazing Saddles did nothing more than just tell the truth about some cowboys around a campfire; we didn't do anything but have them eat beans and drink coffee, and what followed was very natural."

Not surprisingly, Brooks began developing his style as a "tummeler" in the Catskills during the 1940s. There, he was charged with running around, keeping hotel guests happy and playing drums for the saxophonist-comic, Sid Caesar. When Caesar broke into the fledgling television industry in 1949, he brought Brooks along to help write his material for $50 a week.

Your Show of Shows became Brooks' vehicle for stardom. His salary increased a hundred-fold during the next 10 years, and he developed his craft with such luminaries as Woody Allen, Neil Simon, Lary Gelbart and Carl Reiner.

His association with Reiner soon made comedy history when in 1960 Brooks created a character dubbed the Two-Thousand-Year-Old Man. Capitalizing on his quick wit and Reiner's talents as straight man, the two would go into the recording studio and ad lib for hours on end.

"Carl would ask me about different characters," Brooks says. "He would say, 'Did you know Cleopatra?' And I would say, 'I knew her; she was the next pyramid over.' And he said, 'Did she really die that way?' I said, 'Nonsense. No asp, no biting, none of that bulls–t. The woman died at 83 from a stroke.'"

From there, Brooks jumped into films, and he hit the ground running. His first picture, The Producers, included the classic production sequence, "Springtime for Hitler (in Germany)," with scores of chorus girls formed into swastikas, singing this absurd number that Brooks wrote. Even today he admits that, artistically, The Producers is a tough act to top. And in the Sixties, Brooks created the TV series Get Smart — still playing on local channels across the country.

By now, Brooks says, he has developed an involved process of filmmaking that practically guarantees him public acceptance with each work. "I have bribed 16 million Americans. I've given them $5 apiece to laugh at my movie."

No, no, that's not it. He really does have a process; it involves screening each film at different stages, rewriting, that sort of thing. And he's certain that it works, so certain that the only time he'll allow himself a little self-doubt is when a movie opens. "On that night," he says, "I'm a little suicidal. I'm always on the ground floor because if I was in the balcony, I'd hurl myself to my death."

The situation can indeed be a problem. One LA journalist tells a story about the time she was invited to view an early screening of Blazing Saddles and had the misfortune to sit in front of some guy who, every time anything the least bit amusing occurred on screen, would guffaw so loudly as to obscure the lines.

She finally got up the nerve to ask him to quiet down, but thought better of it when she turned around. The offending patron, she realized, was Brooks.

open country, driven on by Foster's popping kit, while McBee supplies the necessary harmonic foundation, and then solos with sensibility and vigor.

Lastly, Abercrombie's electric mandolin, which emits a diminutive sound, results in an unexpected timbre amidst Tyner's vastness, and there is a soothing warmth and ease about "Backward Glance," a moody number with subtle shifts in harmony, while "Forbidden Land," a remake of Coltrane's "Impressions," finds the plectrist spewing out tough phrases that rise above the heat of the fray created by Tyner and friend.

GARLAND JEFFREYS
Escape Artist

(Epic) Garland Jeffreys has been a rock and roll also-ran for so long that one wonders if his star will ever truly shine. He keeps trying, though, and Escape Artist shows that he's more determined than ever. Whatever its faults, the LP is not a lazy, half-hearted effort.

Something fundamentally likeable about Jeffrey's brand of street-tough rock makes his shortcomings less grating. His lyrics examine romance ("Modern Lovers," "Christine"), urban alienation (Mystery Kids") and youthful ambition (R.O.C.K.") with the believable passion of Bruce Springsteen at his best. But his flaws are hard to ignore — he tends to be awkwardly pretentious as a songwriter, reaching for The Major Statement but rarely saying anything of substance. "Miami Beach" (included on the album's bonus EP) is an irritating example of this, intended as a hard-hitting comment on racism but ending up slight and silly.

Jeffreys is on firmer ground musically. He rocks out with a vengeance on Escape Artist, forcefully singing over exceptionally intense band arrangements. It's the production, in fact, that grabs the attention most. Featuring appearances by members of the Rumour and the E Street Band, among other notables, each track is a volatile mix of firecracker drum bursts, churning guitars and reedy organ lines. One cut, "Jump Jump," pits a synthesizer against an accordion, creating a strange cabaret ballad/rock hybrid. The album's overall sound is dense and garish, but has its stirring moments.

This is yet another semi-successful but still worthwhile LP from Jeffreys, one of rock's more intriguing lesser lights. He may never make the break through he craves, but he has staying power, and that definitely counts for something.

JESSE WINCHESTER
Talk Memphis

(Bearsville) Though often light and breezy in his viewpoints, Jesse Winchester has always shown glimmers of brilliance. His latest album is a work of impressive craft and sincere warmth. Bouncing to a lively r&b feel, its exercises in white soul compare favorably with similar efforts by James Taylor and Stephen Bishop.

Winchester has always tempered his honey-sweet romanticism with fatalistic acceptance in his songwriting, and on this disc "If Only" and "I Love You No End" work well in this vein. His coy humor is present, too, in such songs as "Hoot and Holler" and "Sure Enough." If the topics aren't fresh for him, he handles them with greater care and ease than ever. His genial vocal style, brightened with smooth touches of falsetto, is also in fine form. Don't expect to be overwhelmed by Talk Memphis — its virtues are modestly displayed, but in evidence all the same.

PLAYBOY JAZZ FESTIVAL

It's cool. It's hot. It's blue and it's kind of funky. No, it's not a dead hippie in a microwave. It's jazz, that blend of brass, rhythm, and blues that turns most of us into nervous wrecks when we have to carry on a conversation about it. Well, we here at Games have reached into our own college of musical knowledge to present you with this little learning experience in honor of the Playboy Jazz Festival which will be held at the Hollywood Bowl June 20-21.

Musicians are the life blood of any musical discipline. Rock: the Beatles. Country & Western: Hank Williams. Disco: Donna Summer. Shopping Center Music: God only knows. But in the case of jazz, the artist is the music. We've listed ten famous jazzmen below. All you have to do is match each musician with the nickname that they have come to be known by. It's not that easy, gang, so we've given you a hand by providing the name of the instrument that made each of them famous in parenthesis. If you get more than five, then you obviously know more about jazz than just the fact that Ella Fitzgerald can shatter wine glasses. If you have trouble, though, try asking the folks for some help the next time you call them up for some cash. And don't worry, when Playboy has a new wave festival we'll give them equal time.

Cheech & Chong Finally Answer Your Questions!

Remember several issues back, we asked you to send us profound, in-depth questions for Cheech & Chong to answer? You did, and they did, and here are the questions and answers chosen for this major event (just in time to publicize their new movie Cheech & Chong's Nice Dreams; convenient, isn't it?). Oh yes—each person whose question appears here will receive a free gift from good old C & C: an expensive (so they say) motorized theater display! Just like the ones that will be in theaters when this movie plays. How neat.

You were expecting maybe a free trip to Hollywood? Cheech & Chong aren't the only ones with nice dreams.

1 Is indoors outdoors with four walls around it? This one's for Cheech.
Only on Monday mornings.

2 For Chong. Is athlete's foot a state of mind?
No, it's a psychic disease.

3 For Chong. Is an opera over when a fat lady sings?
For us it's over when it starts.

4 Is it true that Cheech & Chong are the sounds you guys make when you're chewing gum?
False.

5 Did all those farmers in the Midwest actually kill their cows 'cause they were contaminated with PCP? And do they dump that stuff in the Gulf of Mexico? ('Cause if they do I'm going to the beach more often!)
Dan Zellner, New Orleans, Louisiana
Why go to the Gulf when you can go to the Butcher.

6 Where's Dave?
Charles Lemerand, Michigan State University
Dave's not here, man.

7 There have been many comedy teams throughout the years of radio and TV, i.e. Abbott and Costello, Laurel and Hardy, the Three Stooges, George and Gracie Burns and Johnny Carson and Ed McMahon, just to name a few. What comedy team throughout radio and TV history would you say your style most closely resembles?
Kirk Houchin, Normal, Ill.
Reagan and Haig.

8 Why does the porridge-bird lay his egg in the air?
Bob Baumgartner, Tampa, Florida
You tell us!

9 Is God a) The One and Truly Supreme Being; b) Down on Nuns; c) The Last Guest on the Tonight Show, with David Brenner hosting?
Paul Filipkowski, Gainesville, Florida
None of the above since God is still in the green room waiting to go on.

10 In both your movies, Up in Smoke and Cheech & Chong's Next Movie, you smoked a huge joint. Now my question is were they made out of real weed or your old socks?
Juventino P. Rosas, Jr. (No address given; write to us for your prize!)
In* Up in Smoke we used old socks; since the movie grossed over one hundred million dollars we were able to drop the socks for Cheech & Chong's Next Movie.

11 Why did the first lady say to the dragon: How did the centipede lose its legs?
William Hawks, San Diego, Calif.
Dear William: Don't ever come to Los Angeles, don't ever call us and don't ever write us.

12 What kind of love, respect, feelings, do you have for each other?
Tommy and I woke up the other morning, looked at each other, and asked the very same question.

13 What were the day and circumstances like when you first realized that you could be funny people?
It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness, it was the spring of hopes, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way—in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on its being received, for good or for evil, in the superlative degree of comparison only.

14 Do you take your lunch or ride your bike to the recording studio?
Peter F. Young, University of Hawaii at Manoa, Honolulu, Hawaii
Yes.

15 If there are six fishermen who each have a sack which contains six cats in each sack, and each cat has six kittens, how many legs are there in total? There's a mind twister for you!!!
Kathy Wallenhorst, Univ. of South Florida 4th year in computer programming

FBI director lectures on new concerns, tactics

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

William H. Webster, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, returned to his Amherst College alma mater last night lecturing on the "legal themes facing the FBI and its relations with state and local law enforcement agencies."

"The FBI is concerned heavily with high impact crimes involving civil rights, terrorism, and foreign counter-intelligence," Webster said in his opening remarks.

He said because of the degree of violence and organization involved in those crimes, new techniques in law enforcement have developed within the FBI.

Webster said electronic surveillance devices, further use of informants and undercover agents are the three most outstanding tactics that have evolved. The problem which the FBI confronts, said Webster, is staying within the guidelines set by state and federal laws. These include court approvals of wiretapping instruments and protection of informants' privacy rights.

Webster said the FBI is "not peacekeeper for the local communities," but stressed that the FBI cooperates fully with state and local law offices.

He said the FBI provides local agencies with training programs in special weapons techniques, organizational leadership, and use of its crime laboratories. The FBI also trains top local law enforcement personnel at its school in Quantico, Virginia.

Murders of black children in Atlanta are a recent example of the FBI's work with local authorities, Webster said.

"We (the FBI), have 30 special agents on the case, approximately the same number the Atlanta police force has assigned," said Webster. "The FBI has also offered the use of its crime lab and personnel educated in behavioral science to help determine a pattern to the murders."

Webster said he felt the case was "substantially solved" despite pressure from consistently false leads.

Webster also pointed out that the FBI often falls into different cases accidentally, as was the case with Abscam.

He said that the case was originally set up as a "sting operation" to recover stolen art treasures in New York City. Abdul Industries, the name of the FBI's ficticious corporation, recovered $594,000 in art treasures before "the shiek" asked to invest in Atlantic City's gambling industry, one spin-off of the case before the alleged congresssional bribes were discovered, Webster said.

"Both an assistant attorney general and myself have reviewed the tapes in anticipation of the legal questions which have arisen in the case," Webster said.

He said the discovery of Abscam shows the nation that the FBI is working to diminish political white collar crimes.

No names given in rape

Amherst police would not name any suspects in the reported gang-rape of a 20-year-old University of Massachusetts student Sunday, but said they are following some leads in their investigation.

The woman reportedly accepted a ride from her three assailants after the Orchard Hill/Central concert and was taken to a South Amherst apartment where she was reportedly raped by at least two of the men, police said in yesterday's daily press briefing, not at a press conference as reported in yesterday's Collegian.

The incident was reported Sunday night but the woman would not register a complaint until Tuesday morning, police said.

Police are still investigating the incident.

This is the second rape reported in Amherst since March. Charges in the first case were dismissed and the case did not go to trial.

FBI 'harassment' denounced

By DONNA MAGRATH
Collegian Staff

Sally Morrow, president of the Boston Socialist Workers Party, told a small audience in the Campus Center last night that a $40 million lawsuit filed by her organization against the FBI, the CIA and the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) "is necessary in order to expose the U.S. government's secret activities."

"Despite the government's 40-year harassment and spying campaign against the Socialist Workers Party and Young Socialist Alliance, it has never found one shred of evidence of any illegal activity by the socialists," Morrow said during a speech sponsored by the YSA and the Distinguished Visitors Program.

"This lawsuit was filed eight years ago in 1973 to put these agencies on trial for spying, disruption, harassment and for getting socialists fired from their jobs," Morrow said.

"The government already admits that its 40-year investigation against the SWP and YSA has revealed no illegal activity by us," she said.

"We were harassed for our legal activities."

Morrow said the initial response by the U.S. Government was, "to deny most charges against them, but they always deny they carry out crimes against us (SWP and YSA) even when we know they did.

"One major victory that has resulted from our lawsuit has been to expose the government's disruptive and spying activities so that more people are aware of these," Morrow said.

"The lawsuit has also forced the government to release tens of thousands of documents that show how the FBI has plotted against the black movement, prevented movements against the Vietnam War and driven union organizers from their jobs," she said.

She said the SWP and YSA wants to get a settlement from the lawsuit that grants an injunction against further government disruption and harassment and for the government not to disrupt the socialists' efforts to organize people and win them over to their side.

Sand's funeral held today; British prepare for violence

Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Britain airlifted 600 troops of the crack Royal Welsh battalion to Northern Ireland yesterday to strengthen security in case violence escalates in the troubled province when hunger striker Bobby Sands is buried.

Thousands of Roman Catholics were expected to turn out today for the funeral Mass and Irish Republican Army burial of Sands, 27, who died early Tuesday on the 66th day of a hunger strike aimed at forcing Britain to grant political status to IRA prisoners.

Snipers killed a policeman and wounded a policewoman last night in a Catholic neighborhood of Belfast. A richocheting bullet injured a 9-yearold boy playing nearby. Two British soldiers were wounded in an exchange of gunfire in County Armagh.

Sands' body was carried from his family home to the nearby Church of St. Luke's last night, led by an IRA honor guard wearing woolen masks, combat jackets and black berets.

Sands' father and brother were among the pallbearers. His mother and sister wept as they marched behind. More than 1,000 sympathizers followed in the procession. Mourners filed into the church in drizzling rain for a 20-minute memorial service, at which the Rev. Sean Rogan appealed, "Lord hear our prayers and be merciful to your son Bobby."

Sands' imprisoned comrades vowed to follow him to their deaths if necessary in the war of wills with the British government, according to a statement issued by Sinn Fein, the political front of the mainly Catholic IRA.

Police said 38 people had been arrested in violence sparked by the death of Sands, who had been convicted of a gun possession charge and recently elected to the British Parliament. Twenty-four people have been injured.

Details surface of investigation into possible MBTA payoffs

BOSTON — Details of an investigation into alleged payoffs at the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority surfaced yesterday with reports of $100 bills found in a manila envelope by an agency official who went to Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti.

Gov. Edward J. King suspended state Transportation Secretary Barry M. Locke, 50, of Canton, from his $47,500-ayear post last weekend after learning of the investigation by Bellotti into possible payoffs involving MBTA contracts. Locke was also chairman of the MBTA board of directors.

Published reports yesterday cited an alleged payoff of $1,000 in cash.

The Boston Herald American and The Boston Globe said the investigation began after the new MBTA general manager, James F. O'Leary, inadvertently opened an envelope intended for someone else. Attributing the information to unnamed sources, they reported the envelope contained $1,000 in $100 bills.

O'Leary issued a statement yesterday saying he would have no comment on the investigation until it is completed. He also said all agency employees have been instructed to cooperate with Bellotti's office.

The probe centers on activities of the transit agency's real estate department, and the MBTA has announced that the department's assistant director, Frank J. Walters Jr. of Newton, "has been relieved of all responsibilities" and reassigned to the attorney general's office.

At a news conference Tuesday, King named Commerce Commissioner James F. Carlin to replace Locke and said the new boss is "approaching the (new) job as if it is permanent."

The Globe said the current investigation began last Thursday when O'Leary found a large manila envelope on his desk.

An MBTA employee had asked O'Leary to deliver the bundle to a top state official, according to newspaper reports.

Inside the big envelope was a smaller one, taped closed. O'Leary, curious, opened it and found $100 bills — 10 of them.

Later, according to reports, the employee who dropped off the envelope began calling, asking if it had been delivered to the appropriate person.

O'Leary stalled the caller, and by nightfall notified Bellotti.

At an evening meeting, serial numbers of the bills were recorded and the money was placed back in the envelope, sealed and given back to O'Leary.

He was told to pass the envelope to the official for whom it originally was intended — if that person asked for it.

The next day, Friday, O'Leary and the alleged intended recipient of the cash met, as previously scheduled, for a routine conference. The envelope was requested and handed over. O'Leary notified Bellotti.

On Saturday, King suspended Locke without pay.

Teamster's president dies one month before term expiration

SAN DIEGO — Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons, a high school dropout who ruled the nation's biggest union for the last 14 years, died yesterday, several weeks after he was hospitalized for lung cancer. He was 73 and a month away from the end of his term.

Reports of Fitzsimmons' death came as the executive board of the 2-million-member union was meeting in Washington to consider a successor. Union sources said Roy Williams, head of the Central Conference of Teamsters in Kansas, is the front-runner.

Fitzsimmons had been hospitalized since Easter at the Scripps Clinic near here. He died about 9:10 a.m. PDT. Funeral arrangements are pending and will be private, said a spokeswoman for the clinic.

Fitzsimmons died a month before his latest five-year term would have expired. Until his death, he had been saying through a spokesman that he intended to seek another term at the union's convention next month in Las Vegas, where some 2,000 delegates will elect top officers.

21 crew members killed as military jet explodes in air

WALKERSVILLE, Md. — A military jet transport carrying 21 crew members exploded over a farm yesterday scattering bodies, debris and classified documents over a wide area, authorities said. At least 13 bodies were recovered, and officials said there was little chance anyone survived.

Residents who witnessed the crash just north of this western Maryland community described the $50 million EC-135-A plane as a "ball of fire" before it struck the ground.

"It apparently blew up in the air," said A. E. Appleby, police communications officer at the Frederick state police barracks.

The Pentagon said the jet was based at Wright Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio, where it was assigned to the 4950 Test Wing.

The Air Force said the jet was carrying sophisticated radar equipment, classified documents and equipment used to track missiles and satellites. It was on a test flight and left the base early Wednesday morning.

Ships collide in two places as fog covers east coast

The Staten Island ferry collided with a freighter in New York harbor and two freighters collided off Virginia on yesterday morning, as dense fog cloaked the east coast. More than 60 people were injured, none seriously, and all four ships were damaged.

Digest

By the Associated Press

In New York, the ferryboat American Legion, carrying 2,500 rush-hour commuters, was near the Statue of Liberty when it collided with the freighter Heogh Orchid at about 7:20 a.m. EDT, injuring 65 people, officials said.

Two of the 65 people injured were admitted in satisfactory condition, and the others were treated and released, hospital officials said.

A Greek cargo vessel was taking on water and leaving a trail of diesel fuel as it limped toward Norfolk, Va., after it collided with another ship at about 7:20 a.m. EDT, said spokesmen for the 5th Coast Guard District headquarters at Portsmouth, Va.

The Greek ship's crewmen huddled in lifeboats for more than two hours before being rescued, Coast Guard officials said. The captain stayed aboard to take the ship into Norfolk.

Residents not satisfied with temporary reprieve in cutbacks

BOSTON — Residents still occupying two police stations and a firehouse shut because of Boston's financial woes say they're not satisfied with the mayor's order to temporarily reopen a few stations and rehire laid off police and firefighters.

Rush hour traffic — blocked sporadically by disgruntled residents to protest the cutbacks in police and fire protection — was snarled again yesterday at two arteries despite concessions by Mayor Kevin H. White.

"We're very disappointed and very angry," said Jane McLaughlin, 38, one of a few dozen Charlestown residents who have camped out in their neighborhood firehouse since April 10.

The State House and Senate prepared last night to debate a $44 million bill to rescue Boston's financially wobbly school system and to cover tax refunds the city owes businesses.

White has said he will use some of the $9.4 million emergency money already approved by the Legislature to temporarily reopen two of the seven police stations one of the 13 fire companies closed last month.

Amherst resident relives struggles in N. Ireland

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

Bobby Sands' death has attracted world-wide attention to the political turmoil in the tiny British-occupied country of Northern Ireland.

But, for some, the struggle in Northern Ireland is not a new conversational piece, and when the media broadcasts incidents of torture and misuse in Ireland, it comes as no surprise.

Mariead Casey, an Amherst resident from Northern Ireland, is intensely aware of the pain and suffering of her people. It has been part of her consciousness for as long as she remembers, and even before.

As Casey retells the story of her family's life in Northern Ireland, the history of the Irish struggles comes alive.

In 1920, Casey's grandmother was shot during Ireland's war for independence. She was killed near where she lived, by British troops called the Black and Tans. They were sent to Ireland to suppress the progressive actions of the Irish Republican Army (IRA), Casey said.

"They burnt towns to the ground and killed people maliciously," she said.

Both Casey's parents have been involved in anti-British socialist groups since their youth.

Casey's father spent nine years in a prison in London during the late 1930s and early 1940s. He was active in the IRA which at that time was working for better employment benefits in Northern Ireland. He was charged with conspiracy, she said.

Her father staged "token" hunger strikes in protest of prison conditions and of the British policy of convictions without charges and trials without jurys.

Casey herself became politically active during high school when she joined a socialist group called the Connelly Youth Movement.

In the 1960s, she explained, there was a lot of change in Ireland spurned by the political events happening in this country.

"People's awareness became increased by what was going on at Berkeley (California) and with the civil rights movement and the Vietnam issue. A lot of young people became radical. The civil rights movement especially opened up the Northern Ireland issue which had been ignored for 50 years," she said.

After majoring in economics at the University of Dublin, Casey became a history teacher for eight years. Three years ago, Casey moved to Amherst and is now a teaching assistant at the Amherst junior high school.

In 1979, Casey helped to set up the Irish Solidarity Committee in Amherst.

"We had two aims; to inform people about prisons and also what we believed to be the only way to bring about lasting peace in Ireland — British withdrawal," she said.

The committee has been running films at UMass and at Hampshire College explaining prison conditions.

"When people found out, they were pretty amazed. What blew people's minds is that they associated the British with liberty and democracy," she said.

"In Northern Ireland, rights are cast aside. There is no pretense of democracy," she said.

Casey then went on to give examples of American ignorance of the struggles in Ireland.

In 1972, Casey said, after 14 people were killed in Ireland, people who wore black arm bands commemorating the deaths, were banned from the Holyoke St. Patricks Day parade.

Northampton women's center offers base for cooperation among nearby organizations

By STACEY B. KAGAN
Collegian Correspondent

A new Northampton women's center, which opened in mid-February, "is trying to offer a base for other neighboring organizations so we can all work together," said Sal Colbert, one of the center's organizers.

Women's Community Action Center, located at 160 Main St., is funded by donations and a monthly fund-raising event, according to Colbert.

The center has set four goals for itself, Colbert said. These include research of a women's building committee, the development of an alternative health-directory, skill-exchange, and a local resource directory.

"We also have a drop-in center where women can come in and relax and read the information on our bulletin board, read our periodicals, and our newsletters," Colbert said. "We also have a lending library where women can go to take out books of their interest."

Also located in the center is "a national and local rideboard that offers travelling women a chance to hook up with rides across the country and feel safe because it's women helping women," Colbert said.

The center also has a complete referral center.

"If a woman was in a crisis, we would tell her where these places are," Colbert added.

The center is currently working on a film series to be presented sometime during the first week of June, co-sponsored along with Hampshire College.

The Women's Center is looking for staff women to fill three to four hour slots. The center is open Tuesday nights from 7:30 to 9:30, when they hold their own staff meetings, on Wednesday from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Thursday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., and on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Interested women may contact Colbert at 586-8477.

Student conference to provide discussion on coop movement

More than 150 students will meet at Hampshire College this weekend for a "Student Conference on Cooperatives," sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Coop Collective and the National Consumer Cooperative Bank in Washington, D.C.

The conference is intended to strengthen the student coop movement at New England colleges and universities by providing an opportunity to share information, skills, technical resources, and visions.

Workshops and panel discussions on Saturday will cover all aspects of running a successful cooperative, including starting a coop, bookkeeping, financial planning, and membership.

NCCB Director of Community Affairs John Lewis will be the featured speaker.

Sunday's sessions will include devising strategies for furthering student coop development and preparing a student network.

Peter Taggert, director of organizational development for the Economic Development Office, which oversees UMass coops, said UMass has 20 coops on the Amherst campus, making it the largest cooperative system in the country.

Registration for the conference is open to all student coop members or those interested in forming coops, as well as non-student cooperative workers. There is a $15 registration fee which covers the cost of food and lodging.

El Salvadoran students talk of nation's troubles

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

Two members of the National Executive Committee of the All General University Student Association of El Salvador spoke on the military takeover of that country's universities last night at Thompson Hall saying that the history of El Salvador has meant repression and exploitation by the government for the majority of the people of that country.

"It has also been a history of struggle," association member Carolina Castillo said through an interpreter. "The economics of El Salvador have become severe and the Junta has no solution to the problem.

"El Salvadoran businessmen and multi-national corporations have closed down factories and created massive unemployment," Castillo said, adding that in one instance textile mills, which normally employed 30,000 Salvadorans, were closed down resulting in the loss of 20,000 jobs.

"Reagan has doubled economic aid to the Junta and has tripled military aid," said Castillo. "He has sent 56 military advisors to reinforce the capability of the Salvadoran military."

Castillo went on to say that there was much reason to believe that the actual number of United States military advisors in El Salvador was much higher and that they are actually carrying out military action against the people of El Salvador.

Carlos Evaristo Hernandez also spoke with the aid of an interpreter and said that El Salvadoran universities are under complete military occupation.

"They (the universities) have been looted by government security forces," he said. Hernandez said that the security forces have taken typewriters, blackboards and other items from the universities.

"The universities are now used as torture centers," he said.

Hernandez also said that the universities are under constant political persecution.

"In June of 1980, San Salvador University was subjected to gunfire and bombardment. Three students were killed," Hernandez said, adding that prior to the occupation the Dean of the University was assassinated.

"The fact is that funds given to the Salvadoran military to support the occupation means that 40,000 El Salvadoran students are prevented from studying and is also keeping U.S. students from studying," Hernandez said.

Castillo said that the people of El Salvador are confident that with the solidarity of the people of the U.S. and the world, "victory will be ours."

Student senate condemns US aid to El Salvador

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously passed a motion last night denouncing American economic and military involvement in El Salvador.

"(We demand) that the United States government stop all military aid to El Salvador and adopt a foreign policy that recognizes the right to self-determination of the Salvadoran people," the motion stated.

Copies of the resolution will be sent to President Ronald Reagan, Massachusetts Senators Paul Tsongas and Edward M. Kennedy, and the president and vice-president of El Salvador.

Carlos Everisto Hernandez and Carolina Castillo, members of the All General University Student Association of El Salvador, spoke to the senators about conditions in their country.

Castillo said the claims by the American government that U.S. advisors are not involved in the conflict are false.

"I have personally seen a military attack in which an (American) advisor was present," Castillo said. (See related story, Page 3.)

In other business, the senate passed a motion supporting the formation of a Financial Aid Advisory Board which would consist of undergraduate and graduate students and two administration representatives.

"It will be important in the fall because of cuts in financial aid," said student senator Brad Goldstein.

Goldstein said he has already heard complaints from students about their financial aid awards for next year.

"If the student has a complaint and feels he has been dealt with unfairly, he can take it to this advisory board," Goldstein said.

The senate also approved a Community Day budget of $105,000 submitted by the Union Program Council. This is $64,000 less than the budget approved by the senate prior to the cancellation by the band, Santana.

The budget was decreased because talent and production costs decreased with the new bands — Bonnie Raitt, The John Hall Band, B.B. King and NRBQ.

UMass sex therapist sued by eight women

BOSTON — Eight women students have filed a $3.6 million suit alleging that a Universityof Massachusetts-Boston sex therapist led mandatory coed training sessions in which they were forced to take part in nude massage, "feel sessions," and vulgar discussions.

The U.S. District Court suit, which charges discrimination and sexual harrassment, alleges that the therapist subjected the plaintiffs — three current students and five recent graduates — to "unsolicited physical contact of a sexual nature, sexual leers and stares, sexual intimidation and inquiries into their private lives."

The principal defendant is James Hoopes, the former director of the Health, Education and Information Program at UMass-Boston. Hoopes is now a private sex therapist in Boston.

According to the suit, Hoopes led mandatory sessions in which "students were required to engage in nude or semi-nude massage, group 'feel' sessions and discussions of sexual topics in vulgar language."

The students, who range in age from 22 to 50, are suing Hoopes for $1.6 million, the university for $1.8 million and the American Association of Sex Educators, Counselors and Therapists for $200,000.

On Tuesday, Judge David S. Nelson refused Hoopes' request to keep the suit confidential. Hoopes said "publication and repetition" of the allegations would hurt his reputation, career and practice.

In an affidavit filed with the court, he said, "The acts complained of were appropriate and respected techniques utilized in the training of sex counselors or in the course of counseling."

He said the acts "were either solicited by the plaintiffs or were the actions of consenting adults and were not coerced or uninvited; a number of the allegations are simply baseless or untrue..."

The women claim the university deprived them "of employment and education" when they complained and that the association refused to act against Hoopes.

The women are Kristan Bagley, Marilyn Bernstein, Lisa Dean, Janet Dynarski, Allison Frey, Rosaleen McCafferty Lyons, Janet Pontes and Robin L. Thompson.

Thompson, 26, who graduated from the university last June, said, "Hoopes would leer at us and was constantly prying. He said if we didn't open up to him, we'd never be able to be close to any man. There was a lot of touching and grabbing, and if you told him to stop, he wouldn't. If you rejected what he wanted, he'd give you a bad evaluation."

In some sessions held at his home, she said, students were required to take baths together.

"He ran the gamut, and he seemed to know who was most vulnerable," she said. "He'd also break confidences told him during private training sessions. He'd bring up what you said in front of the entire group to make you more vulnerable."

University day care to change management

By KATIE VON FLUE
Collegian Staff

Administration of the University Day School day care center, housed in Bowditch Lodge, will be transferred from the School of Education to the University Child Care Center and Student Affairs. The decision, released by the Vice-Chancellor's Office, came in response to a controversy between parents who wanted inexpensive, full-scale day care for their children and the School of Education which proposed a plan to turn the facility into a small laboratory school.

The transfer date is set for July 1, during the center's summer session. Members of the new and old administration plan to meet and work out details of the transfer.

According to Prof. Grace Craig, chairperson of the School of Education's Division of Human Services and Applied Behavioral Science, which previously ran the center, they have tentative plans to run a full-scale 12-week summer session. Tentative summer staff members have also been lined up by the School of Education.

The Coalition for Campus Childcare rallied Tuesday at the Whitmore Administration Building in celebration of the administrative shift. Members of the coalition had previously complained that the proposed plan to turn the facility into a small laboratory center would reduce enrollment, increase tuition and slash hours.

"There is already a problem with long waiting lists to get into campus day care centers," said Sharon Dombeck, a member of the Coalition. "In addition, many students need all-day care programs for their children, which would be threatened by a reduction in hours."

The plan proposed by the School of Education, which details a tuition increase of $10 per week and a decrease of two hours per day, was drawn up in response to a request by a few parents for a program geared to children under the age of three, Craig said.

"Because of state laws, it is more expensive to operate a program for children under the age of two years, nine months," Craig said.

The request stems largely from parents who currently have children in the Human Development Lab School, also run by the School of Education, housed in Skinner Hall.

"We currently have 21 children under the age of two at the Skinner Hall lab," said Prof. Carolyn Edwards, director of the Human Development Lab School. Most children graduate from this program at the age of two, Edwards said.

"There is a definite need for more programs in the community geared to children three years and under," Edwards said.

Six parents with two-year-old children have applied to the University Day Care Center's summer program, according to Craig, but, although the center is licensed to serve two year olds, admission depends upon the University's acceptance.

"When people hear the word laboratory, it conjures up fears that we're going to give the children shots or something evil," Craig said. Experimentation is done on an observational level with the intent to improve curriculum and maximum growth development among the children, she said.

The Campus Coalition for Childcare also complained because parental involvement in the center was discouraged. However, Craig said, the center currently invites all 38 parents to monthly meetings.

In addition, the coalition said they didn't feel the Bowditch building, which was donated to the University by 4-H for the specific purposes of day care, should be used rent-free by the School of Eduction for teacher trainer purposes.

The provost's decision retains the School of Education's right to provide the center with student interns and advice.

GALLERY GANG — Students Jean Sbarra and Barry Simmons enjoy Lorenzo Pezzatini's show, entitled "Come", which will be on display this week at the Herter Gallery.

In March 1980, at another St. Patricks Day Parade in Holyoke, Casey and other Irish activists stood on the sidewalks protesting Irish insensitivity, she said.

"It had nothing to do with the struggles in Ireland. There were strange floats. It's as if they wanted to celebrate the myths of Ireland — thatched roof cottages and leprechauns. They didn't want to see the other side — the ugly side," she said.

Casey said she and her friends were threatened by Holyoke parade stewards who said they would get the police to drag them off the sidewalk if they didn't leave.

But Casey and her friends stayed, arguing that it was their constitutional right.

"The Irish politicians in this country are ridiculous, laughable," Casey also said. "Tip O'Neil, Patrick Moynahan, Ted Kennedy, sit on their asses and do nothing. They don't lift a finger to help. Once a year on St. Patricks Day they bring up the Irish struggle, and that's it.

Next week Casey is returning home to Ireland. She explained that her family's long history of political radicalism and internment is not the norm for every family.

"But every family in Northern Ireland has some connection, a relative or a cousin, who has resisted the English and has been jailed," she said.

"There is no way the Irish liberation struggle can be crushed. If it takes another 800 years people will still resist. There is a quote by Padring Pearse that says, 'In Ireland the unfree shall never be peaceful.'

"That's why I want to go back. I feel good about a country that's trying to make itself a better place. It will never lie down and accept oppression," she said.

Women to hold conference

A conference entitled "Strengthening Ourselves and Our Communities" will be held for women living in the northeast United States at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center May 17 to 19.

The conference will gather rural women so they can learn from one another how to develop leadership skills and use those skills to increase their own and their communities' self—reliance.

Women will share information about their successes; a self—help housing project in Maine, a community health clinic in Vermont and a battered women's shelter in Delaware.

Women interested in attending the conference can call 545--0027 for more information.

Supermarket reportedly robbed

Price Chopper supermarket was reportedly robbed Tuesday night when a man in his 20's grabbed over $100 in cash from a cash box momentarily left unattended in the office, Amherst police said.

The man then fled with two accomplices in a black Cadillac and drove south on University Drive, police said.

Police are still investigating.

Lobbying workshops planned

The Undergraduate Student Senate's Public Policy Committee will be holding two workshops this afternoon in preparation for next Tuesday's lobbying trip to Boston in support of the University of Massachusetts budget.

The first workshop is scheduled for 1p.m. in Campus Center room 165-169. The second workshop will be at 4:30 in the Suffolk Room of the Student Union Building, where Ralph Whitehead of the Journalistic Studies program will discuss lobbying techniques.

Basic facts about the UMass budget will be discussed, as well as the budgeting process itself and specific problem areas in it for the University.

On May 12, students will meet in Boston with their state representatives to gather support for the University in the legislature.

Hypnotist to give performance

Hypnotist Ken Weber will perform at 8 tomorrow night in the Student Union Ballroom in an appearance sponsored by the Governor's Program Council.

Weber is certified in Clinical Hypnotherapy and will hold a question and answer session after the performance.

Admission is $2.00.

Weber will also hold a special Memory Improvement Seminar at 3 p.m. tomorrow in room 101 Campus Center. Special systems for remembering different types of academic material will be presented. Admission is free.

Women doctors lag in medical promotions

BOSTON (AP) — About a quarter of the young doctors setting up practice in the United States these days are female, but women doctors are still having trouble landing the prestigious top jobs at the nation's medical schools, a study shows.

The review documents a remarkable surge in the numbers of women being admitted to this once largely all—male profession. But it asserts, "Medical schools should consciously take the lead in promoting women, as they did in admitting women to medical school."

The study was conducted at the University of Arizona College of Medicine by Judith B. Braslow and Dr. Marilyn Heins. It was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

An editorial in the same issue predicts that women doctors will have trouble rising to the top of their profession as long as they must give part of their time to raising children.

The great increase in the number of women entering medicine occurred early in the last decade. In 1970, women accounted for 11 percent of students starting medicine school. By 1979, that number was 28 percent.

Only 14,000 women graduated from medical schools between 1930 and 1970, compared with 20,000 between 1970 and 1980.

However, the study said, there has been only a small increase in the number of women on medical school faculties during the past decade, and few women hold administrative positions. No medical school is headed by a female dean.

On the death of a martyr

And so Bobby Sands is dead.

After a 66-day hunger strike, Sands is dead and only time will tell whether his death was as significant as he and his Irish Republican Army comrades hoped it would be.

The death of Bobby Sands has brought to light problems which have existed in Northern Ireland since British troops moved into Ulster in August 1969: internment, the detention without warrant of suspected IRA members, which often is used as an excuse for picking up any Nationalist; the Diplock courts, which operate without jury; torture and inhuman punishment, which is used during interrogation of suspected IRA members.

What has also been shown during the three-month ordeal of Bobby Sands is the unyielding hauteur of the British government. While repeating their intractable position that convicted IRA members are common prisoners, not political prisoners, the British government has refused to address the more important question of explaining why IRA prisoners had, in fact, been granted political status before 1976.

A symptom of the root of the problem in Northern Ireland — a lack of understanding — is the American media coverage of the Sands ordeal. While the media has showered the public with objective reporting, this objectivity has resulted in much of the same reporting that came out of Vietnam in the 1960's. Belfast is another Saigon.

The media, with its reporting of facts and numbers alone, has continually reinforced the simplification of the Troubles by labeling them as sectarian, and sectarian alone. While it is certainly true the Protestant and Catholic working class communities have over the years withdrawn into their respective ghettos in Belfast and Derry, to consider the problem as entirely religious is naive and irresponsible.

There has been little mention of the political and social conditions in Ulster which give rise to such organizations as the IRA and the Ulster Defense Regiment, a loyalist para-military force.

As for the IRA or loyalist organizations which resort to violence, there is no place in this world for any group which intimidates, kills or maims innocent people. But condemnation of IRA terrorist activities should be accompanied with denounciation of the political and social situations which exist in Northern Ireland. And for this, Ulster loyalists and the British government must share responsibility.

A most corrupt philosophy

CARP (Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles) has made itself very active on campus this semester. I feel it is important for people to understand their motivations, goals, and tactics.

Many CARP members have insisted that, although some individual members of CARP are Moonies, CARP is not connected to the Unification Church (UC).

This is not only untrue, but is part of Rev. Moon's (and CARP's) deplorable tactic of recruiting new members through deception.

If one simply skims through their publication, The World Student Times, one will find small shaded boxes entitled: "Rev. Sun Myung Moon — The inspiration of CARP."

Furthermore, it was reported in the May 10, 1974 issue of New Hope (A Moon organization publication) that, "Father (Rev. Moon) stressed the importance of building up CARP to serve as a foundation for their work when they arrive.

"Father said that college campuses are a major battlefield, and if we win there we will definitely win America."

CARP, the Moonies, and the UC are all the same thing. Or at least they all have the same goals, tactics and leaders. CARP is the main Moon organization attempting to recruit — professors, students, and future professionals from college campuses. This is the main function of CARP; not to educate, not to raise money, but to recruit people from this and other campuses — to recruit people, not only for CARP, but for the Unification Church.

Moon feels that college campus recruiting is the first and major step to dominating U.S. politics. Furthermore, he feels that once he has dominated the politics of seven countries — the United States, England, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, and South Korea — he will be able to dominate the world, eventually turning it into a world-wide theocracy where the state and Moon's philosophy are the same thing. In this world, Korean would be the universal language, no doubt because Moon is from Korea. This world will be controlled by (guess who?) Moon and his most faithful followers.

This is no grade B horror movie or Kurt Vonnegut novel, nor is it some ludicrous remake of Invasion of the Body Snatchers. Moon and his followers fully intend to proceed according to plan — and fulfill that plan by whatever means necessary.

Their way of recruiting and keeping people resemble the techniques of such infamous cults as those of Charlie Manson and Jim Jones. In their discipline toward their people they resemble a fascist, para-military organization. Many of their recruiting techniques rely on deception, degradation and brainwashing.

Not ever to imply that Moon is a madman, he is a sly, evil tactician, bent on fulfilling his own grand philosophy at the expense of his followers and the world's people.

Moon ("The Messiah") and the Unification Church have business ventures throughout the globe. One, at least, is thought to be an armaments plant producing anti-aircraft weapons, grenade launchers, and parts of the M-16 rifle for the South Korean military dictatorship. How many of you thought that God's work would be accomplished through the barrel of a gun?

Moon's style also shows how sly and deceptive he is. The UC, being a "religous" organization, does not pay taxes. Furthermore, Moon's businesses can avoid taxes by contributing profits to a non-profit organization — namely (you guessed it) the Unification Church. These donations can then be invested in more companies, or they can be used to start groups like the Amherst branch of CARP.

For those who still feel that CARP is no great threat to our lives and liberties, give this some thought. In 1978, Moon's followers were thought to number 30,000 in this country (who knows how many there are now). The UC is a multi-million dollar menace. Their funds can be focused in many directions or aimed at a single one. Members extoll unswerving loyalty to Moon and his cause. Hard-core moonies may spend every waking hour doing Moon's bidding. Though the group is small, its people's power and monetary backing is huge. These dedicated moonies, the fingers and toes of Rev. Moon, can cause much damage to our communities.

Progressive groups and individuals on campus which oppose CARP, cannot compete with them when it comes to expenses. Nor do we have a centralized structure as they do. Likewise we would find it hard to match their propaganda barrage with an education campaign. Therefore, I urge all students to spread the word about what CARP is and what the Unification Church stands for. One unaware student is fodder for their guns. One unaware student is one too many. This must be an ongoing campaign, for CARP has a new group to subvert with every new semester of first-year students. They feel that they can wait for us to burn ourselves out, or ignore them for one semester too many.

Much of the information I used in this column, I read in a subcommittee report to the U.S. House of Representatives. Anti-moon pamphlets and literature are common. People may find it of interest to read about the moonies. Perhaps with the intent of confronting them.

But do be careful. They may call you a religious bigot. Or even worse. A final quote from Rev. Moon (The inspiration of CARP):

"...so far the world can be against us and nothing happened. Now when they are against us then they are going to get the punishment. So from this time...every people or every organization that goes against the Unification Church, will gradually come down or drastically come down and die. Many people will die — those that go against our movement."

What penalty for a column? A letter bomb? A kneecapping in the concourse? A lynching? Eternal damnation?

The last possibility is the most absurd. Rev. Moon is the epitomy of all evil. He and his theology make up the most vile and corrupt philosophy to ever be exposed. Far from being divine as his followers would have us believe, he is the worst insult to intelligence that humanity has ever been asked to bear.

SNOW WHITE AND HER LITTLE DWARFS

A little column crammed with idle observation

Four years of idle observation crammed into one little column:

The only thing worse than a student who pretends to be sophisticated is one who really is. Nobody should be sophisticated until well past his fortieth birthday.

Fraternity hazing cermonies must be some sort of sordid homosexual ritual, or else they wouldn't be so tight-lipped about them.

Liberal neglect

When I transfered to the University of Massachusetts, I really didn't know what to expect from this place. I came from a medium-sized university in Ohio (about 20,000). One of the first things I noticed about this university was the many different kinds of protests and rallies that are held almost every day. Rallies to support or denounce everything from gun control to abortion.

So what happens when the 11th anniversary of the shootings at Kent State comes around? Nothing, absolutely nothing. I was shocked to say the least. May 4 came and went and not a word was mentioned in this paper. Here we are supposedly a liberal bunch of students who can't even remember the four students from Kent State who were protesting against something they felt was very wrong, the Vietnam War. I don't want these students to be idolized as martyrs, but with the situation in El Salvador, the reality of anti-war demonstrations isn't that inconceivable.

Descries anti-British feelings

In response to all the anti-British feelings that have been around lately, I think it's time the other side of the argument was heard.

When I visited Ireland last summer, the car I was traveling in was stopped by the IRA. The driver of the car had to show his birth certificate and the car was thoroughly searched. This occurred 10 miles out of Belfast, a good distance from any 'trouble area'.

While the British soldiers have been known for provoking certain incidents, one must remember that the IRA members aren't the gentlest people. In downtown Belfast there are Control Zones where there has to be someone of at least 13 years of age in a parked car or else the police blow it up. The reason behind this is because the IRA was blowing up the shops owned by Protestants.

When talking about Bobby Sands, one should remember that the British tried to intervene in his hunger-strike, but by law they were not allowed to force feed him. Sands died not a martyr, as Peter Bahmer claims. He was an ordinary human being who took his life because he wanted to, not because someone "murdered" him. He supported the IRA; he supported the violence and bloodshed of innocent people that the IRA has caused.

I'm not in support of the British presence in Northern Ireland, but I do think both sides of the picture should be shown. Innocent people are killed every day in Ireland because of their religions and their beliefs. The British are not the only 'bad guys' around.

Art for a weakened society

In response to the letter in Tuesday's Collegian by Andre La Montagne, I would like to express a debt of gratitude to the Arts Department, the Fine Arts Center and everyone involved in any way with the Arts. The innovation, creativity and enthusiastic expressionism that you have demonstrated in my years at this school has been a bright spot in my education. At any one time, there are many exciting and occasionally wonderful projects, exhibits and shows on this campus.

People are social creatures; public art is an important element to preserve our integrity in a society too weakened by bureaucracy and social and political oppression. Every manifestation of artistic intention on this campus gives me a brief respite from the tiresome mechanics of the University system. That little holiday, be it induced from paper bags, neon, wax, steel, or paint, (and knowing that contemporaries of mine are responsible for it) makes me feel like it's all worth it.

I may be alone in my appreciation of the Arts at UMass. But I don't think so. Thank you all!

Wildlife Dept. perseveres

On May 4, 1981 the University of Massachusetts' Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management celebrated its Golden Anniversary. This department has served this campus for the past 50 years in the fields of wildlife and fisheries biology, foresty, wood science and technology, and natural resource studies.

Its history dates back to 1897 when the first technical lectures in forestry took place in America, but it wasn't until the arrival of Dr. R.P. Holdsworth, Prof. of Forestry, in 1930, that the formal academic program in forestry was established. He was followed in 1936 by Dr. R.E. Trippensee, Prof. of Wildlife Management. Further expansion took place in 1948, with the major of Wood Science and Technology and the Massachusetts Wildlife Cooperative Research unit; in 1962, the Fisheries Biology in 1964, the Massachusetts Fisheries Cooperative Research Unit; and in 1972, the Natural Resource Studies major completed the department.

Currently, our department not only serves the state but the nation in educating and training personnel for the environmental fields. The research in the graduate schools is providing technical advice on how to lower taxes through management of town forest lands, water quality improvement in Quabbin Reservoir, and radiotelemmetry work on large New England mammals. The restoration of Atlantic salmon in the Connecticut River (UMass has been a leader in this research), and the wood technology major have made significant contributions in the improved use of wood products.

The history of the Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management is one we all can be proud of. Like the tree that is shaded by the skyscraper but still persists and grows, the Dept. is small but contains many people who persevere in the environmental fields, for the improvement and the betterment of humankind.

Good use of slim resources

I would just like to express my thanks to the NAIADS synchronized swim club for a very enjoyable and inexpensive evening of entertainment last Friday night.

In these days of extremely limited resources at our school, it is really quite remarkable that this group of students could organize and produce such an outstanding performance. Everyone involved should be very proud.

Baby, it's hot outside, and finals are bearing down on us, but for a break from academic pressure there's another weekend of musical fun in Happy Valley.

This evening in UMass' fashionable campus bar, Total Electric Living will hold their swan song performance. If you don't see them now, you'll never get another shot.

Meanwhile, over at the Rusty Nail The Dregs will be making their first valley appearance, and the Fools return to Hangar One.

The Fools recently released an unimpressive album, but they'll still suffice to dance away seasonal frustrations.

With bands making their first and last area gigs, it's a secure feeling to know The Elevators will still be in the Valley, at Hangar One tomorrow night.

The Atlantics grace the Wall with their presence Friday.

Also Friday, Beaver Brown makes its one millionth and first Saturday in the Blue Wall.

You'd think area clubs could display a bit more variety and imagination, instead of booking the same acts over, and over, and over.

In news from the record world: new releases from Tom Petty and Joe Walsh should be in the stores any time now.

Don't expect that new album from Ringo Starr, which was announced previously. Portrait Records dropped him from the label, when they failed to swing an international distribution deal for Starr's latest, Can't Fight Lightning.

A new studio album is expected from The Rolling Stones in July, which will reportedly be accompanied by a tour.

Total Electric Living will be making their final performance tonight in the Blue Wall.

The Fools (above) and the Dregs (below) are among the bands visiting the area this weekend.

Ringo Starr, flanked by Dennis Quaid, left, and Shelley Long, right, in a scene from the current comedy "Caveman."

'Caveman' captures humor in stone ages

By DIANE CARRIER
Collegian Correspondent

Caveman, the slapstick comedy starring Ringo Starr, won't be nominated for any Academy awards. However, it is a very enjoyable film on a lighthearted level. The plot is based on the typical theme of the love triangle. Ringo Starr plays Atouk, a caveman whose lust for the tribal leader's mate gets him literally tossed out of the tribe. He is met by Lar, another outcast, and they eventually build up a tribe of their own. Meanwhile Tala, the pretty daughter of a blind man, is striving for Atouk's affections.

This film is well-cast, with Barbara Bach (The Spy Who Loved Me, Up the Academy) as the sexy mate of the powerful tribal leader portrayed by Oakland Raider John Matuszak (who made his film debut in North Dallas Forty). Jack Gilford is terrifically funny as the doddering old blind man. Dennis Quaid is Atouk's good-looking, boyish best friend, and Shelley Long fits well in the role of the girl-next-door.

Directed and co-written by Carl Gottlieb (who wrote for The Jerk, Which Way is Up?, and Jaws), Caveman, is completely silly, but not totally funny. The creatures are adorable, from the Tyrannosaurus Rex that Ringo gets stoned, to an ice-age monster who whimpers pitifully and shuffles sadly away when his victims escape. Gottlieb tries to fit it all in, as everything from the handshake to the fried egg are discovered by Atouk and his tribe. This gets a little tiring, although one of the best scenes in the movie has them discovering rock 'n roll. This scene builds up a feeling of involvement, which suddenly drops off at its climax and fails to re-emerge throughout the rest of the film. Unfittingly, the war and chase sequences fail to come close to this emotional peak.

As might be expected of a film entitled Caveman, it gives a chauvinistic view of women. However, this is easily overlooked, as the film does not want to be taken seriously for a moment.

So, if you enjoy films which don't require you to think, and can laugh at silly, sometimes crude, humor — see Caveman before it's too late.

'Sphinx' should be buried in the pyramids

By ADRIENNE BECK
Collegian Correspondent

Director Francis Schaffner's Sphinx is as emaciated as the body of Tutankhamen, and of much less significance. Lesley-Anne Down plays Erica Baron, a supposedly brilliant Boston-based Egyptologist trying to get ahead in her chosen profession. She hopes to piece together the inconsistent accounts concerning the discovery of the tombs of the Ancient Egyptian kings.

Unfortunately, Schaffner credits her with vastly insufficient intelligence. While she should be portrayed as a dedicated, ambitious college grad, Down plays her as just another sexy tourist. Red-haired, fair-skinned, jumpsuit-clad, Erica runs through an Arab marketplace and wonders why everyone is staring at her. She gapes and gawks at a priceless, lifesize statue of Seti I the same way she looks at Frank Langella.

Langella plays Ahmed Khazzan, the director general of the department of antiquities in Egypt, with as much expression as the statues he protects. Ahmed and Erica's romance is totally unbelievable. After declaring her indepedence from men and her contempt for Ahmed, Erica quickly falls in love with him. Soon she is willing to give up her treasure and her career for Ahmed, even after he has continuously lied to her. The rest of the plot is as vague as the romance and the supporting characters, especially Yvon de Margeau (Maurice Ronet) are poorly developed and boring.

From an early scene where a young Arab is drawn and quartered to the endless scenes of the harassment, humiliation and betrayal of Erica Baron, Sphinx is unpleasant, if not downright cruel. Down continuously screams, wimpers and moans as she is pursued by hooded Arabs, haunted by bats, and plagued by a faulty flashlight. Director Schaffner wants to say it's too dangerous for a woman to travel alone in a foreign country.

The few intentional attempts at humor in the film are irritating and embarassing. An employee of Khazzan's in a floppy hat and large sunglasses tails Erica; An overweight tour guide in a jogging suit leads a tour group through the tombs and playfully cracks jokes at the tourists; and Arabs bop around like cartoon characters in a ridiculous car chase.

At the very least one would expect a film about Ancient Egyptian treasures and landmarks to have some nice photography of the great pyramids, but not Sphinx. The only shots taken of these impressive structures are with Lesley-Anne Down posing on them for her tour guide. It looks like she is doing commercial work for a travel agency.

Robin Cook's novel of the same name was a fairly entertaining thriller, but its motion picture counterpart falls flat with mummified dialogue and acting. Cook's previous novel, Coma, fared much better on screen due to fast-paced direction and an exciting performance by Genevieve Bujold as the heroine.

Sphinx should be immediately cast into the Nile, but keep its hiding place a secret, otherwise it could be dug up with other lifeless relics.

'Howling' provides beastly transformations

By STEPHEN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Imagine fangs gleaming in the light of a full moon. Imagine taloned claws ripping across naked flesh. Imagine a blood-curdling scream—not quite animal and not nearly human—but something a little of both. Imagine The Howling.

Ah, the horror, the horror. I haven't seen this good of a monster movie since The Exorcist. The Howling is that good, and in some ways, better. Director Joe Dante and screenwriters John Sayles and Terence Winkless have weaved a strong tale about that most elusive of creatures, the werewolf. And what a creature. No longer quite so human as Lon Chaney Jr.'s Wolfman, The Howling offers us truly terrifying creations, demonic, powerful, and all too real. Downright monstrous.

The credit for this symbiosis of fear and realism lies in the film's extraordinary special effects. These effects rival those seen in Altered States, and those were quite excellent. Right before our eyes, frame by frame, we see actors and actresses change completely into those creatures of the night. Faces bulge and contort, canines grow into fangs, jaws protrude outward into furred muzzles—it's a weird evolution in reverse. it's a visual odyssey of man's darker side taking over.

But, like most of Hollywood's current fare of horror movies, The Howling can be quite exploitative at times. The process of building audience tension is becoming a science and this film sometimes proves the theory. As a character moves closer to the camera, blocking our field of vision, you just know something bad is about to happen, you know they'll be knifed or attacked or, as in this case, bitten. It's becoming too easy to tell when something grotesque is going to occur. Yet we love it anyway and cringe in anticipation. Audiences are becoming so masochistic.

The acting in the film is passable, nothing outstanding and none of it too beastly. It's nice to see David Carradine's father John still performing in movies. Although not on screen for any great length of time, his role as an old werewolf tired of masquerading as an old man all the time is pretty comical and touching.

The Howling is also a fine satire on today's television, both in terms of reporting and in audience viewing. It's done sardonically and humorously, especially at the film's close.

Netmen wrap up season, finish 5th in New England

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team has concluded its season for another year. After winning the New England B Pool Championship two weeks ago at Middlebury over 22 teams, they came back this past week-end to place 5th in the New England A Pool Championships in Amherst.

"This was the best finish in the history of UMass tennis in the New Englands," UMass coach Steven Williams said. "It was easily the greatest tennis effort in UMass history." history.

Neil Mackertich for UMass, lost his first round match but then battled his way back to the semi-finals in the consolation bracket of this past weekend's New Englands. Senior tri-captain, Sergio Strepman, had bad luck fall his way, as he sprained his ankle in the first round and had to withdraw from the remainder of the tournament. Mark Huetteman, another senior tri-captain on the team, really glittered in his final match as a Minuteman, as he won the consolation bracket of the B flight, hitting number three singles.

The third senior tri-captain, Matt Modlish, went as far as the second round in the fourth singles spot. Five and six singles Nick Julian and Paul Jaffe both fell in quarter-final action.

In doubles, it was Huetteman and Modlish at number one cruising all the way to the finals of the A flight consolation bracket before losing. Second doubles Julian and Mackertich dropped a second round match. And Jaffe and Dave Kim went to the Semis of the C flight consolation bracket hitting number three.

"It's almost unbelievable that we finished ahead of an Ivy League team," Williams said, "their programs are geared to a national scope, which ours are not."

Because of the condition of the UMass courts, the status of the tennis program here is in a state of limbo.

"It would be a complete travesty not to have the proper facilities to run a varsity program here," Williams said. "As a team, we would like to see something done to keep tennis as a varsity sport here at the University."

"I've appreciated having the seniors and they've done a good job for four years here," Williams said. "But we have a good core back for next year as well."

And as the Amherst college tennis coach said to Williams, "I can't believe it! You finished ahead of an Ivy League team! Don't ever complain about your team to me again!"

won the New England championship, have already shown their potential for winning.

The freshmen boats, who have been plagued by both mechanical and mental mishaps this season, hope to pull everything together this week.

"They're just starting to row well and should do very well down at the Vail," freshman coach Ron Reece said.

All three coaches agree that the teams are ready and expectations are high.

"The way the women are moving, the way the JV is moving, the way the varsity can move, and if the freshmen stay away from problems, the point trophy is a definite possibility," Kumlin said.

Karate club wins

By FRANK PAOLINO
Special to the Collegian

The University of Massachusetts karate club took the championship title in the "novice" sparring division in a recent tournament held at Tufts University in Boston.

The club is presently studying the Shotokan style of karate under Master Kazumi Tabata. Tabata, a sixth degree black belt in several styles of karate as well as head of the North American Karate Federation and the NECKC (New England Collegiate Karate Conference) was sent by the Japanese government in 1967 to promote the Shotokan style of karate at the college level.

Master Tabata began to establish clubs at several major universities in the New England area, which now make up the NECKC. In addition to UMass Amherst, which is an expansion club started in September, such schools as Boston College, Boston University, Tufts, Lowell, Yale, Harvard, Dartmouth and Bridgewater exist as recognized Shotokan clubs.

Student black belt instructors, Frank Paolino and Keith Gauthier and brown belt instructor Dave Cavanaugh who aid Master Tabata in teaching at UMass, trained the UMass novice team for two semesters. The hard training paid off as the club was rewarded with the novice title.

Tri-Captains Mike Mileszko, Brian Marley and John Mileszko, who have all successfully promoted in rank, along with Bob Stanton and Steve Carpenter enjoyed an undefeated (team) afternoon. The novice sparring division is made up of five member teams, who compete against opposing schools. Each man fights, one at a time against a member of the opposing team. The best of five fights takes the match. Mike Mileszko, Bob Stanton and John Mileszko all went undefeated on the afternoon. While Brian Marley lost only once and Steve Carpenter twice.

Thompson wins seventh

(No, not Ronnie) Perry shines, Cross falls

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

It was storybook stuff; local kid makes good, old man comes through. Stuff you read about.

By the time UMass leftfielder John Kraham squeezed the final out down at Lorden Field yesterday, what would have been the tying and go ahead runs for Holy Cross had crossed the plate to no avail — and the local kid Jack Perry and the old man Chuck Thompson had shaken hands.

Thompson and Perry could congratulate their teammates and each other on a job well done in a 2-1 University of Massachusetts win over the Crusaders.

It was Thompson, the senior ace on the UMass staff, who left those runs on second and third base to secure his seventh victory this year, while Perry came through with two hits, a big run batted in, and an even bigger defensive play in his first varsity start to boost the Minutemen's record to 19-17.

Thompson scattered seven hits and struck out four in his sixth complete game this season. As usual, ol' sinker-slider Chuck induced ground balls when he needed them, as his defense gave him two big double plays to get out of jams in the first and fifth innings; one started by Thompson himself, the other by second baseman Dean Bennett, who scored the winning run, and both finished by first baseman Warren McReddie, who drove in Bennett with a sacrifice fly in the third.

Perry, the junior Northampton native, got his first varsity start this year, subbing for third base regular Barry Bennett, who was sidelined with an injured left hand.

"I didn't know I was starting until BP (batting practice)," said Perry, who had played in just five games until yesterday. "I felt kind of nervous at the plate, but not in the field."

Perry responded with a perfect day in the field, handling five chances, and drove in the first UMass run in the second. Perry made the storybook story complete by cutting down the tying run at the plate, assisted by catcher Jim Aulenback's block, in the Holy Cross eighth.

Holy Cross grabbed a short lived 1-0 lead in the first when Thompson gave up one of his three walks to Vin Eurizone, brother of U.S. Olympic hockey team captain Mike. After a strikeout, Crusader DH Tom Scannell reached on a debated infield single which UMass claimed went off the batter's foot, i.e., foul ball. Dave Stenhouse followed with the first of his three singles that scored Eurizone and moved Scannell to third, but Thompson served up one of his DP balls, 4-6-3, to end the inning.

UMass tied the game in the second when Aulenback reached on an error and Kraham took his place at first after a fielder's choice. Minuteman shortstop Vin Bonanno followed with one of his two singles, while DH Kelly McDonald moved the runners along by getting the ball to the right side of the infield for an unofficial sacrifice. Perry, who had been up just three times before yesterday, followed with his first hit this year, scoring Kraham.

UMass got its second run off Holy Cross starter and loser Rich Burgess in the third, when Dean Bennett led off with a walk and moved to third on a Keith Lovellette double. After a strikeout, Bennett came home when McReddie lofted a fly to left for his 24th RBI this year.

From there, the game turned into one of the better pitching duels this season as Burgess let only four men reach base over the next five innings and Thompson used his ol-sinker-slider routine to near perfection. Burgess, now 4-4, and Thompson each allowed seven hits.

Holy Cross pinch-hitter Dino Casagrande led off the eighth with a double, and moved to third when Eurizone flew out deep to center. Centerfielder Gary Quinlan followed with a slow chopper to third, and pinch-runner Tim Linehan headed home.

"I knew he was going," said Perry, whose perfect throw home was complemented by Aulenback's perfect John Hannah block of the plate. "I just went home with it, and Jimmy (Aulenback) made a super block."

More dramatics followed in the ninth when Stenhouse and Jim Vest led off with back-to-back singles. After a sacrifice moved them over, Thompson found himself with runners on second and third and a one-run lead to protect.

No probs. Ol' sinker-slider Chuck struck out third baseman Jim Irzyk, and first baseman Ed Scannell's harmless fly to Kraham in left ended it.

"I don't know what it is," said Thompson, who for the second time in a week looked very impressive with what he considers unimpressive stuff. "It took me a while to loosen up, but I got into a groove later on. I don't know — maybe I warm up wrong."

But UMass pitcher Steve Cramer knew why Thompson got stronger as he went along.

"The reason Chuck finished up so strong is that he didn't want me to get in there," said Cramer, who was scheduled for relief yesterday. "No more New Hampshires, huh, Chuck?"

Ol' sinker slider Chuck had to laugh.

Behind the Plate — Lovellette has to have set some kind of record for being hit by pitches. O'fer was plonked again yesterday, for the sixth time this season...if they keep records on assists for third basemen, Barry Bennett's 105 so far has got to be one...as for official records, McReddie is still just one off the single season home run mark of eight set by Bob Hansen back in 1968, when McReddie was playing Little League. Mark Litano is two doubles away from tying Dick Peppin's record of 13 in a season...UMass is off until next Tuesday when they host Dartmouth at Lorden.

Lax jargon explained

By JIM TUBBS
Special to the Collegian

Since Friday's men's lacrosse game against Syracuse has been labeled the game of the year, and since there probably will be close to 7000 screaming Gorilla fans present, a little education on the game of lacrosse may be helpful for the newer fans to the game.

It's do or die for both the University of Massachusetts Gorillas and Syracuse University, who square off tomorrow at 3 at Boyden Field. The winner of tomorrow's game could be the team invited to post-season play.

Field dimensions are similar to football, with a lacrosse field measuring 110 yards long (compared to 100), 60 yards wide (compared to 52), and the two goals are 80 yards apart from one another.

Each team fields ten players; one goalie, three defensemen, three midfielders and three attackers. To keep the game wide open, the rules provide restrictions on the number of players which may attack and defend at all times.

The offsides rule simply states that a team must keep four men in the defensive half and three men in the attack half at all times. The three midfielders are allowed to play in both zones without any offsides restrictions.

There are two types of penalties, personal and technical (one minute and 30 seconds, respectively). The more common personal fouls are slashing, hitting in the head, cross-checking and tripping. A technical foul occurs only when the ball is in possession. Pushing, holding and hitting from the real are the most common technical fouls.

Possession of the ball occurs when the opposition is the last person to touch the ball before it leaves the playing field. If the ball leaves the field on a shot on goal, possession is awarded to the team that is closest to the ball when it left the area. Loss of possession also occurs when a player uses his hand to play the ball or to play another opponent.

Rowers at Dad Vail

By JIM FLOYD
and ANNA ROELL
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts men's and women's crew teams journey to Philadelphia for the Dad Vail Regatta this Friday and Saturday, they will be united for one common goal: an overall national championship.

The Dad Vail represents the Division II national championship. UMass has, in the past eight years, brought home six individual national titles, including the men's heavyweight eight championship last year.

With the strength and depth of the men's and women's teams this year, UMass looks to be a definite contender for the national team title.

"It's the end of a nine-month process of training, working on technique and racing," men's coach Dave Kumlin said. "It's trying to get everything together and peak for the nationals. We look to be right on schedule."

UMass will be entered in six events. The events are: men's and women's varsity heavyweight eight, men's junior varsity eight, women's novice eight, men's freshmen eight, and men's freshmen four.

"The team goal for every boat is to get through all the qualifying rounds and get to the finals," Kumlin said.

Women's crew coach Barbara Roche, whose varsity boat is coming off what she termed, "their best race of the year," is going to Philadelphia with high hopes.

"I'm very optimistic about my varsity boat," Roche said. "They've already beaten a couple of teams that will be down there and they want to win badly."

Roche expects that her novice boat, which ran into difficulties at the New Englands last week, will bounce back and row their way into the finals.

If Kumlin's plan to raise the intensity of the members of the varsity boat have worked, then the men's varsity eight may be able to successfully defend the title won at last year's Dad Vail. Four oarsmen from last year's championship boat will be rowing in this race once again.

Gorilla warfare today at Boyden

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

Pete Schmitz sat on the scorer's table in front of the bleachers at Boyden Field yesterday and surveyed the newly roped-off playing area.

"You know they're going to have to move those lines back a bit or the people will be overflowing on to the field," the senior tri-captain of the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team said. "It's a good thing the ropes are there though, this place is going to packed tomorrow."

Schmitz' assumptions will most likely be proven correct as the largest crowd ever to attend a New England lacrosse game is anticipated for today's 3 p.m. showdown between the nationally seventh-ranked Orangemen of Syracuse University and the fifth ranked University of Massachusetts Gorillas, whose record now stands at 10-1.

"We certainly know that this would be a big game," Massachusetts head coach Dick Garber said. "This is the best team we've ever had here and they've been playing exciting lacrosse all year, but we never anticipated being 10-1 at this point."

Massachusetts, which could post the best season record in its 26 year history with a strong finish, was ranked as high as fourth in the nation and had run off ten straight victories before being defeated last week, 14-10, by the Black Knights of Army at West Point.

Lately, Army's Michie Stadium is developing a considerable reputation as a graveyard for winning streaks as Syracuse, now 7-2, had a string of seven snapped by these same Knights two games ago, 11-10 in an overtime upset thriller.

The Orangemen's loss to Army was its first of two consecutive setbacks, the latest being a 13-7 defeat at the hands of the surging Cornell Red, a team which jumped into the ninth position of the national poll.

PVTA funding proposals debated

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association and Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty offered opposing views on proposals yesterday that would increase annual student fees to help alleviate the fiscal problems of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA).

Both proposals, which would set up separate trust funds, were developed to solve the present $28,000 budget deficit facing the PVTA this fiscal year.

Former SGA Treasurer Al Wallace, the major proponent of the SGA proposal, said that plan would require on-campus and off-campus students, through a separate trust fund, to pay $10 and $15 per year per student respectively.

This plan, Wallace said, would not include the present fee students pay through the Student Activities Fee (SATF), which currently covers the annual $10 fee each University student pays for the transit service.

Because the SATF fee would not be included, Wallace said, $10 would be freed in that fund, and a referendum would hopefully go to a student vote next fall to decide on how that money would be allocated.

Beatty said that under the other proposal, on-campus and off-campus students would be required to pay $12 and $17 respectively per year.

The difference in the SGA proposal, Beatty pointed out, is that the $10 from the current SATF would be included in the proposed fee. The remaining money, he said, would be paid by the students, through a separate trust fund.

In a memo issued by his office, Beatty disagreed with the SGA proposal because, he said, "Setting up a separate trust fund for transit operations without first reducing the SATF from its current level is essentially an increase in the SATF."

Wallace, defending the SGA plan, said, the SATF would not be increased, and students would hopefully be able to vote on the allocation of the excess $10.

Wallace, emphasizing the immediate need for a decision on one of the proposals, said if one does not exist by May 17, the PVTA's upcoming service could be "seriously jeopardized."

Financial stress affects new Southwest students

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

Financial problems and social isolation seem to affect new students living in the Southwest Residential Area, according to surveys made by the Southwest Residential College.

"Financial stress is the major concern that students have expressed," concluded Alan Goodman, a Ph.D. candidate in Anthropology at the University of Massachusetts, who administered the survey through the First Year Program, a part of the Southwest Residential College.

One survey also points out that among new students, over half thought they knew too few persons, even after four months at UMass, and that almost half said they had too few close friends.

The survey also shows that nearly one student out of four reported experiencing an act of theft, vandalism, violence or harassment during the semester. Goodman, in the report, said that number was "shockingly high."

The surveys were given to new students moving into Southwest at the beginning of last semester and again at the end of the

Six receive Teachers Award

By CARLA R. LESH
Collegian Staff

Three faculty members and three graduate students were awarded the Distinguished Teachers Award for 1981. Dr. Stephen Oates, professor of history; Dr. Richard Wolff, professor of economics; and Dr. David Schuman, associate professor of education were the three faculty winners.

The three graduate students honored are Christine DiSteasano, of the inquiry program; David Levinson of the rhetoric department; and Dana Paine of the French department.

Members of the committee selecting the finalists commented on the difficulty of the choice.

"It was a difficult decision to make. All the nominees were excellent teachers. I was impressed that the University has teachers of such high caliber," one committee member said.

"What distinguished the winners was their extra charisma, a little something special. There was continuous evidence that they were concerned with the students," said John Meunier, administrative coordinator of the Distinguished Teachers Award.

The six winners will be honored at a dinner banquet next fall, and will receive a $2000 honorarium as part of their award.

The winners were chosen from a field of over 100 nominees whose applications went through an elimination process narrowing the field to some nine finalists from which the winners were chosen.

Faculty applicants were nominated by students, while both faculty and students nominated students for the award.

The Distinguished Teachers Award has been given at the University for several years. The Graduate Student Office recently took over the award selection from the Provost's Office.

Reagan wins big in House; budget ok'd

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A unanimous Republican minority teamed with scores of Democrats yesterday as the House passed a $689-billion budget plan drafted to President Reagan's prescription for economic recovery through massive cuts in spending and taxes.

It was the finest legislative hour to date for Reagan. In the more critical of two separate tallies, the President reaped all of the 190 Republican votes and scored 63 of the 241 Democratic seats to prevail on a margin of 253 to 176.

The chief executive had lobbied intensively to get his measure through the one chamber where Democrats have numerical control.

But conservative Democrats aligned with the unanimous Republican minority to choose Reagan's austerity spending plan for 1982 over an alternative backed by the Democratic leadership.

After the key vote which made Reagan's plan the order of business, final passage was sealed by a margin of 270 to 154.

Opponents of the president's proposal assailed it to the end.

"Do you want to meat-ax the programs that made America great, or do you want to go slow in correcting errors of the past?" Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said as he concluded debate in a chamber where hundreds of congressmen listened silently and a packed gallery watched intently.

"You close the door on America" when voting for the Reagan-backed bill, he declared.

But Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas, a conservative Democrat instrumental in lining up votes to pass the plan, said, "We're asking that America's traditional economic and political values be allowed to work again."

But he made clear the Democrats would try to hold the Republicans responsible if the president's economic plan goes sour.

LAYING A WREATH FOR HIS FATHER — Gerard Sands, 7, places a wreath on the grave of his father, IRA hunger striker Bobby Sands, after burial services in Belfast's Milltown cemetery yesterday. Sands died Tuesday after a 66 day hunger strike.

And Rep. Bob Michel of Illinois, the Republican leader, said "let history record that we provided the margin of difference that changed the course of the American government."

Although the Democrats hold a majority of 241-190, it was clear in days leading up to the vote that the House was ready to back a president whose popularity, already high, soared in the days following a March 30 assassination attempt.

At the White House before the vote, Reagan crossed his fingers for luck and said, "wonderful, just wonderful" when told the vote on the 1982 budget plan would be a landslide.

O'Neill conceded Democratic defections would be "extremely high," and suggested Reagan might win by 90 votes in a House where Democrats have a 51-seat majority. The margin, as it turned out, was 77 on the most critical tally.

Sands' funeral draws 20,000 Irish mourners

Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Catholics of Belfast buried Bobby Sands in a graveyard of Irish nationalist heroes yesterday, to a bagpipe's lament and a parish priest's plea for "love ... peace ... an end of violence."

But new violence flared in this bloodstained land even as Sands, who starved himself to death to become the latest IRA martyr, was taken to his resting place, escorted by masked Irish Republican Army guerrillas and attended by 20,000 mourners.

Six miles from the cemetery, the strains of "God Save the Queen" rose in the drizzling Belfast air from 3,000 Protestants gathered to honor the victims of the underground war waged by Sands and his comrades in the IRA's Provisional wing.

"By a deliberate choice, he (Sands) took his own life. Those whom we honor today had no choice," militant Protestant leader Rev. Ian Paisley told the crowd. A cheer rang out as a young man raised the Union Jack.

The 27-year-old Sands' death Tuesday, the 66th day of his hunger strike at Belfast's Maze prison, brought a new peak of tension to the 11-year-old sectarian conflict here. The latest round of "troubles" threatens to worsen — three other IRA men imprisoned at Maze are hunger-striking to the death, like Sands to demand that jailed guerrillas be treated as political prisoners.

The guerrillas of the largely Roman Catholic IRA are fighting to end British control of this Protestant-dominated province and unite it with the Catholic Irish republic to the south. Almost 2,100 people have been killed since 1969.

Yesterday's new violence was reported in Londonderry, 60 miles to the west, where rioting erupted after a mourning march. At least a dozen automobiles, including one belonging to a CBS television crew, were hijacked, and youths stoned security force patrols.

Syrian forces cross 'red line' in spite of Israeli warnings

BEIRUT, Lebanon — About 4,000 Syrian troops and tanks were reported to have crossed the Israeli-set "red line" in southern Lebanon yesterday in defiance of the Jewish state's repeated warnings that Syria risked war if it violated the boundary.

The action, if confirmed, would present the Reagan administration with a major escalation of the Mideast crisis.

Lebanese government sources said the Syrians deployed forces in Sehmor and Yehmor on the western flank of Lebanon's eastern Bekaa Valley and in southern Lebanon's Kfar Tibnit, just eight miles north of Israel's northernmost border town of Metulla.

Plan to clean up Pittsfield's Housatonic River released

PITTSFIELD — State environmental officials have unveiled a plan for cleaning up PCB contamination in a Pittsfield neighborhood and the Housatonic River in Massachusetts.

The plan is the result of a consent agreement worked out among state and federal environmental officials and the General Electric Co., which used the toxic polychlorinated biphenyls for 40 years in the manufacture of transformers at its Pittsfield plant.

The agreement was ready for signing after a meeting last night at Pittsfield City Hall.

Money bill dies in House; Boston isn't out of it yet

BOSTON — The Massachusetts House — by a huge margin — killed a leadership-sponsored bill to bail Boston out of its immediate money woes yesterday, while a special meeting of the City Council called by Mayor Kevin H. White was aborted because it allegedly violated the open meeting law.

The House vote was 119-32 to kill the bill after several hours of debate.

Rep. Andrew Natsios, R-Holliston, said, "the bill can be used to evade the entire thrust" of Proposition 2½, the local property tax-limiting law approved by Massachusetts voters in November.

Anti-rent control bill looms large on the federal horizon

A proposed federal anti-rent control measure that could force cities to abandon controls or lose federal housing aid is drawing furious criticism from mayors and other local officials.

The measure passed the Senate Banking Committee on Tuesday but was defeated Wednesday in the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development.

Congressional sources believe the measure, an amendment to President Reagan's housing bill, stands a fairly good chance of passage.

Backed by conservatives in both houses, the amendment provides that cities with rent control would have to decontrol forever each housing unit as it became vacant, or else lose some federal housing aid.

Rent controls have been a hot local issue for years in the approximately 200 communities around the country that have them. Political conservatives and landlord groups have insisted they have contributed to housing shortages by discouraging new construction.

Dworkin speaks against pornography

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

The word pornography is derived from the Greek words porni and graphi which together mean the graphic depiction of whores. There is no other derivation for the word and its meaning has not changed, said feminist author Andrea Dworkin at a panel discussion last night.

The only change in pornography through history is in the meaning of graphi which has changed because of the introduction of the camera. The valuation and sexuality of the women are the same, Dworkin said.

The panel was held in Northampton as part of a three day workshop on pornography. The series is sponsored by the Northampton based Women Against Violence in Pornography and Media, and is entitled "The Feminist Case Against Pornography."

Reading from her new book, "Pornography: Men Possessing Women," Dworkin said pornography "celebrates the physical power of men over women, it expresses the authentic and commonplace relationship; the male strong and the female weak."

The fact that pornography today uses real female models evokes fear in the female observer unless she removes herself and refuses to perceive that real people posed for the pictures, said Dworkin.

Dworkin also said that the pornography industry, which used to be controlled by right-wingers is now controlled by the left-wing. She said the use of the phrase "sexual freedom" in defense of pornography is cynical and misleading. They equate the sexuality of the liberated woman with the sexuality of pornography, and within this system the only choice for women has been to embrace herself as whore, she said.

The leftists promote the democratic consumption of women, and they make it appear as if women love it, said Dworkin. Pornography is the graveyard where the left has gone to die. The left cannot have its whores and its politics too, quoted Dworkin.

Also featured on the panel was Angela Bonovoglia, journalist and editor. Bonovoglia explored the meaning and significance of the recent influx of sexually violent films such as "Dressed to Kill."

She said the mixture of sexual scenes with violent scenes in the film confuses the viewer and causes her/him to attribute some of the exhilaratory feeling to the violence. In the films, Bonovoglia said, the quality of violence is sexualized and sexuality is equated with vulnerability. The vulnerable aspect is exploited and violence occurs in a continuum from harassment to rape, she said.

All the films contain some sort of domination fantasy on the part of women, which Bonovoglia called "the saddest legacy of female oppression that we have."

BOG approves Hatch renovations

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors voted last night to approve the upcoming Hatch renovations if the costs do not exceed $500,000, and it is opened for use by the first day of classes in the Fall of 1981.

The motion, which passed on a 14 to 1 vote with six abstentions, additionally requires that if the above conditions can not be met by the Campus Center, a new proposal for renovations must be submitted to the board for further approval.

Currently, the renovations are estimated to cost around $460,000, and are scheduled to be completed by September 1, 1981.

Food Service committee member Jim Bliss, who presented the board with the blue prints of the renovation proposals, said he believed the renovations will be positive.

"It seems to be a well thought out proposal, and it seems to be representative of what the students want," he said.

Some members, who abstained from voting on the motion, expressed concern over the priority the Campus Center administrators have given to the Hatch renovations over what they said were other "neglected" areas in the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

Board member Mike Ferrigno, angered over the lack of concern given to student-run areas in the Student Union building, said the board should look more "thoroughly" into proposed renovations in the future.

"We are representatives of this building. We have a responsibility to the students. When money is spent for renovations, we have to make a stipulation that the priority is given to student-run areas. It's our money. Let's get something for it," he said.

Campus Center Director William Harris disagreed with Ferrigno's assessment, and said student-run areas were designated as "self-sustaining" entities, and therefore were not the responsibility of the Campus Center.

In other business, the board also voted to approve the expenditure of $80,000 to recarpet four floors of the Campus Center hotel.

Gerald Aldrich, member of the Student Auto Co-operative, also asked the board for help to remediate the continuing plight of his co-op. At present, the co-op is charged an annual fee by the Campus Center Garage Parking Office, and, unable to pay its debts, will not exist next fall, Aldrich said.

Southwest gov't ok's picnic funds

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Area Government last night approved the transfer of funds to be used for the Third World Picnic which is to be held in Southwest next weekend.

The money, $432 in unused payroll funds, could be transferred from the payroll account only with the government's approval, according to Nancy Brooks, director of the Malcolm X Center in Southwest.

Government co-President Ruth Mazzola announced that the Undergraduate Student Senate's Budget Committee was considering cutting the government's budget by over $5,000, or 12 percent of the total budget. The budget committee proposal would give the government $8 out of every Southwest resident's Student Activities Fee, instead of $9 currently being given.

A bill to allocate $300 for one Southwest government co-president to work during the summer on government and student projects was referred to the government's finance committee.

The government also passed a motion, 12-3, to support, yesterday's SGA Senate resolution denouncing U.S. military involvement in El Salvador.

Koffler denies rumors, says he's not leaving

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Henry Koffler yesterday denied reports that he is considering leaving his post for a position in another part of the country.

"It's absolutely untrue. This campus is an amazing place for rumors," he said.

Sources told the Collegian that reports had been circulating among faculty and staff concerning intended job-hunting and resignation by Koffler.

Koffler became UMass chancellor in August 1979.

Woman assaulted by another woman

A Puffton Village woman reported she was assaulted Wednesday afternoon by another woman and sustained minor injuries, Amherst police said. She was advised to see the clerk magistrate to file charges and set up a show cause hearing, police said.

Marc E. Holt, 32, of Winfield, was injured in a Pine Street accident and sent to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, then transferred to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, with hand injuries, police said.

The accident occurred when Holt, driving west on Pine Street, lost control of his car and swerved, hitting two guard rails in the eastbound lane. Holt's vehicle skidded 148 feet and hit a car driven by Thomas Parenty, 22, of Worcester, who had been driving east, but swerved into the westbound lane to avoid Holt, police said.

Parenty was not injured, but extensive damage was done to both cars, police said.

Police said the accident is under investigation.

University of Massachusetts student Raymond Beyrand was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital and treated for wrist injuries after losing control of a motorcycle on University Drive, where he skidded, hit an embankment and slid across Route 9, police said.

In another incident, a motorcycle cover valued at $65 was reported stolen at 8:16 a.m. Wednesday from lot 49.

Hampshire plans Sun Day events

Sun Day, an annual event to celebrate this energy source, will be held May 10 at the Hampshire College recreational field. The event, sponsored by the Five College Solar Collective, will provide information about solar energy plus local music, food, drink, softball and volleyball. There will be speakers and exhibits on solar energy, and workshops where participants will build a solar food dryer and a space heater. Tours of the Hampshire College Solar Greenhouse and a bicycle tour of solar homes will also be offered.

MUA to broadcast town meeting live

WMUA will broadcast all sessions of Amherst's annual town meeting live, beginning on May 11 at 7:30 p.m.

The dates for the town meeting are: May 11, 13, 18, 20, 27, 28, and if necessary, June 1, 2, and 4. All sessions will start at 7:30 p.m.

Vandals strike car in parking lot 21

A Pontiac parked in lot 21 received $450 worth of damage when vandals smashed the rear windshield, University of Massachusetts police reported yesterday. The incident was reported at 2:54 a.m. yesterday, police said.

In another incident, police said tools valued at $120 were reported stolen from the Agricultural Engineering building. The incident was reported at 10:05 a.m. Wednesday.

Police also received a report of a damaged candy machine on the second floor of Herter Hall at 8:10 a.m. yesterday. They said the glass over the candy was smashed and an undetermined amount of candy was taken but there was no attempt to take the money.

Sex therapist responds with counter-suit

BOSTON — Eight women who filed a $1.6 million sexual harrassment suit against a former sex therapist at the University of Massachusetts at Boston "eagerly participated" in the training sessions about which they now complain, the therapist's lawyer said yesterday.

The women — three current students and five recent graduates — allege in their U.S. District Court suit that the therapist subjected them to "unsolicited physical contact of a sexual nature, sexual leers and stares, sexual intimidation and inquiries into their private lives."

The therapist, James Hoopes, was director of the Health, Education and Information Program at UMass-Boston

The suit said Hoopes led sessions in which "students were required to engage in nude or semi-nude massage, group 'feel' sessions and discussions of sexual topics in vulgar language."

Hoopes' lawyer, Elaine M. Epstein, denied the charges and said the complaints "are made by women who not only eagerly participated in the training sessions at the time but also organized and led them."

In the statement, she said Hoopes used techniques that are generally accepted in the training of sex counselors.

"The women who now complain were mature, experienced adults who took responsibility for their own training and that of others," Ms. Epstein said. "None of them objected to the training or to any physical contact. In fact, they frequently initiated such contact and expected and sought it in return."

semester.

The surveys were made to better establish the needs of new students and to find out how those needs change after one semester, Goodman said.

Goodman's report on the first survey recommended "increased sensitivity to the financial stresses of students," through workshops on meeting college payments.

More programs dealing with adjusting to the University were also recommended by Goodman in the report.

The results from the follow-up survey, conducted during the week of November 30 last year, showed that new students were very satisfied with the overall "UMass experience," but were least satisfied with many aspects of residential living, such as personal privacy, dining commons food service, and the availability of places to study, Goodman said.

"People are unlikely to criticize people around them, and it's easier to criticize the University and the D.C. (dining commons)," Goodman said.

Financial problems and social isolation were also evidenced in the follow-up survey, he said.

Goodman said the number of students that held jobs during their first semester (35 percent) was "rather high."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control — Kicking deadlines

Dead•line (ded'lin) n. A line of demarcation which one must cross with an assignment, or else be struck dead.

Okay, rev it up. Get the adrenalin flowing, it's heart attack time in Academicsville. Get out those six books you have to read and skim through them a la Emily Wood speed reading, but without the lessons. Grab those notes you've been saving up for twelve weeks, memorize them. Tearfully reject the offer from that smug fourth-semester senior who only has three courses and is all caught up on his work, to play a round of frisbee on the shores of Puffer's Pond.

Now, sit down at the typewriter. The machine is bigger and more terrifying than you could imagine. It's like the first day in a computer room. Tripewriter, you say to the wells in a feeble attempt to make humor out of a desperate situation. Five pages, here I come, without a scrap of longhand to precede it. Whatever those five pages of borrowed paper get me, that's it. No mistakes.

Steve Masse

Okay, here goes...

Five minutes pass. Nothing on the first page. You look at your fingernails that you've already clipped and filed two times in the past while. You uncross your legs. Cross them again. Look at the calendar. Sunday is Mother's Day. Another thing you have to do — remember to call home, you inconsiderate bum. Make a quick note of it. Now suck on your pen.

While tracing the outline of your teeth, gouge your gums by accident and while yelping in the sudden pain, bite your tongue. Rip the page out of the typewriter and hear the roller zip around a few times. Hate the sound of the electric motor. Shut it off, and think for three more minutes. Feel desperately that you're getting nowhere.

Write. Just stick the page into the typewriter and go. "The Urban School and Effects of Childhood in Middle-Class America: A Discussion." Good title. There's lots to write about.

Three pages later, and three people come knocking on your door. Supper time.

"Goddammit, you just broke my strain of thought!" You think you roar, even though you didn't — but you open the door and apologize anyway, and get strange looks from the small cluster of good friends. You better leave the paper and spend the hour with them — they'll be scattered over the four corners of the globe in just a couple of weeks. Pete's so great to talk to, and Marlene is just a pip, always smiling and ready to join in on your fun, and Roscoe has finally quit holing himself up in study, and let his real wonderful degenerte disreputable self come through for you to enjoy. But it will soon be over.

Did you ever notice that the best things always happen when everything is about to end? It's one of the great puzzles that I've struggled with, and I can't come up with a sufficient theory. Is it because people take each other for granted until there is the threat of loss? Is it a matter of dumb fate? Or is it just that any closing scene triggers the memory to start filling up with the customary whitewashed images?

School has been a burden, yet the delicious moments stay with you and delude you into having good memories. Someday you'll tell your children what a gas college was. And a collage will flash through your mind of all the moments you had with your friends between the hours of vicious scramble to beat deadlines. You'll remember the time Rumstock ran naked through the orchard, and the elevator ate Jane, and Joe jumped the library fence and held out his hands for falling bricks so you could take your class movie that got slightly overexposed but was fun anyway. You'll remember dinners, and waiting in line and meeting people, and swans on the campus pond. Frisbee and softball and meeting at the gym for a workout or swim. Weekend concerts. Parties that were forgettable or regrettable.

Somebody mentions that you've been strangely quiet all the way to supper. You talk about what you'll be missing when you leave. Then you become quiet again — a little too sober, but you can't help that.

It will soon be time to make your impression on the world. You want it to be good, successful, happy. You have to be careful about making impressions, though. I had a friend who was taking a threater class, and the exercise of one particular day was the high kick. Frank was overjoyed that he could actually kick his foot higher than his head, even though he weighed nearly three hundred pounds. He barged into the dormitory, transported with excitement. A small crowd was waiting for the elevator, and Frank spotted the one person he knew among them, Greg. "Hey Greg!" Frank shouted as he lumbered toward the crowd. "Look what I learned to do!" And Frank enthusiastically kicked his foot as high as he could and ripped the entire crotch out of his pants.

Guest Column — From imperialism to culture

So much of the violence, fear and anxiety of the last thirty years has revolved around the poles of state anti-Capitalism and corporate anti-Communism. This Battle of the Giants has been so much the focus of the media that all people (including us) living in the various regions of the world have not had a chance to understand how they, in their daily lives of work and exchange, have lost control as they have lost traditional local economies.

Nick Shorr

In this guest column I will briefly outline 1) the ways we all have unknowingly hurt others, 2) the ways we have unknowingly hurt ourselves and loved ones, and 3) some ways we can reclaim our human stature and perspective without violence to others or to our own.

Somehow over the last several years, with the oil crisis and the rise in coffee and sugar prices, the media has reminded us just how dependent we have gotten on goods from far, far away. That this should have to be media "news" is in itself troublesome: why should we need the media to tell us where the goods we use come from and who gets them for us? We should know this without the media.

The "squeeze" we feel at the rising prices of these distant goods is the direct result of our complete impotence to control these distant resources.

Too often the attempt at insuring — at securing — these distant resources leads to two forms of violence; the first cultural, the second political. To secure land for our mineral "needs"and coffee and sugar "needs", we have, through the companies we buy from, supported a thirty-year media blitz aimed at drastically altering the traditional ways of life. Majid Teheranian of the now-defunct Iran Communications and Development Institute wrote in 1977: "In economic development, the mass communications media serve to mobilize human resources by raising expectations." The media push has been to meet global market needs — whether communist or capitalist — at the expense of local food cultivation. This push has resulted in a confused and homeless mass that will do any work, for any wage.

It is only after this primary act of cultural violence that the more highly publicized acts of political violence fall upon those individuals seeking to reclaim the respect and autonomy of peoplehood.

Dependence on distant forces has hurt us as well. (In this area, I heartily recommend a book by the poet and farmer Wendell Berry called The Unsettling of America: the Culture of Agriculture). The more dependent we have become, the more passive we have become, the more confused we have become, the more we seek comfort from the teat of Mama Mobil, and from Papa McDonald, the big breadwinners — and the more we need the aid of the Welfare State, and the more we need computers to make the correct decision for us.

Comfort and convenience has meant, over the last sixty years or so in the U.S., the withering of skills. Now that nostalgia for the human body has led to a running craze, perhaps we can regain respect for work done by the body, by us: farming, gardening, carpentry, tool-making, craftsmanship. The more local food we can grow, local goods we can make, local energy we can obtain, the surer we will be that cultural violence and political violence will not be supported by our money and our work. The reclaiming of local work and production of local goods will allow us to demonstrate our respect for the "environment"; less waste will be dumped, less air polluted, with our money, beyond our sight.

There are new skills to be learned. Many of us will still end up working for the larger power blocks for a while. But we must re-discover that real authority, real respect, real values can only be passed along between mother and daughter, father and son, father and daughter, mother and son, between close friends and neighbors and workmates.

How you can initiate your own democratic move from imperialism to culture?

— Buy from local merchants, smaller stores and brands. Don't throw your money thousands of miles away.

— Learn a mechanical skill or two, if you haven't one already.

— Make good friends — friends you'd want to live near and work with for a long time.

There are other things you can do too. To learn more, there will be the Appropriate Technology Fair at Hampshire College this Sunday, with exhibits, workshops and speakers; musicians, contests and games. All are invited to attend.

UPC, be aware

I wish to voice my concern regarding the Community Day policy that no cans, bottles, containers, or food of any kind will be allowed to be carried into the stadium by patrons. I realize that this policy is supposed to cut down on alcohol abuse, but I wonder if UPC knows the magnitude of responsibility they must bear to assure that people are able to obtain enough fluids and foods.

Community Day is a day-long event. We all know how hot it was last year. I would expect UPC to provide plenty of free water and free cups in addition to the fluids and foods available at the concession stands.

We should not be forced to pay for food. There are going to be a lot of people in there with nothing to eat or drink, and I know how much I hate to stand in lines. UPC should print a public summary of what students can expect inside the stadium.

Bad publicity

I find the fact that the Collegian gave coverage to the punk rock group The Dead Kennedy's down right disgusting. The Kennedy family contributed and sacrificed more for this state and country than any other American family. To allow a group of obviously mentally ill people such as The Dead Kennedy's in your paper makes my physically sick. It's bad enough we have to put up with these people, without you giving them publicity. Perhaps in the future you will use better discretion, but I doubt it.

Two wings of one bird

Two recent incidents of assault against women in Amherst make it plain that finally, in this town too, it is no longer safe for women to move freely from place to place. The message to all of us is that, if there is one type of man who commits acts of violence against women, then that type of man is on the increase.

Most men are well intentioned and have the normal, civic reactions to crimes of violence. But the violence against women continues to spread. Is it the pornography or the slackening of morale as nations edge closer to disaster? Is it the experience of violence as taught by popular goulish films? Figures suggest that the increased number of crimes against women, while part of an overall trend toward lawlessness and general deterioration of the social fabric, also parallel the growing number of women joining the ranks of appropriately compensated professionals.

Whenever the status of one group has been upgraded relative to the status of another, there has been some kind of general reaction, generally negative. As experienced by races and among individuals, whenever the tradition of subjugation is threatened, the threat of violent abuse looms malevolently.

The cause of the emancipation of women is not receiving overwhelming approbation from the men of good conscience who otherwise might lend a hand to a lady in distress. Nationwide, men are generally proving less than graceful in their professional relations with female peers. And here at the University, relatively few men are currently enrolled in women's studies courses. But then, it's not necessarily an easy street, though departmental response may be warm. The graphically powerful clenched fist logo of the department carries more messges than just the long-awaited blossoming of an emerging gender.

It may be difficult for men to realize that the progress of men depends upon the full emancipation of women and their equal participation in world affairs. One religion that teaches the equality of women and men says that, like two wings of one bird, both must be equally strong. And, it may be difficult for women to call men to join them in their struggle for freedom; there are attitudes on both sides. But until the cause of women becomes the cause of mankind, the rising tide of reactionary violence against women will continue, shamefully unchallenged by a moribund social conscience.

Need more than movies

Regarding the recent showing of three films about the Nazi Holocaust in the Cape Cod Lounge, the way the movies were presented was insensitive to all feeling people. By having no discussions organized, I am sure people left the room with mixed emotions. Maybe next year during Holocaust Remembrance Week there will be more than just films to show.

Daniel Weinberg

Leave the walls alone

I am writing to express my disgust at the amount of mindless graffiti found on the walls of this "institution of higher education." I may not be the most intelligent student here, but I do have better ways of expressing myself than scawling on bathroom walls.

Honestly, do you feminists and bigots and lesbians and socialists, and etc., think you can help your various causes by extolling your philosophies on walls? I would think you could expend your energies in more civilized and useful ways.

In the two years I have attended UMass, I have not been motivated enough to write this letter, although I've thought about it. The "straw that broke the camel's back" is this charming sentiment, written in indelable ink on a wall: "The revolution may not occur in the bathroom, but it's a good place to start."

Whatever revolution the obviously brillant woman responsible for this statement is fighting for, I wish you and your cause luck. You're going to need it.

Cops shoot back

I have been at UMass for almost six semesters now, and have never wanted for entertainment during the almost 600 Dining Commons lunches that I have absorbed. The primary source of my amusement, indignation, anger, and sympathy has been the editorial page of the Collegian.

I have been told, by various writers, that I have a "right" to a college education (at whose expense?...), that I should feel free to shoot police officers (???), that the Central Intelligence Agency is watching every move I make (who cares?), that the United States should disarm itself and disband the military (and pray for peace...), and, recurrently, that guns, particularly handguns, are inherently evil and that no private citizen should own one.

These, and other pieces of mental diarrhea long ago drove me to the conclusion that either UMass does exist in an alternate reality, or that 75 percent of the letter writers are on some BAD speed!

Well, folks, the real world is knocking on your door.

The taxpayers (remember them?) are not willing to give you a free education.

Cops shoot back.

The CIA just called to cancel next week's surveillance; it seems the Soviets are moving troops near Poland, India is thinking about the Bomb, and Israel and Syria are at it again.

The U.S.S.R. continues to support the proletariat and keep the world safe for the working class by slaughtering those capitalistic warmongering Afghanis, who are decadent enough to fight, and die, for something called freedom.

Finally, John Miller, a Medford resident, a pharmacist employed in Malden, and a law-abiding private citizen holding a license to carry firearms, killed someone on the morning of April 30th. Mr. Miller used his .38 caliber revolver against an individual who had by his attempted armed robbery, demonstrated an absolute contempt for individual rights and the laws of this Commonwealth. I applaud not only Mr. Miller's good aim, but also his firm grasp of morality, his raw courage, and his desire to save the state a trial.

Yes, there is a real world out there. You must either deal with it or die in it; there is no middle ground.

Parts of it are indescribably beautiful: fall foliage under a parachute; Half Dome at sunrise; San Francisco anytime; Cape Cod in the spring; the list is almost endless.

You must never forget, though, that you are surrounded by over four billion of the most potentially dangerous creatures known, and there are only two things protecting you — your individual rights, and your ability to uphold them.

A poor decision

The UMass administration made a poor decision two weeks ago when they decided to cut loose one of the most prominent instructors I have ever had the pleasure and honor of learning from. Jeffrey A. Lind, of the General Business and Finance Department, related to an angry group of B.A. majors that he would not be back teaching at the University for the upcoming fall semester.

Personally, I have learned more from this instructor than any I have encountered in my four semesters at UMass. This man adds more craftsmanship and enthusiasm to his discussions than any of my previous professors have ever. Understandably, I cannot comprehend the reasons for this mistake on the part of the administration, cutting one of the finest teachers on campus. One thing I am sure of, however, is that the administration's decision is not a loss to Jeff Lind himself, but a loss that the students and administration will share accordingly.

Ducking the public

Mr. Phan Anh, a ranking official of the communist government of Viet Nam, will be speaking at Hampshire College, this Friday, May 7. Prof. James Natlack of Hampshire College indicated the talk was private, and that there was no way interested persons would be able to hear Mr. Anh.

Why doesn't Mr. Anh want to present himself in public? Is he going to deny the cruelty, or the existence, of the re-education camps in which many of our friends and relatives are now being incarcerated? Will he try to justify the invasion of Cambodia? Or is he afraid he will be asked to tell the truth?

Anderson affirms his mediocrity

John Anderson 2 (Warner Bros. Records)

It's generally an accepted fact that not every artist coming out with a new record today can be wildly inventive, super talented, or even poetically lyrical; and even if every songwriter could be another Cole Porter we would soon become bored just by the overabundance of riches. What the industry really needs to keep itself going, and to have a base in which to compare great new talents with, is a strong foundation of low level and mediocre records.

John Anderson 2 fits into this category very nicely. Not only does he fail to fill the category of "the dynamic new country and western superstar" that the press sheets claim him to be, as a musician he doesn't even reach the sophistication of Tennessee Ernie Ford.

Anderson (no relation to that Republican-retread that tried to mess with Jimmy Carter last year), has a knack for consistently sounding as if he is on the brink of dozing off. Obviously, with titles like "I'm Just an Old Chunk of Coal (But I'm Gonna be a Diamond Someday)," "I've Almost Jack Daniels Drowned," "Chicken Truck," and "You've Got the Longest Leaving Act in Town" there isn't much to stay awake for. If Anderson can't put any more life into his material than this, he might just as well crawl back into his haystack.

John Anderson

Although I might not be the biggest expert on the latest developments in country and western music, I do know that if one is to be more than marginally successful as a c & w singer, he must either be super smooth like Marty Robbins, have a strong stage personality like Willie Nelson, or else be able to rely on talent like the superb Charlie Rich. Anderson is not smooth, seems to have no personality that is distinguishable from thousands of others in his category, and if his latest album is any indication, he doesn't come off as being exceptionally talented.

However, not being your average "Urban Cowpoke" I might not be the best judge of Mr. Anderson's capabilities. After all, he has gotten some rave reviews from papers like "The Nashville Gazette," "The Pittsburgh Press," and even the highly respected Robert Christgau of "The Village Voice." So maybe there might be something to this type of music after all (Anderson did write a decent song for Mel Tillis a few years ago — "What Did I Promise Her Last Night"). I guess if you're the type of person who likes your music to bring you back to the farm amid haystacks, saw dust and cow dung, then John Anderson 2 might be just the album you have been waiting for.

'Healing' opens a wound in Rundgren's repetoire

Todd Rundgren
Healing (Bearsville)

Todd Rundgren has been known and respected for his explorations into different styles and sounds. His open mind and creative flare have led to a number of really great recordings. His latest, Healing, however, doesn't quite make the grade everyone, or at least I, would expect.

The concept of the album is excellent and the lyrical content is worthy of attention, but the music is not nearly as significant. Excepting a few cuts, this album is monotonous and borderlines on excessive. The 45 rpm single included in the package is far superior to the rest of the material. "Time Heals" is a good, up-beat pop number with a lot of potential, and is closer to what I had expected from the album.

Side one encompasses "Healing" (Parts I, II, and III). I have yetto be able to listen to it all the way through without becoming distracted or put to sleep. Part III is quite strong, but is buried beneath the first two parts. The album would have been a lot more tolerable with the deletion of the first two parts and the addition of the two cuts from the inserted single.

The only other item worth mentioning is "Golden Goose," a flaky tune with creative synthesizer displays, which in its corniness proves a gem compared to the overbearing effect of the rest of the album.

Poor Todd must have had a deadline facing him in regards to his contractual obligations.

—Dave Nelson

FISCAL YEAR 1982 REQUEST

A standstill budget for the Amherst Campus (current operating budget plus inflationary costs) amounts to $89,709,057. The Governor's Budget recommends $86, 196, 120 which is less than this current year.

Unless the Amherst Campus receives the standstill budget:

- $2 million shortfall in personnel means loss of 200 employees & reduction in academic offerings.
- no inflationary funding results in shortages of lab and teaching supplies, library books, maintenance.
- no equipment funds results in obsolete and worn-out lab & technical equipment needed for instruction & maintenance.

Budget Cuts May Mean Your Job or Your Education

Help AFSCME Local 1776 secure $89.7 million UMass Budget for Fiscal 1982

How - by writing or calling your State Representative and Senator and the Senate Ways and Means members.

Where - at the Phone Bank, 2nd floor of Mem Hall

May 11 - 18 10 am - 12 noon 1 pm - 3 pm

AFSCME recognizes the present need for austerity and proposes to "find" 3.6 million for UMass by ending the extra expenses in the contracting out of government jobs and services and by cutting the fat - elimination of self replicating administrative/managerial positions.

'Devo Live' boosts output

Devo
Devo Live (Warner Bros.)

Booji Boy, Devo's official mascot, figured the new Devo Live album would be good music to work to. He brought it to the plant one day, and he had the coporate disc jokey play it over the corporate piped-in muzak system. Much to everyone's surprise, corporate output that day increased by 84.9 percent.

He decided to investigate this phenomenon. Here are some sample comments Booji heard while carousing around The Plant:

(Work Area 9) "Good music to punch press those widgets to, eh Chauncey?"

"Sounds like the debauch-o-matic in Work Area 17, Edgar."

(Corporate Secretarial-Pool Room) "Why Melba, there's that song your daughter likes."

"Yes. (Sighs) I just don't know about kids these days. Why just last week I saw her hopping up and down in that yellow radiation suit of hers singing 'Whip it! Into shape! Shape it up!'"

"Well at least it's good exercise."

Meanwhile at home, Melba's son Irving and his friends are listening to Devo Live.

"Hey Irv! The guitars sure are raunchier than on Freedom of Choice. And there's more energy here than on their studio albums. I thought that since there are only five guys in the band they'd have to cut out a lot of the extra noises. But most of them are still here."

"I wish they would have put something from "Are We Not Men?" on it. But these songs are all good to de-evolve to."

"Gee whiz. And it only costs about $4.50."

So if you want to work more efficiently, listen to Booji Boy. If you like Devo, you'll like Devo Live.

"I thought Bud was better, but I've been proved wrong. I chose Schlitz."

One taste of Schlitz can change a lot of minds. Recently, hundreds of loyal Budweiser and Miller drinkers tasted their beer and Schlitz side by side.

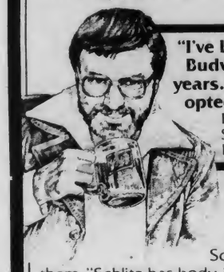
Before the taste tests, all the participants signed affidavits swearing they were loyal Budweiser or Miller drinkers. But following the tests, lots of those tasters were surprised. Because after tasting their favorite beer and Schlitz in unlabeled mugs, many found they preferred Schlitz.



"I've been drinkin' Budweiser for 25 years. But tonight I opted for Schlitz."

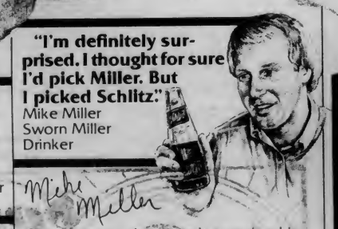
One taste of Schlitz convinced them. "Schlitz has body, it has flavor," said Budweiser drinker James Seager. "It's real quenching and real clean and very drinkable," agreed Miller drinker Mike Manely. Budweiser drinker Robert Davis summed up the feelings of many when he said, "I'll have to stop by and pick up a six-pack of Schlitz!"



"I'm definitely surprised. I thought for sure I'd pick Miller. But I picked Schlitz."

One person who wasn't surprised is Frank Sellinger. "Some people thought it was risky to taste test my Schlitz on national TV. But I was sure lots of people would pick Schlitz over their beers.

"Three years ago I came to Schlitz to make my best. And after 40 years as a master brewer, I know this is it. Taste one glass. You may like my Schlitz better than your beer, too."

Rebates offered for speedy childbirths

Associated Press

BOSTON — Speedy mothers who give birth and leave the hospital within 24 hours are collecting $200 rebates from an insurance program in an experiment to cut maternity costs at a suburban hospital.

The plan is intended to give doctors and women an incentive to reduce costs while still delivering babies in the hospital.

So far, two mothers have participated in the new program at Melrose-Wakefield Hospital in Melrose, a Boston suburb. It is open to women covered by master medical Blue Cross-Blue Shield, which is sponsoring the one-year trial. And if it works here, a spokesman says, Blue Cross will expand it to other hospitals.

"We're trying to develop an alternative whereby we can cut medical costs and yet make it safe for the patient to have a baby," said Dr. Walter G. Leonard, the hospital's chief of obstetrics.

Leonard said there is no chance women will go home too soon simply to get the money, since doctors must agree before they can collect the cash.

The first woman to deliver a baby under the program was Sally Gallant of Saugus, who stayed in the hospital overnight when she delivered her son Patrick on March 4. She will collect a $100 check on Monday, and another $100 will be set aside to pay for her followup care for the next year.

The University of Masschusetts JV lacrosse team chalked up its eighth win of the season yesterday downing the Owls of Westfield State College 7-4 in Westfield. The Chimps are now 8-1 with one contest remaining.

"The defense did really well," JV coach Len Caffrey said. "But overall we didn't play all that well."

On defense, Dave Shilo, Charlie Dwyer and Tom Denormandie and goalie Jeff Chapman held the Owl varsity squad to four goals.

Meanwhile, attackman Paul Goss was tallying two goals and an assist on offense. Team leading scorer Paul Weller added one goal and an assist bringing his season totals to 23 goals and 15 assists.

The Chimps are coming off two wins over two touring Canadian teams, McLaughlin High School and East Dale HS. McLaughlin went down 17-4 in the first game last Saturday and East Dale was shut down totally by the Chimps 17-0.

Greg Figgie had eight goals over the doubleheader Saturday morning.

The Chimps host Dartmouth Saturday, May 16 in their final game of the season.

Gorillas host Syracuse

Besides being a sort of proving ground for each team, since both are coming off tough losses and Massachusetts wishes to show that it can beat a formidable national-level team, the outcome of this contest could be a deciding factor in the determination of post-season playoff berths.

At 7-3, Syracuse cannot realistically afford another loss, especially to a team of Massachusetts' caliber, if it hopes to win a playoff position since only the top eight teams in Divison I, which are determined by a National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) committee qualify for post-season play. Orangemen are currently rated seventh in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association's (USILA) weekly poll. For much of the season they held the third spot in the rating.

With one defeat going into today's game, the Gorillas have just about sealed up a berth in the playoffs, but are still fighting for a spot in the top four, a position which would entitle them to home-field advantage in playoff games.

"It would be nice to get the home field for the playoffs, especially with the crowds we would get," Schmitz said. "Whenever we have a big game, they come out and their support helps us on the field."

Unlike the Gorilla attack, which is comprised of three players who are capable of scoring in bursts of five or six goals, Jim Weller (46), tri-captain Chris Corin (37) and Lee Vosburgh (26), the Syracuse offense is more spread out as five Orangemen have similar scoring statistics. The leading scorer is Greg Tarbell (27 goals, 12 ass.), a junior, and he is joined on the Syracuse strike force by Brad Short (33 pts), a local product, Jeff McKea, a transfer from the U.S. Naval Academy and senior co-captain Tom Donahue (37 pts).

"Tomorrow's game should be a great matchup," Garber said. "You'd have to expect that in a game between two teams with only three losses between them. I'm anxious to get the game off the mark to a good start.

"Our home crowd is a real motivator—a real spark. I'm glad we're playing this game here and I'm sure that Syracuse is not going to be too thrilled when they come down here to play and they see all those people rooting for Massachusetts."

Rockets take game 2, 92-90

BOSTON — Moses Malone, Houston's dominating center, scored 31 points to lead the Rockets to a 92-90 upset of the Boston Celtics Thursday night, tying the National Basketball Association championship series at one victory apiece.

The Celtics held an 82-75 edge with 7:09 to play, but were limited to just eight points the rest of the way as the Rockets rallied to win. Houston outscored Boston 22-8 from the foul line, getting 11 of those free throws from Malone.

The next two games of the best-of-seven playoff final will be played in Houston Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

The victory broke Boston's 14-game winning streak against the Rockets, a string dating back to Dec. 12, 1978.

Despite committing 12 turnovers and being outscored 12-1 from the foul line, the Celtics held a 49-45 halftime advantage on the strength of 62 percent field goal shooting compared to 33 percent by the Rockets.

Billy Paultz scored a pair of baskets and Mike Dunleavy hit a jumper to start the third quarter, giving Houston a 51-49 lead, before Boston responded with 11 straight points. Robert Parish and Chris Ford hit jumpers, Rick Robey scored on a tip-in, Nate Archibald made a three-point play and Robey made a layup for a 60-51 Celtic lead.

But the Rockets refused to fold. They outscored Boston 17- 8 the remainder of the period, Calvin Murphy hitting an 18-foot jumper to tie the score at 68 heading into the fourth quarter.

Mittwomen split to end season

The University of Massachusetts varsity softball team ended its season Wednesday by splitting a twin-bill at Bridgewater State College. The mittwomen finish the season with a 16-8 overall record.

Ace pitcher, Kathy O'Connell (pitching her last game for the UMass varsity) blanked Bridgewater 2-0 in the first game, upping her season record to 9-4. In the nightcap Keren Poirier took the loss as Bridgewater edged UMass by a 2-1 score.

The rules of Rugby are finally explained

Frank Nagle

When I ask fellow students in this great place of academia why they do not attend one of the most rugged and strenuous sporting events this university offers, the answer is the same.

They tell me they don't understand the play of the game, the positions of the players on the field, or other such weird animals known as "rucks," "Mauls," and "scrums." To put it in simpler terms, they do not understand it at all.

The sport they don't understand is Rugby.

But I can sympathize with them because this is my second semester of playing the sport, and I just recently learned what a "knock on" was after a first semester player told me. And that, my friends, is the first lesson in learning the art of rugby. It is a sport that cannot be quickly and easily learned.

A person needs to give himself or herself a few weeks of watching the game to even begin to understand it. But don't let a small little obstacle like that get in the way of you learning this still little known sport, because then only the people who play it will be the ones enlightened to rugby. A rugby player may be strong and physical, but he is still a fragile individual who needs the attention and affection of a loyal following.

This madness, sometimes refered to as rugby, does have a method to it. It just takes a little patience and alot of explaining from a drunken player who has just finished his game. But there are other aspects to the sport that make it unique in this world of a million sports.

One aspect that separates rugby from other sports is the cohesiveness of the players, as a team and as a general group. From the time I was a youngster playing Little League baseball or Pee Wee hockey, up until high school sports, I was taught that the man on the other team was my enemy. It was my duty to dislike him and if possible, inflict pain on him. But the first thing about rugby that impressed me was the attitude of the players and coaches.

Rugby is not a war in which winning is the only objective, it is a game and it is treated as one. When a game is over the players give a cheer for their opponents and then bend elbows with them. In fact, it is the unwritten duty of the home team to supply the spirits for the long awaited third half.

Doc Laurence, team advisor, recalls his very first game, saying it was a totally different experience from other sports he had played.

"I had just finished my first rugby game and I was feeling really down because the prop I played against that day totally dominated me. At the party later that day, my opponent noticed how I was feeling and started to sing a rugby song for me. Within minutes I had forgotten all about my problems."

These athletes who play rugby are a tight knit group. Some might consider it rather odd that they abuse their bodies during and after a game, but there is nothing like the feeling of satisfaction of knowing you can overcome the pain and enduring minutes of a game.

It lets you feel that nothing is that hard in life if you work to overcome it. And when a group shares this common feeling they naturally want to celebrate.

The players gather after a game to drink, sing and laugh together. Sometimes they may get out of hand, but for the most they are a fun loving gang. When an incident occurs, the group as a whole is considered to be a roving pack of animals and this is unfair.

Of the 14 captains that the UMass R.F.C. has had over the last 12 years, only four have not graduated with either a Ph.D or Doctor of Medicine degree.

Despite that fact that it is a difficult game to understand, it can be a worthwhile experience to watch a rugby match. Any species of man known as a rugby player. Just don't show up in a mime costume.

Gorillas explode in second half

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Ray Cozzi had an assignment: stick with Greg Tarbell. If Tarbell played midfield, Cozzi was a middie. If Tarbell was on attack, Cozzi was on defense. If Tarbell got a drink of water, Cozzi got a drink of water.

And UMass' Ray Cozzi stuck with Greg Tarbell, Syracuse University's premier scorer so well that Tarbell was held to one goal on the afternoon, and the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team had a tremendous third and fourth quarter en route to its 12-8 win over the Orange Friday in front of 8,000 fans at Boyden Field.

Cozzi, who has played defense and midfield for UMass, was assigned to cover Tarbell, who plays attack and midfield, like hair on a gorilla. Tarbell, known for his 110 mile-an-hour shot on goal, was double-teamed as soon as he got the ball.

"He scored the first goal but after that he didn't have the ball for the rest of the game," Cozzi said. "We just denied him the ball. He's like a typical Syracuse player—big stickwork."

"We got off to our usual bad start," said UMass head coach Dick Garber of Tarbell's 15 seconds into the game. "After that he (Tarbell) didn't get many shots. Ray did a great job on him."

Tarbell scored the first goal unassisted, then assisted on a goal midway through the second quarter and was shut off for the rest of the game.

The Massachusetts defense and defensive midfield allowed just two goals in the entire second half.

"We worked on double teaming them but a while before the game I decided we wouldn't. I told our defensemen that we were going to play it straight. I felt they could stop Syracuse one-on-one," Garber said.

The Orange attack, with its five scoring threats, couldn't last against a tight Mass defense that held them to 26 shots (UMass had 49 shots).

UMass senior tri-captain Paul Kinnane held Syracuse's second leading point scorer Brad Short to no goals and no assists.

Reagan's proposed budget would devastate FAC

By LORI MULVIHILL
Collegian Correspondent

President Ronald Reagan's proposed budget cut of 50 percent for the National Endowment of the Arts will leave the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center with a serious lack of funds for fiscal year 1982, said FAC Director of Programming Judy Allen.

"If the budget is approved we will all feel the impact. Fewer people will be touched by the arts. Fewer artists will get to fulfill their dreams. And this is a sad commentary on where we're going as a society," Allen said.

The Reagan administration has proposed an $88 million budget for the NEA, while the Carter administration had considered proposals of $175 million for fiscal year 1982.

Twenty percent of the NEA budget is allocated to the states and regions, with each state and territory to receive a minimum of $200,000.

The Fine Arts Center receives funding from regional agencies for about 30 percent of any programmed event. The NEA funds the State Arts Council which funds the Regional agencies, who in turn fund the FAC.

Each UMass student pays an annual Fine Arts Center fee of $12, which goes to the University Fine Arts Council and is distributed to the Fine Arts Center and other entertainment and arts programs on campus.

"If the budget is approved we will all feel the impact. Fewer people will be touched by the arts. Fewer artists will get to fulfill their dreams. And this is a sad commentary on where we're going as a society."
—Judy Allen

"Reagan believes that the private sector will pick up funds, but this is not true," said Allen, "the NEA is what generates more donations because the money from the NEA must be matched by private funding."

"It is easier to ask the private sector to subsidize an event than it is to ask them for total funding, they're much more willing to match part of the costs," Allen stated.

Allen explained that in some way, directly or indirectly, funds have come to subsidize the arts.

"But," she said, "if you have a $50,000 dance event and you're only directly subsidized by 5 percent, it's not worth doing." The NEA also indirectly subsidizes costs of operas, orchestras, technical assistants, new compositions, and choreography. But if the budget is cut, Allen stated, "the presenters (like the FAC) pay these extra costs, and inevitably ticket prices go up and people won't be able to afford to go see the arts."

Allen has organized an all out campaign to inform constituents of the pending situation.

Allen said that she realizes "the budget must be trimmed, but the arts are not terribly funded, they're struggling and to cut them by a whopping 50 percent will make them struggle even more."

"The fine arts need a basic underlying subsidy, and then if money is made from popular events, they can take risks and allow new artists to bloom," she said.

"Allen strongly believe the arts are an integral part of education on a college campus. "It would be strange to have no gallery, or a limited gallery. Sort of like a library with no books," she said.

Speaker claims pornography celebrates women's death

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

"Mother's Day is a celebration of women's life and pornography is a celebration of women's death," said Jean Ester to a pensive crowd of approximately 60 students Friday by the Campus Center Pond during The Feminist Case Against Pornography speak-out.

Although the main focus of the speak-out was pornography and the objectification of women by the media, speakers addressed the related subjects of child abuse, freedom of expression, anorexia nervosa and rape on campus.

"With centuries of women's self hatred comes centuries of rage," said Jean Ester, a Northampton based community organizer in the opening remarks.

"Child abuse, rape and pornography are easy to seperate from the reality of our lives," speaker Holly Wheller of the Incest Consultation network said.

Ellen LaFleche, the author of the book "Anorexia Nervosa," spoke about the ways in which pornography influences a woman's image of her body. LaFleche said women with anorexia nervosa are plagued by feelings of loathing about their bodies. In a recent study at UMass, when pictures of slim scantly clad women were held up outside a dining commons, twice as many women as usual refused dinner that evening, she said.

She cited a death rate of 15 percent for anorexia which is very high for a psychological affliction. She also discussed another syndrome called bullamorexia, in which the victim goes through stages of gorging and starving herself.

Myra Hindus, the coordinator of Violence Against Women at the Everywomen's Center, spoke about rape on campus. She said she knows of a number of rapes which were reported to the police, but never received attention on campus. She also said that many more rapes are reported to the Center but never brought to the attention of the police.

Mitterrand wins, d'Estaing warns

Associated Press

PARIS — Socialist Francois Mitterrand, who has vowed sweeping economic changes, defeated President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in yesterday's presidential election, bringing leftists to power in France for the first time in 23 years.

Giscard d'Estaing conceded defeat with another warning of the "impact and consequences" of the voters' choice, while Mitterrand and his Socialist and Communist backers rejoiced. Thousands of people waving red flags poured into Paris' Place de la Bastille, the rallying point for leftists. Major thoroughfares were jammed.

"What's the first thing your're going to do tomorrow?" a well-wisher asked Mitterrand, standing calmly in a crowd exploding with emotion in a hotel room in the town of Chateau Chinon, his parliamentary constituency.

Mitterrand paused for a moment. "Get out of bed," he said. "It's the first thing I do every morning."

The 64-year-old Mitterrand was making his third bid for the Elysee Palace and his second consecutive race against Giscard d'Estaing, 55. In 1974, Giscard d'Estaing defeated Mitterrand by 420,000 votes—a 1.6 percent margin. Most analysts had expected yesterday's contest to be equally close.

With 28.6 million votes counted out of an expected 30 million cast, Mitterrand had 14.5 million, or 52.2 percent, and Giscard d'Estaing had 13.3 million, or 47.7 percent.

An announcement from the Interior Ministry made the result official in favor of Mitterrand, who will begin serving a seven-year term at the end of May, although the exact date of his inauguration is still a matter of dispute.

US envoy meets Syrian president

Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib conferred here yesterday with President Hafez Assad on the Lebanese missile crisis but there was no indication the four hours of talks produced any progress toward defusing tensions over a possible Syrian-Israeli military confrontation.

Habib told reporters he and Assad had a "full exchange of views," but the veteran diplomatic trouble-shooter refused to comment further. He said he will head to Israel Monday.

The government newspaper on Sunday reiterated earlier expressed Syrian intransigence over Israeli demands that it remove the Soviet-made anti-aircraft missiles deployed in Lebanon's eastern Bekaa Velley April 28.

"The flagrant United States partiality toward Israel raises doubts about the efficacy of Habib's mission," said a front-page headline in Tishrin.

In Beirut, meanwhile, police said 22 people were killed and 98 wounded in artillery and rocket exchanges Saturday night between Syrian troops and Lebanese Christians. Units of the Lebanese army were also involved in the shelling.

El Salvador's Archbishop comments on officers arrest

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The arrests of six Salvadoran security officers as suspects in the murders of four American missionaries last year is a step toward proving there is justice in this violence-engulfed nation, acting Roman Catholic Archbishop Arturo Rivera y Dama said yesterday.

The arrests were announced Saturday, five months after three Roman Catholic nuns and a lay Catholic social worker were found shot to death execution-style on a lonely dirt road south of the capital.

In Washington, the State Department issued a statement responding to the arrests announcement, saying they show "the firm determination of the government of El Salvador to act against wanton violence, whatever its source." Specifics on the arrests have not been disclosed in Washington, however.

Rivera y Damas said: "I think it starts this way. Everything has a beginning and moves forward."

He said he was not notified of the arrests by the military or by the government. "I only heard it on Voice of America," he said in a brief interview after his Sunday homily.

The acting archbishop said he did not fault the U.S.-backed junta for not notifying the church. He had been critical of the government in the past for an apparent lack of progress in solving the murders.

Gov. King's auto insurance bill headed for crash in House

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King's bid to allow automobile insurance companies to set their own rates is in serious trouble, according to one of its chief critics.

The complex proposal will, among other changes, bring back the competitive rating system that was tried in 1977 and quickly aborted because of its impact on many urban drivers. Except for the start of that year, the state insurance commissioner sets rates and the rating territories.

Rep. William F. Galvin, D-Boston, said the pending measure is a product of the insurance industry which, he said, is motivated "solely by profit." Galvin serves on the Legislature's Insurance Committee which has until next month to act on the bill.

"I'm not sure the governor will even get a majority on the committee for this bill," Galvin said. He added, however, the industry plans a massive lobbying campaign to win passage at this session.

Pontiac 10 granted acquittal in prison riot murder trial

CHICAGO — After an eight-month, $2.7 million trial, a jury has quickly acquitted 10 prison inmates of murder and all other charges stemming from a bloody riot in which three guards were killed.

Prosecutors say the verdict could mean that no one will ever be convicted for the deaths.

"God help us ... especially corrections officers,"said special prosecutor Thomas Breen.

Pandemonium erupted in Circuit Court Saturday night after Sangamon County Judge Benjamin Miller announced, "All parties innocent on all counts." Wild cheering, applause and shouts of joy erupted from nearly 100 relatives and friends of the defendants in the spectator section, which was separated from the courtroom by a bulletproof partition.

"Right on," shouted the defendants.

The July 22, 1978, riot at the Pontiac Correctional Center, 90 miles from Chicago, claimed the lives of guards Stanley Cole, William Thomas and Robert Conkleand caused an estimated $4 million in property damage.Two guards were seriously injured.

Gov. King adds ante on aid, while House hustles budget

BOSTON — Apparently hoping to get it through the chamber by Memorial Day weekend, the House Ways and Means Committee is expected to report its version of the governor's $6.39 billion budget to the floor this week.

At the same time, Gov. Edward J. King plans to recommend amendments proposing across-the-board cuts in his original budget proposal to produce up to $200 million in new local aid.

King originally proposed only $37.5 million in new aid last January. The pending recommendations appear to represent a philosophical change from his earlier hard line position on the state's role in helping communities cope with Proposition 2½.

Now, according to aides, King believes most communities have made what cuts they can to comply with Proposition 2½ tax limits, and he is prepared to recommend additional assistance.

$250,000 suit filed against UMass officials by LSO attorney

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

A Legal Services Office Attorney has filed a $250,000 suit against two University of Massachusetts officials claiming they "intentionally and maliciously" obstructed his appointment to a professional position.

In the suit, filed May 6 in U.S. District Court in Springfield, LSO attorney Michael Pill and his wife Carol Holzberg claim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson and his assistant Larry Benedict repeatedly interfered with Pill's appointment because he has investigated alleged corrupt and negligent practices in the UMass administration.

Madson and Benedict blocked his appointment to intimidate Pill and to interfere with LSO's efforts to investigate and bring suit against the University on behalf of students, it states.

The suit claims Pill was only allowed to work as an "03," or temporary employee with hourly pay and therefore received no medical insurance, paid holidays, vacation, personal leave or sick days.

The suit states that Pill's wife went through a pregnancy without medical insurance and the couple paid $1500 out of their own funds. The suit also states Pill was denied a $1166 pay increase because he was classified as a temporary employee.

Pill was hired as an LSO attorney September 4, 1979 and was not granted a professional appointment until November 9, 1980.

Pill represented 40 UMass students who sued the University over the construction of the mini-store in the Student Union Lobby.

Pill was originally approved for a professional position by acting Student Activities Director O.C. Bobby Daniels in September 1979 but Madson and Benedict denied the appointment because they said Pill was not a member of the Massachusetts Bar, the suit states.

The suit states the qualification of Bar admission was not included in Pill's job description or in the job search process until he had already been hired.

Because other attorneys at LSO were hired before they were admitted to the Bar, "The addition of the alleged prerequisite of Massachusetts Bar membership was intended for the sole purpose of preventing the appointment of Plaintiff Michael Pill to a professional position," the suit states.

"As a direct result of the intentional and malicious harassment by the defendants, Michael Pill and his wife have suffered substantial anxiety and emotional distress," the suit states.

Pill and his wife are seeking a total of $250,000 from Madson and Benedict, in compensatory and punitive damages as well as attorney's fees and court costs.

Cancer claims life of zoology prof.; services will be held Wednesday

By KEVIN McGUIRE
Collegian Staff

Herbert E. Potswald, the well-liked and greatly-admired associate professor of zoology at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, died Saturday of lung cancer at Bay State Hospital in Springfield.

Potswald, 43, had been teaching and conducting research at UMass since 1966. It was "his first job," according to his wife, Marilyn, of 221 Pond View Drive, Amherst.

Associate Professor of zoology Gordon Wyse, who worked with Potswald, said, "He was a very good, strong, dedicated teacher, a strong researcher and an outstanding colleague. He was just a scrupulously fair and absolutely honest man."

"When something was bothering me and I wanted a second opinion on it, I'd usually go to Herb first," said Wyse.

Born July 23, 1937, in Duluth, Minnesota, Potswald attended a local high school on scholarship, and received his Bachelor of Science in biology from the University of Minnesota in 1959. He received his doctorate in zoology from the University of Washington in Seattle, and did post-doctoral work at that university's medical school before coming to UMass.

Potswald gave his last zoology lecture on Friday May 1. He had experienced great difficulty breathing the week before, but only went to Northampton's Cooley Dickinson Hospital reluctantly, said Mrs. Potswald.

"He didn't want to ruin the weekend for Thomas (their oldest son's birthday was that day). What he really wanted to do was to finish the semester. He said there were quite a few seniors in his class who needed the credits to graduate," she added.

After entering the Cooley Dickinson Hospital, Potswald was transferred to Bay State Hospital in Springfield the next day, May 2. He died the following Saturday.

"I found him to be a wonderful teacher who was very concerned with his students. He made it a point to be very clear and concise in his lectures, and he had a good sense of humor," said zoology graduate student John R. Storilla.

"The whole zoology department is going to be depressed about this. I don't know how he's going to be replaced," Storilla said. "We all loved him," he added.

Potswald taught courses in histology (the study of tissues) and invertebrate zoology. He conducted research in reproductive biology, invertebrate development and tissue regeneration.

He was a member of the American Society of Zoologists, the Western Society of Naturalists, the American Association for the Advancement of Science and Sigma Xi, an honorary science society.

Potswald leaves his wife and their two sons, Thomas, 18, and Christopher, 15. He also leaves his father, Herbert, and his sister, Diana Rindal, in Deluth.

A memorial service will be held at the Grace Church on Boltwood Ave., Amherst, on Wednesday at 2:00 p.m.

In a unique Mother's Day celebration about 300 people participated in a "Walk For Our Lives" to protest the planned increase in military spending and the decrease in federal support of community and human services.

A member of the American Friends Service Committee Frances Crowe (pictured above), spoke to the march participants on moves European governments are making towards disarmerment in her speech titled "We are not alone: European calls for peace."

The local walk sponsored by Women for Survival and the American Friends Service Committe, was in support of the national Mother's Day march to the White House calling for a halt in the arms race.

Women's caucus sexual harrassment discusses tenure,

By MONICA CRONIN
and SIOBHAN C. BREEN

The Women's Caucus of the Faculty Senate met Friday to discuss the problems women at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst have getting tenure and the non-existance of a grievance procedure for sexual harrassment.

Deputy Provost Robert Sleigh addressed the caucus as to why he believes women have been having difficulty fulfilling the university's tenure requirements. "Women faculty members are being misdirected," Sleigh said, "nontenured women are molded into service roles."

Tenure requirements include research, service and teaching. The junior faculty women are lacking in research because of the emphasis on service, he said.

Ombudsman Janet Rifkin spoke on the illusiveness of the definition of sexual harrassment and recent government regulations attempting to define it. Since September there have been approximately 15 complaints of sexual harrassment to her office, about 14 of which were student against faculty, she said.

The meeting was attended by 43 women and 3 men. "It was a very good turnout for a Friday afternoon. There was a lot of vibrant discussion and people were really concerned," said Margo Culley, Acting Director of the Women's Studies Department.

★ Pornography

The most moving moments of the speak-out came, when speaker Kaymarion Raymond gave personal testimony on incest and statutory rape.

Professor Kathy Barry, of the UMass Women's Studies department, warned women not to be naive and assume that men will support them. "Right and left (wing groups) would squeeze feminism out of the picture if they could," she said.

Elizabeth Dworan from the organization, Women Against Violence in Pornography and the Media, said they will continue to work on grass roots activism, organizing local residents to protest pornography and work toward legislative action. Dworan also said it is important to stress how pornography is partially a reflection of past standards and "a backlash against the women's movement."

Bonnie McKee, a WAVPM organizer, said they hope to work with local merchants in the future, making them aware of their objections to the selling of pornography. She said the speak-out was geared in such a way that students could come and go between classes.

The overall atmosphere of the speak-out was reflected by Kathy Barry, who said when speaking of the subject of pornography, "To say the least it is a demoralizing subject."

Newslines...

State of society's outcasts will be addressed

Dr. Benjamin Ricci of the Exercise Science Department will speak on the topic, "The Way We Treat the Outcast in Massachusetts."

Ricci is a nationally recognized successful advocate for the developmentally disabled. He is currently chairman of the Board of Directors of the Belchertown State School Friends. He has also received numerous commendations from the state legislature and other organizations in the field of mental health for his advocacy for the disenfranchised over the last 10 years. Ricci is noted for filing a class action suit on behalf of the residents of Belchertown State School.

The talk, sponsored by the Newman Center, is at 7:30 p.m. at the center. Admission is free.

Thefts, accidents reported this weekend

A television, jewelry and a calculator with a combined value of $350 were reported stolen at 11 a.m. yesterday, University of Massachusetts police reported. They said the fourth floor room in Dickinson residence hall in the Orchard Hill Residential Area was apparently entered through an open window.

In another incident, a television was reported stolen at 5 p.m. Saturday from the basement of Dwight residence hall in the Northeast Residential Area, police said.

Police also reported an injury after a man jumped on and fell off the hood of a friend's car while it was travelling on Curry-Hicks Road. He was taken to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital with minor injuries, police said. The incident was reported at 4 p.m. Friday, police said.

In another incident, three panes of glass were reported broken at New Africa House at 12:22 a.m. Saturday, police said. There are no suspects in the incident they said.

Risk taking a necessity for business women in the 80's

Miriam Williford, associate provost for Continuing Education speaks about women "making it in business" at a conference in Springfield Saturday.

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Women in business today face the challenge of becoming risk taker's. "We as women don't like to take risks, we were brought up not to take risks—that's the Cinderella Syndrome, it is something we must deal with individually," said Miriam Williford, assoicate provost for Continuing Education at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

"We must declare our independence and this doesn't mean there is no need for love, family and friends—it means we can contribute equally," Williford said. There is a tremendous fear of failure for a woman in business, but there is also a fear, that we rarely admit, of achieving success, she said.

Williford's comments were part of the "Business in the 80's: A Conference for Women" held in Springfield on Saturday. The conference was sponsored by The Association of Graduate Women, the Continuing Education Department at UMass, the Small Business Administration, the CED and the Women's Educational Equity Program both of UMass. The conference was held to address the technical, social and psychological aspects of the business world, and to provide a forum for women to develop networks of support.

"According to a recent poll, the dominant feeling is that it is best and healthiest for women to work, even if the family doesn't need the money," said Williford. Women often use their family as a reason not to take risks, this is especially true of the most serious risk: that of changing jobs.

The next greatest problem most women in business have is that they tend to personalize failures. Women seem to have difficulty dealing with problems objectively, she said. Women need to recognize it is often the mechanism or procedure they are dealing with which fails and not the individuals. Women need to deal with things more maturely, more objectively, Williford said.

Women in business need to recognize their capabilities, we must look inside ourselves and realize that we have a lot to offer, she said. "We're good or we wouldn't be where we are, when one woman succeeds it helps all women—when a woman fails, we all suffer a bit," she said.

More than 300 mothers came to the eighth annual Mother's Day weekend, the May 11, 1950 issue of the Massachusetts Collegian reported.

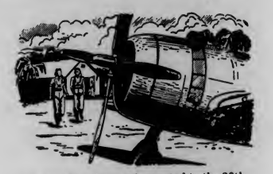
Entertainment for the visiting mothers included a Naiads' water ballet with dance routines, a tennis victory over Clark University, a concert and a French "soiree" at Memorial Hall.

Plans for a UMass Mardi Gras were announced that day. A large ferris wheel was to be set up at the entrance of the Curry-Hicks Cage. Other events included a car raffle, stage shows and booths sponsored by the Greeks. Some of these booths were Penny Pitch, Dart Game, Love Tunnel, Tossing the Garter, and Dump the Bucket. Hot dogs, drinks and ice cream were also sold.

"Seventy-seven well fitted cows and heifers paraded before more than 300 Mother's Day guests on the University of Massachusetts campus Saturday afternoon, as another Mother's Day weekend event sponsored by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture seniors," the paper reported. The seniors were competing for the premier showmanship award and special breed prizes such as a rose wreath.

An advertisement proclaimed "Study in Europe" round trip flights to Europe, full tuition, room and board, and rail transportation in Europe cost less than $500 at the University of Bordeaux and the Oxford Summer Institute and $590 at the University of Heidelberg.

The Amherst theatre featured "The Yearling" with Gregory Peck and "The Stratton Story" with James Stewart.



He won his wings and reported to the 36th Fighter Group in Puerto Rico. The group soon returned to the States, giving Adams a chance to marry his college sweetheart.

This comic was part of a U.S. Air Force advertisement the Collegian carried on May 11, 1940.

The mediocre majority fights reactionaries.

The Knew More News. Students Against Drafting. Global Guerillas for God. Women United Against Liberace. A mere bubble in the great burp of Students Protesting Around Together or SPAT as it is often called. While there can be no doubt to the genuine beliefs and sincerity of the adherents to these causes, the Girl Scouts are a lot more effective, and they're cuter.

Now, there's nothing really wrong with these organizations, but the loudmouthed fanaticism that so often afflicts their disciples often makes me feel like a den mother with a group of possessed Brownies. While some stranger may believe that Liberace should be decorated with all his jewelry and tossed into the Pacific Ocean, there's no logical reason why I should be subjected to a five minute harangue on how many Indian children could be fed for two weeks on the resale value of just one of his pinky rings. There seems to be no proper way to react to these people either. When you ignore these sidewalk preachers you're branded for life as someone who doesn't care about starving children. On the other hand, if you stop to talk with one of these reactionaries, one of two things happens. First, if you openly disagree with them, you're considered an ignorant fool who obviously has a cruddy Karma. Or, if you show the slightest interest in what they're saying (or still worse, if it makes sense to you), you're cajoled and persuaded to join their organization because they're looking for young impressionables just like you.

SPAT organizations do not just keep to themselves nor desist from harassing innocent bystanders. More often than not, they're organizing protest rallies which are designed to show the effectiveness of their new bull horn, or they're spatting with other SPATS. What could be worse than SPATS spatting? The near destruction of the Campus Center which resulted when representatives of Nuke the Kooks and Guns for Huns collided whould be ample warning that all possible effort should be made to keep these reactionaries away from each other.

This could be done in a number of ways. Current suggestions include having alternate "left" and "right" days. Proponents suggest this would help avoid the conflicts which occur when Pets for Bets and the ASPCA tables are placed next to each other at the Campus Center Concourse. Another suggestion entails giving outdoor rally permits only when there's rain forecast. Voices have been heard claiming that only groups with proper etiquette and attire should be allowed.

Vocal advocates of this position believe "clothes make the man (or woman)" and that the world would be a much better place if everyone had Robert's Rules of Order committed to memory. This assumes that it's tough to be really annoying when you're wearing a Brooks Brothers suit and remembering your parlimentary procedure. My personal favorite however, is a rather unique censorship organization.

This organization is comprised of a group of twelve outstanding students selected due to their ordinariness. These are people who consistently take the middle of the road view and would rather hear complaints about the long lines at Whitmore than how Ronald Reagan is really John Wayne is disguise. This organization would be highly effective in censoring all those superfluous and noisy organizations that annoy even the most stoic of us. No longer would we be made to feel guilty for buying Liberace's greatest latest hits album. Yes, we would even have the convenience of a convenience store which wasn't inconvenient to get to because some people decided it would be much more convenient to have a Campus Center that didn't leak. Of course, some people may be worried about the effects of this organization on the rights of free press and free speech. The beauty of this organization is that the only restriction would be that the protesters use enough decorum and self-control to tastefully present their points of view so they would make sense to the mediocre majority.

The time has come when we, the non-Reactionaries, stand up for our rights. We have the right not to be harassed for not participating in any activity we want to. But most importantly, we have the right to our sense of humor. Smile. It'll drive 'em crazy!

A Moonie is what I am

A Moonie is what I am.

I am also a member of the infamous CARP.

I spent three years in different spiritual communities, studying religion, and studying the Unification movement; after I was first introduced to it, before I joined. I took my study to different ministers, priests, the Unification Theological Seminary, and five faithbreakers (deprogammers), which is about five faithbreakers more than most people who feel qualified to judge our movement. This is the experience by which I evaluate the Unification movement and Robert Maschi's column—a column that lists no other source of information beyond a "subcommittee report" to the House, and some "anti-Moon pamphlets and literature."

There is too much in the column to address each lie and perversion of truth. For those interested, I suggest they simply ask me. However, I denounce Maschi's technique.

It is easy to print a rumor, a lie or assumption, and treat it as a truth. The real scholar insists on documentation. Maschi offers none.

It is easy to excite emotional bigotry, as did the Nazis. A real scholar sticks to facts. Maschi does not.

It is easy to repeat second-hand myths. The real scholar has the courage to find out for himself. Maschi does not.

Maschi was right about one thing though. Robert Maschi is a religious bigot.

WMUA airs contribution to prejudicial atmosphere

Wednesday afternoon, while listening to WMUA, I got a rude shock. A disk jockey known as "Phoenix" played a song called "When I Turn Out the Light" which alluded to a Jewish woman with "a bad complexion, big shiny nose, and funny hair." The singer, a male, didn't mind all these "drawbacks" because he could always turn out the light when he was with her.

This song, intended to be funny, actually promotes some of the most offensive stereotypes used to oppress both Jews and women. When I called to protest this song, the DJ told me I had no sense of humor and hung up on me. The program director told a second caller that their DJ could play anything "within the bounds of good taste" and also added that the caller should have a sense of humor. One might ask why people who have been continually degraded and stereotyped should have a sense of humor about it.

Perhaps some people may not understand why this song is so offensive, or may consider a song too trivial to be upsetting. Why is it insulting to Jews and to women?

The message about Jews is quite clear: the singer will condescend to be with this woman in spite of the fact that she is a Jew, with the typical stereotyped Jewish features. Denigrating so-called Jewish physical characteristics in this way is classic anti-Semitism.

What about the message to women? The singer is obviously treating the woman purely as a sex object. He finds her inadequate because she doesn't fit the American standard of beauty—blond har, blue eyes, etc. Very few women in this world fit that image, but it is used to oppress all women. While it is hardly rare to come across attitudes of disrespect for women in popular songs, it is less usual to find them in such a blatant and grossly offensive form.

But why pay attention to a stupid song? Social oppression can only happen in an atmosphere in which people are insensitive to the ways whole groups are treated as less than human. Songs, jokes, TV, movies and advertising can all reinforce false stereotypes in our minds that blind us to the true situations of other people. In airing this song without comment, WMUA is adding its little piece to the atmosphere that says it's all right to share those prejudices.

While it is just barely conceivable to me that someone might be ignorant of the issues of sexism and anti-Semitism, the rude and hostile response I got when I called the station tells me that insensitivity and disrespect, and not simple ignorance, are at issue. At a time when Third World people and women are under direct attack by the establishment, and the extreme right is disseminating vicious anti-Semitic propaganda, I would call their attitude irresponsible, at the very least. They would be wise to make a public apology for promoting these stereotypes.

Bitterness turns to sorrow

I am writing this letter because someone, or some people, have succeeded in angering and upsetting me.

I transferred to UMass because I felt that the student body was diversified. I do all the things a new student typically does. I read the Collegian every day, I look at all the tables in the Campus Center, and I stop to listen to anyone who speaks outside the Student Union. One of the things I admire about this school is that everyone gets an equal chance to say what they want. Last Wednesday, (5/6), this idealist balloon of mine was popped.

It all started before I went to dinner when I noticed that the two posters I had put up in my dorm, announcing an Israeli Independence Day party, that was to be held that evening, had been torn down. I was upset, but I told myself that it wasn't an anti-Semitic act; lots of posters get torn down, mine just weren't strategically placed. I put the event out of my mind. An hour later, I was setting up for the festivities when someone walked in and handed us the banner that had been tied to the Campus Center garage. It had been cut down. This was no accident: someone, or two, or three—the number is insignificant—maliciously impinged on my right as another person and a Jew to express my views. I wasn't only hurt and upset, I was scared. Over and over again I asked myself how, on such a liberal campus, filled with 25,000 minds, could such a thing happen.

This letter is to let the person(s) who did this deliberated act to be aware that after the bitterness passed, I felt sorry for you—sorry that you are so insecure you feel you must destroy the work and rights of others. I am especially sorry that you could not see that your detrimental act had no effect on the 150 people who came to the party, and danced and sang, and celebrated Israel's 33rd birthday.

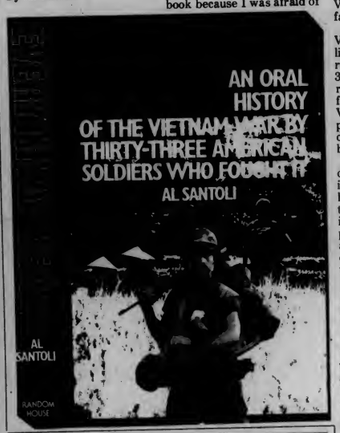
Book is best shot at understanding Vietnam war

Everything We Had

(Random House)
By Al Santoli

By DAVID ROUSSEAU
Collegian Correspondent

I hesitated to read this book because I was afraid of what I might be reminded of. However, objectively speaking, I have to admit that it is one of the most accurate descriptions of the Viet Nam War I've read so far.



To experience what the Viet Nam War was really like, this book is a must to read. Using interviews with 33 veterans whose jobs ranged from common infantryman to nurse while in Viet Nam, this book presents an accurate description of that intangible war.

The author, Al Santoli, did an excellent job of allowing the different Viet vets he interviewed to describe their Viet Nam experiences in their own words. Any psychological analysis that appears in the book, is that of the veterans who cite their experiences.

The chapters are short, making reading easier by giving the reader a chance to digest what he/she has read before going on to the next chapter. Everything We Had, is a good study of the socio-psychological aspects of the complex problems faced by American servicemen in Viet Nam.

While reading this book I became increasingly sensitive to what the biggest problem was that we Viet Nam veterans had to endure in our lives. Most people think that being in Viet Nam was the worst thing that happened for the Viet Nam veterans. Well, surprisingly enough, that was not the worst. The worst part of the Viet Nam experience for most of us was what followed after we came home — depression, guilt, emotional instability, culture shock, anger, and the list goes on and on. Americans think the Viet Nam War is over, but for the men who fought in it, the war is still being fought.

For me, Viet Nam is in the past, but what remains is the disillusionment of being able to come home with honor and a sense of accomplishment. Even now, I am struggling to come to grips with the failings of my country to help me and millions of other Viet vets in achieving the sense of pride we hunger for.

Everything We Had gives the reader a true feeling of what the experience was like. It talks about the loneliness, boredom, drugs, uncertainties, and the combat experiences of America's fighting men in Viet Nam. The book was so engrossing that I rushed through it in one night.

Of the many books that have come out about the Viet Nam War, this is among the best.

Great acting and chases; leave brains under seat

By TOM FAISON

Sylvestor Stallone's new movie Nighthawks isn't really as bad as other critics have made it sound. True, it's not going to be heavy competition at Oscar time, but at least it gives people their money's worth when they crawl into their local movie theatres looking for entertainment and diversion. After all, it has all the ingredients of a decent cop thriller, but since we have seen many of these things before, it just doesn't remain in the mind as something extraordinary.

The simple plot is easy to follow and competently brought to the screen with the heroes identified quickly and without complication. In this case, the heroes, Stallone and Billy Dee Williams are two New York street cops who are fond of picking up the city's scum and refuse in the violent and unorthodox ways. Apparently, they are not popular with the rest of the force, however, because they are "prima donnas" who are not easily given to cooperation. The villain in this little tale is Wulfgar, (played masterfully by Dutch actor Rutgar Hauer) a ruthless sort who is fond of blowing up crowded drug stores, and who also likes to carry sub-machine guns under his well-made sport jackets.

These unlikely antagonist are thrown into the same pot when Wulfgar takes an unexpected leave from his home base in Europe when his evil deeds are perceived as too ruthless by both the French police and even the miserable little fringe group that pays his expenses, so he turns his unwanted attentions towards "The Big Apple."

Obviously, Sly is now taken off street duty and is put on the trail of our explosive friend Wulfgar. He doesn't know too much about European terrorists or their hangouts, but he soon finds Wulfgar boogying in a crowded Manhattan disco. The confrontation scene here is an important one and it is effectively handled with a dramatic flair. I question Sly's method of confronting such a potentially dangerous individual in such a dark, crowded and noisy place (and I know that no decent cop would try such a stunt) but it did make a good scene. At times like this it's often a good idea to quote the noted N.Y. film historian Kevin Quill when he says, "Sometimes when you want to enjoy a good movie, you just have to leave your brains under the seat."

Sly doesn't catch Wulfgar at this point but he does chase him through some interesting N.Y. locations in a beautifully filmed sequence. In fact, there is another expertly handled episode involving The Roosevelt Island Tramway (a cable car that crosses the East River from Manhattan to a small island via the 59th St. Bridge.) I remember when this scene was being filmed, because at the time the residents of Roosevelt Island were protesting that this scene would inspire real highjackers to try the same stunt. They have a good point, but for now they are safe because the tramway has temporarily broken down. I just hope that by the time they fix it, the space shots back home will have forgotten this flick.

As with this scene, the technical and production credit of the rest of Nighthawks is first rate. The acting is even better than average as the star, Stallone, looks natural in his part and handles it well, Williams is decent enough with what little he has to work with, British actor Nigel Davenport is excellent as a visiting expert on terrorism and even Lindsey Wagner and her three lines don't detract from the quality of the rest of the film. However, this is Hauer's film, a new actor in American films, who bears watching because his performance here is electric and should lead to bigger and better things. He is the first American staf to come out of Europe in quite a while and he will probably have a hot career in Hollywood if he doesn't get typecast in roles like this.

In the long run, Nighthawks is a decent diversion in a field of irritating distraction.

Cut the Fat Not Our Budget

FISCAL YEAR 1982 REQUEST
A standstill budget for the Amherst Campus (current operating budget plus inflationary costs) amounts to $89,709,057. The Governor's Budget recommends $86,198,141 which is less than this current year
Unless the Amherst Campus receives the standstill budget
• $2 million shortfall in personnel means loss of 218 employees & reduction in academic offerings
• no inflationary funding results in shortages of lab and teaching supplies, library books, maintenance
• no equipment funds results in obsolete and worn out lab & technical equipment needed for instruction & maintenance

DOONESBURY

by Garry Trudeau

WELL, RICHARD, YOU'LL BE GLAD TO HEAR THAT THINGS ARE MOVING ALONG BRISKLY ON THE WEDDING PLANS FRONT..
I'M MEETING WITH THE FLORIST THIS MORNING, AND THE INVITATIONS HAVE BEEN PROMISED FOR THIS AFTERNOON.
INVITATIONS? THE WEDDING INVITATIONS?
WELL, OF COURSE..
YOU MEAN.. COLD PRINT?
ACTUALLY, IT'S NOT THAT BAD THE SCRIPT SOFTENS THE EFFECT.

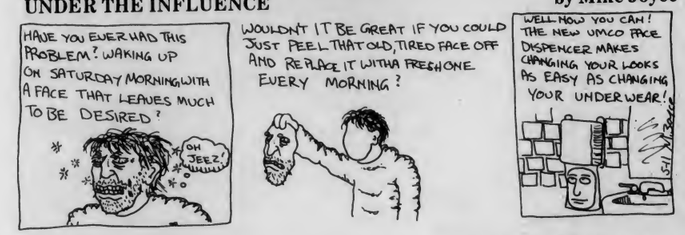
NUKE THE WHALE

by Danny Guidera

BAH! NOTHING BUT TYPE ON THIS RADIO!!!
SAIL-ING TAKES ME— AWAAAYY...
WIMP MUSIC, DEPRESSO MUSIC, JESUS MUSIC, POLKA MUSIC...
JERRY VALE MUSIC, DENTIST MUZAK, GINK MUSIC!!! I CAN'T TAKE MUCH MORE!!!
CRIPES, YOU KNOW YOU'RE LISTENING TO A.M. WHEN THE BEST THINGS ON ARE THE BEER JINGLES!!
GUIDERA

UNDER THE INFLUENCE

by Mike Joyce



HAVE YOU EVER HAD THIS PROBLEM? WAKING UP ON SATURDAY MORNING WITH A FACE THAT LEAVES MUCH TO BE DESIRED?
OH JEEZ!
WOULDN'T IT BE GREAT IF YOU COULD JUST PEEL THAT OLD, TIRED FACE OFF AND REPLACE IT WITH A FRESH ONE EVERY MORNING?
WELL NOW YOU CAN! THE NEW UMCO FACE DISPENCER MAKES CHANGING YOUR LOOKS AS EASY AS CHANGING YOUR UNDERWEAR!

BEAN

by Kevin X. McNamara

Oh how sweet! A Mother's Day card from our boy, Bean.
I think you're swell I think you're neat You fed me well With food to eat. If I was there Then this big lug Would, like a bear, Give you a hug. Love, Bean (Sniff) That's my Beany-boy.

Gorillas skin Orange, 12-8

On the offensive end of the field, Mass slammed in seven unanswered goals in the second half to take a lead and keep it. After ending the first half behind 6-4 and falling even further (7-4) 3:10 into the third quarter, UMass exploded in the second half.

"At halftime? We just talked about it. We'd made some dumb plays. When we finally got to 4-4, I thought we were in good shape. Then we lost two goals — one we raked in ourselves," Garber said.

"We were beating ourselves in the first half," Kinnane said. "Coach said it's one thing if a team is beating us but they (Syracuse) weren't."

The second half was an entirely different story.

"We didn't even play that much in the second half," UMass defensive midfielder Steve Martino said. "Our offense controlled the ball."

Attackmen Chris Corin and Jim Weller combined for ten goals and five assists Friday, seven of the goals coming in the second half.

Weller (now with 51 goals and 28 assists), chipped away at a three-point Syracuse lead, with three goals to tie the score at seven. It took Weller a minute and 35 seconds early in the third quarter, for three straight goals that started an offensive attack rolling that proved fatal for Syracuse.

Three minutes later, at 7:57 in the third quarter, Corin scored the first of his three straight goals, two off feeds from Weller, to put UMass out front 10-7, a lead Syracuse never came close to.

Weller, Corin and Morgan Mohrman (two goals, one assist) were fed all afternoon by attacker Skip Vosburgh who had five assists.

8,000 fans, the largest New England lacrosse crowd ever, watched the Gorillas in their second half, come-from-behind victory.

"The fans helped without a doubt, Syracuse was so intimidated," midfielder Ernie Shapiro said. "We go 110 percent because of the fans."

"The student body is really out-of-sight," Garber said. "They're a great group. They come out, watch the game and they're never obnoxious, it's great."

AROUND THE CREASE: UMass's face-off whiz Tom Walters, a senior midfielder, won 16 of 22 face-offs Friday afternoon... Syracuse cleared less than 50 percent of the balls (14 of 31) while UMass cleared (getting ball from defensive to offensive end of field) 19 of 26.

Penalty "kicks" ruggers out of NE tourney

By FRANK NAGLE
Collegian Staff

The A side of the University of Massachusetts Rugby Club traveled to the New England Tournament in Hartford on Saturday, expecting to show a few people that a college side team could play with most New England club sides.

These club sides, including Beacon Hill, Hartford, Boston, and Portland, as well as 12 other sides, are the best in New England. They are comprised of men who may or may not have played college rugby, but who still have years of experience. If one were to place a college player on one of these sides, he would be considered the rookie of the squad.

But the UMass A side is eager to show that it is a good college side.

They drew eighth seeded Portland in the first round of the single elimination tourney and were expected to pull out a victory but fell 12-9 and were thus knocked out of the New Englands. UMass suffered the loss of Greg Benaud (shoulder injury) their large second row, early in the first half and for the rest of that half, both clubs battled to a 0-0 halftime score.

Early in the second, Portland capitalized on some poor UMass passing in their own end, despite a successful maul to get the ball, to score the first and only try of the game. The conversion kick was good and Portland led 6-0.

UMass came right back at Portland and threatened to score by winning those ever important rucks and mauls. Then, at about the five minute mark, UMass' Kelly Ateridge was hit while kicking for field position and went head over heels, landing on and separating his elbow. Bruce Simmonds made the penalty kick following the injury and less than a minute later converted on another penalty kick, bringing the score at 6-6.

UMass continued its strong attack on Portland but was still plagued by its own mistakes, giving Portland a 25-yard penalty kick for obstruction, bringing the score to 9-6. A beautiful 45-yard penalty kick by UMass team captain Dave Packard again tied the score at nine.

With the time running out in the game, UMass was caught once more by mistakes, in the form of bad tackling in their own end, and committed another penalty on their goal line. Portland made the penalty kick from the 10-yard line as time ran out, giving them the 12-9 victory.

UMass sides A, B, and C compete in the last games of the season Saturday at Amherst College.

Big Green downs UM runners, 92-71

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

Sweeping events was the order of the day, but it was Dartmouth College who got the edge, sweeping the Minutemen in five events, while UMass could only sweep two, in a 92-71 track and field victory for the Big Green, last Saturday.

In a meet that UMass coach Ken O'Brien predicted to be close, the men from Dartmough held a twenty point edge throughout the contest at Llewellyn Derby Field, with the Minutemen surging in the final few events to pull within nine points, 79-70.

Dartmouth clinched the meet in the second to last event, the 5000 meter run, and then capped the meet off with a win in the mile relay.

"You can't spot anyone 50 points," O'Brien said, on the five sweeps and the mile relay.

"We did a hell of a job considering we got shut out of five events," assistant coach Brady Mayer said. "We had a lot of qualifying performances for the New Englands."

The two events which Massachusetts swept were the 3000 meter steeplechase and the 400 meter intermediate hurdles.

UMass' Chris Omeltchenko paced Dartmouth's Tony Baugh and Rodney LaFlamme over the hurdles and water jump, before sprinting away with a lap and a half to go, and winning with a personal best 9:05.2 effort. Baugh finished second with 9:15.2, tenths off his best, and LaFlamme third with his best, 9:23.8.

Greg Mader made up for not breaking 55 seconds last week in the intermediates, by running 54.8 and pulling Clay Carlisle and Steve Ventre under the New England qualifying standard.

Brian Osborne secured his spot on the bus for the New Englands by overcoming a poor start, and coming back to win the 400 meter dash. "Ozzie" ran the fastest one lap for UMass this spring, a sizzling 49.2 run.

Minuteman John Wright continued his winning ways, easily taking the highs in 14.9, and adding another win in the 200 meters, in 22.3 seconds.

Mark Grasso pulled off his first double win this season, winning the long and triple jumps for Mass with 21' 5½" and 45' 8½".

Bill Devarney was the only other UMass winner, taking the dash in 11.1, and running second on the winning 400 relay, with Wright, Carlisle, and co-captain Rick Trunfio.

The Minutemen will journey to the University of Rhode Island next weekend, for the New England championships.

Protesting Intervention In El Salvador, War Build-Up, Government Cutbacks

Thousands March On Pentagon

by Carlos Valdez NUMMO STAFF

Tens of thousands of protestors rally at the Pentagon May 3rd, protesting U.S. war build-up, intervention in El Salvador and government cutbacks. photo by Bobby Davis

$ Tens of thousands of people marched on the Pentagon on May 3 in protest of U.S. intervention in El Salvador, the U.S. war build-up, and government cutbacks in social programs. This was the largest anti-war protest since the Vietnam War.

A Western Massachusetts contingent was present at this mass protest. In fact, an estimated 300 people from this area made the trip down to Washington, D.C. Many people went in private cars, but transportation in vans and buses was organized by the local Latin America Solidarity Committee.

It is estimated that a total of about 500 buses and thousands of private cars arrived for the event. Boston sent 27 busloads.

Organizers of the protest estimated that in all, 100,000 people were present. The figure given by the Washington D.C. police was much lower (a common occurrence at these type of demonstrations): a mere 20,000.

It is very important to point out how the press tried to weaken the impact of the march by emphasizing the police figure. The New York Times said "at least 20,000". But at least they mentioned the organizers' figure as well. Many of the Washington radio stations only stated the police estimate or simply said "in the thousands".

The press also gave a lot of attention to the counterdemonstration staged by the extreme rightwing group, CARP (associated with the Unification Church of Sun Myung Moon--the "Moonies"). Their demonstration, in support of U.S. intervention in El Salvador, numbered somewhere around 200, according to people at the march who saw them. But most of the anti-war protesters did not even see the Moonies' demonstration.

Yet one Washington radio station said that it numbered around 5000! The New York Times said about 500.

It is hard to believe that all these newspapers and radio stations made these distortions by accident. It is impossible to believe the number estimate made by the police, by the way.

Three hours after the march began in Constiution Park (and winded past the State Dept, across Memorial Bridge and on to the lawn at the Pentagon), thousands of people were still crossing Memorial Bridge. The rally which took place at the Pentagon, following the march, was more than half over when the long line of marchers filled up the lawn area. And the rally lasted all afternoon!

Here at UMass, the Daily Collegian was an accomplice to this media attack on the efforts of the May 3rd march. It printed a photograph which showed the marchers and the Moonies, with a caption stating that there were two demonstrations, one against U.S. militarism and one in favor.

The effect of this (whatever the intentions) was to give the two actions equal importance.

But in spite of the destructive role of the media, the march succeeded in bringing together a broad array of groups and forces in a highly significant mass action.

The march brought together people of different races and nationalities, of all ages, and of different political tendencies. The sponsoring groups included third world people's organizations, committees in solidarity with the Salvadorean struggle, Church groups, labor unions, students, women, leftist political parties, humanitarian groups, a lesbian and gay contingent, and the list goes on...

There was a substantial number of third world people at the march. The percentage of non-white people out of the total was somewhere between 15 and 25 percent.

The Black United Front of New York City put together a large contingent, after having done support work for the march in the Black communities of New York.

Latin Americans had a strong presence at the march. There were contingents of Puerto Ricans, Salvadorans, Guatemalans, Nicaraguans, Cubans, Haitians and others.

The Palestinian cause was represented by the presence of a contingent of Palestinians and Arab-Americans. There was more than one group of Iranian students present as well.

The speakers at the rally reflected the diversity among the protestors.

Rafael Cancel Miranda (who spent 24 years in a U.S. prison for an armed action on behalf of Puerto Rican independence) spoke. He gave inspirational messages and linked the Salvadoran struggle to the people's struggles in Guatemala, Nicaragua, the Caribbean and South America.

Rev. Herbert Daugherty of the National Black United Front focused on the reactionary policies of the Reagan admnistration, which are waging attacks on people both in the U.S. and around the world.

Other speakers addressed the crowd on behalf of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the South West African People's Organization (of Namibia) and the American Indian Movement.

Representing the lesbian and gay contingent, a Black woman pointed out the need for lesbian and gay liberation to be part of the overall movement for people's liberation.

The people's forces of El Salvador were represented by Arnaldo Ramos of the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR), which is the coalition of popular organizations in El Salvador. He said that his compatriots in El Salvador, upon receiving news of the march on the Pantagon, would receive encouragement in their struggle.

Terrorists, Terrorists, Who Are The Terrorists?

BY Phill Jennings NUMMO STAFF

The Justice Department's Law Enforcement Assistance Administration published a report in 1978 which revealed evidence that race is a definite factor in police killings.

Other surveys show that over 70 percent of the people killed by police in cities like Chicago and Philadelphia are Black. Between the years 1967 and 1977, over 6,000 men, women and children ranging from ages 10 to 81 were shot to death by policemen.

The question to ask here is, why does the U.S. government and press continually point at other countries such as Afganistan and El Salvador and call those people terrorists, when we have terrorists right here in this country?

People in Afganistan and El Salvador are freedom fighters or rebels who are fighting for social change against an oppressive government. Terrorists, on the other hand, are people or organizations like the KKK or Nazi's who terroriza or kill people because of a dissase they have called "WHITE RACISM".

During the last 6 months, the New Orleans police department has conducted a campaign of terror against the majority of that city, which happens to be Black. Nine Black people have been brutally gunned down by the police in that city, seven fatally.

Police terrorism in New Orleans began in September when a Black man was shot to death in the Desire housing project,in New Orleans. In a two day period in November, four more people were murdered, cold bloodedly, this also ichluded a women who was shot to death by police who burst into her apartment while she was taking a bath.

A few days after the killings, a grand jury cleared the "terrorist" police officer of any wrong doing in the September slaving.

Civil Rights Leaders Urge Extension On Voting Act

by Gus Martins NUMMO STAFF

Civil Rights and labor leaders, saying that the wounds from a century of overt racial discrimination had not healed, urged Congress today to extend the Voting Rights Act for ten years in its present form.

They said that safeguards in the 1965 law, including important provisions scheduled to expire in August 1982, were still needed because Blacks and Hispanic Americans did not trust White officials in the South and Southwest to protect their franchise.

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., president of the National Urban League, said that Blacks had made substantial progress, registering as voters and being elected to public offices in Southern states. But in testimony before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, Mr. Jordan said that he had also saw sings of "retrogression" which tended to diluta the voting strength of Southern Blacks by such techniques as at-large elections and racial gerrymandering.

"I do not trust White people in the South with my rights," Mr, Jordan said. "I did not before the act. I do not 17 years later".

Under the Voting Rights Act, nine states with a history of discrimination and portions of 13 other states must have apporval from the Justice Department or a Federal court before changing their election laws. This part

An Interview with Gary Lee On Cuba

The Venceremos Brigade visited Cuba for three weeks. One week was spend building a school, one week in educational sessions, and one week touring the country. The following is an interview with one of the members of the brigade which was broadcasted to an international audience over Radio Havana. Gary Lee, a student from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, was interviewed.

INTERVIEW WITH GARY LEE OF UMASS

Q: Why do you think Cuba is an important issue?

A: Mainly because our (U.S.) government has always tried to control Cuba and 22 years ago Cuba was a sucessful in freeing itself. There are many links between Cuba and the African continent and being an African-American I realize those links due to European colonialism, neo-colonialism, and slave trade. Cuba represents an attempt in this hemisphere to construct a socialist society where needs of individuals, human needs, are the dominant concern. These human needs have replaced the accumulation of profits as the dominant concern and motivating force behind the Cuban society.

Q: Now that you've been here two weeks what are your impressions of Cuba?

A: I'm very impressed. Particularly with the way people identify with the goals of the society, unlike the situation back home where there is so much cynicism, corruption, and opportunism. In the United States everyone is out for himself. But here the people identify with the struggles of people all over the world.

Q: As a young black American how would you contrast the future you see for yourself with that of a young black Cuban?

A: It is interesting that you mention the term black because in the United States race consciousness is forced on us by the conditions of the society but I have not notice true race consciousness in Cuba. People don't have race on their minds. The people in Cuba all realize that they have some link to Africa, even people of predominantly Spanish origin realize this. For a young person growing up in Cuba today they have hard work ahead of them but also the realization that society will provide them with all the tools necessary to contribute to the development of their country, whereas in the United States its more an attempt to just plug in somewhere.As an African-American I'l either have to go along with the establishment norms or face some form of repression. In the United States to have a trully humanitarian outlook is not rewarded, while here in Cuba the government finances doctors and technicians being able to go to other countries to help people as part of their foreign policy. Here in Cuba human rights include housing, education, and health care. These are things people need just as a consequence of birth. But in the United States our ruling class doesn't have that concept of human rights. In the U.S. property rights are paramount.

Forum on National Liberation Struggles

by Curtis Haynes NUMMO STAFF

§On April 28 over one hundred people gathered in room 165 of the Campus Center throughout the world. By the end of the evening, these people had left, endowed with the knowledge that liberation struggles of the world are not different but are rather one and the same

§The Forum on National Liberation Struggles began with many UMass organizations giving support to the world wide struggle for self-determination. Included was Mariead Casey of the Irish Solidarity Committee who related the struggles in Northern Ireland to the struggles against imperialism through out the world. According to Mariead, Ireland has been the victim of oppression for over 800 years with Northern Ireland still under British rule today. Mariad also stated that much of the nationalist struggle in Ireland has been patented on the the Civil rights struggle here in the U.S. during the sixties.

§Wilma Reveron Tio, of the Movement for the Independence of Puerto Rico at the United Nations, was the first panel member to speak. (the panal was originally to include representitives of the Western Sahara Polisario Front and also a represetitive of the FDR of El Salvador but these speakers were not able to attend do to unfore seen commitments) Wilma spoke about the media in the U.S. saying it is "the media of the oppressor, not of the people." She said that the media is controled by the same people who supply arms to Isreal and El Salvador, to kill Palastinian and Salvadorian peoples. In regards to liberation struggles, she asked, "Why not give up the liberation struggle" she answered here own question with "It is not the colonized people who should give up the struggle... it is the colonizer who must give up the colonies."

§"That Puerto Rico is being subjected to an alien subjugation is very clear in the history of our country." she said, "this is countrary to the definition of human rights, as defined by the United Nations." Also, according to Wilma, Puerto Rico had more rights under the colonial powers of Spain then they do today, as a colony of the U.S.. While talking about Puerto Rico becoming a colony of the U.S. she said "in 1898 no one asked the one million Puerto Ricans who lived there if they wanted to join the U.S.... on the contrary, they fought the U.S.". In regards to the colonial mentatlity of some Puerto Ricans, she said "it is a shame that Puerto Ricans have fought and killed other Third World peoples for the American Government."

§ In concluding, Wilma's message to the people was "the people of the U.S. do not want war... what you need is to be informed...you have done it once with Vietnam (refering to the demonstrations and protest against the U.S. imperialist involvement in Vietnam)you can do it again(refering to current U.S. imperialist activities)." Lastly, she said "we will never relinquish our rights by what ever means... that includes armed struggle."

§Hasan Rahman of the PLO was the next speaker and he spoke on the "fallacies" which has depicted the struggles and conflicts of the Middle East as either religious struggles, racial struggles, or a struggle about refugees. In speaking of the true relationship he said "When the Jews of Europe were persecuted they always found a haven among the Arabs... we lived together". In explaining the Middle East conflict he stated that it was composed of two elements: one is the relation between the arab states, or the absence of relations with the state of Isreal and the other refers to to the rights of the Palastinian peoples, as to their existance as a nation with the right to a collective national existance. "the conflict is simply between a colonial settler movement that was originated in Europe verses the national struggle of the Palistinian people."

§He made the differentiation between Zionism and Judaism by saying that Judaism is a religion, and Zionism is a political movement. Elaborating on the Zionist movement he said that it had grown on the philosophy that man kind does not like Jews thus they must live together or that Jews are the chosen people and Isreal is the promised land. Thus, he said that this leaves Zionist with an idea of superiority which legitimizes what ever they do to the Palestinian people. "The Palestinians do not have the same rights as Jews in Isreal... as a Jew, regardless of where ever you are born you can imigrate tommorrow to occupy Palestine and become a citizen, I am the Palistinian who was born there, my father was born there, my great grandfather was born there , I cannot live in Palistine... because I am not Jewish."

§In regards to U.S. policy he said "Mr Reagan, since he came to power has started one of the most dangerous psychological cold war campaigns, trying to convince the international community that there is a monster called the Soviet Union and that every thing in this world has to be analysed in terms of Soviet and American relations." To this he pleaded," what about us, the small peoples of the world who want to live without domination, nether from the Soviet Union nor the U.S.."

§Hasan concluded by stating "the question of Palestine will not be settled in Washington, it will be settled in the Middle East... it will be settled by us." also, "we are not against Jews, we are against Zionism...we are willing to accept the Jews living with us... under a system of equality."

§Jose Ramos of the East Timor Fretelin Front was the final speaker. Jose explained that East Timor was a Portugease colony outside of Australia and in 1974 a military coup overthrough the facist dictatorship. Elections were supposed to take place in the summer of 1978 under U.N. supervision, but the government of Indonisia which was placed in power by the C.I.A. in 1965 stopped the emergence of an independent East Timor. He told the people how in November of 1975 Fretelin established a democratic society. To counter act this on December 6, 1975 Gerald Ford and Dr. Kissinger visited Indonisia and on December 7, four U.S. war ships and 10,000 Indonisian troops ivaded East Timor.

§He stated that since then, out of a population of less than one million as many as one hundred thousand have died by weapons made in the West. Jose explained that the basic U.S. intrest is that the U.S. doesnot want any other left wing governments in South East Asia, especially since their defeat in Vietnam. Also, East Timor is a stratigic location for American nuclear submarines.

§Speaking about the problems of the world Jose told his audience how he felt that the roots of most of these problems can be found in the corridors of the Pentagon, State department, and the C.I.A.

§In concluding he stated that the war continues in East Tibor and Indonisian troops have not been able to smash the resistance and regardless of the actions taken by the State Department and Penatagon this small island, with our support, will soon be liberated.

Sexuality and the Asian-american Left

by Henry Jung

Since the late sixties there has been a proliferation of pro-Marxist Asian-American groups such as I Wor Kuen (Society of the Harmonius Fist), East Wind, Red Guards, Asian Study Groups (Workers Viewpoint Party), Chinatown Progressive People's Association, etc. With their anti-war, draft-counseling, tenant rights, union-organizing, cultural reafirmation, street mobilization and popular recreational activities, these organizations provided a refreshing and more positive alternative to the moribund, old-guard *ghetto*organizations mired in conservatism and political reaction like the Kuomingtang Party, Chinatown American Legion, Nisei Veterans of Foreign Wars, Chinese Merchants, etc.

Unfortunately these left organizations have generally made one major glarting error--- their denial and ignorance of the sexuality of the masses as well as their own membership, especially adolescents.

In this regard, the current Asian-American left organizations are similar to the numerous communist and socialist parties of Germany in the 1930's as described by Wilhem Reich. Reich was a brilliant, though controversial Austrian-born psychiatrist who died in a U.S. federal prison in 1955 while serving a sentence for fraud under the Pure Food and Drug Act; his conviction was related to his "subversive" political background. He was a victim of McCarthyism.

As a radical 'middle-class psychiatrist concerned with the welfare of the common man, Reich was greately instrumental in establishing many birth control clinics and sex counceling organizations [Sex-Pol] in Germany in the late 20's and early 30's as Hitler and Nazism came to power.

As a member of the German Communist Party, Reich had to not only contend with the Nazi-led anti-abortion, anti-gay, "pro-life--pro-family" forces from the right, but he had also battle the sexually-prudish communist and socialist leaders who only wanted to deal with "bread and butter" issues like full-employment, public education and adecuate housing, ignoring personal issues such as sexuality because it was considered a minor issue.

The Nazi-dominated right wing forces skillfully manipulated and exploited the general ambivalence of the masses around sexual promiscuity, pornography, homosexuality, abortion and prostitution by distracting the people with patriarchical authoritarianism, forced labor, military conscription, uniforms, parades, government sanctioned brothels and racist theories. (Jews were commomly portrayed as "sex fiends".) Reich was finally dismissed from the German Communist Party for talking about sex too much.

One of Reich's leading opponents in the German Communist Party evoked a ban on Reich's writings, stating that it was "simply 'counter revolutionary' to expose youth to such trash and that it weakened their fighting spirit and was irrelevant to 'proletarian class morality.'"

The lesson for politically-progressive Asian Americans is clear. Sexuality cannot be rejected as "privatism or subjectivism." Sexuality is a natural and vital part of human life that must be approached honestly and holistically. The sexual-prisiness and rigity

NEWS BRIEFS

Invasion of Nicaragua and Cuba Planned

(From Nicaragua)---Nicaragua leaders have charged that military camps have been established in Honduras, Guatemala, Costa Rica and the United States to train mercenaries for a possible invasion of their country.

The Nicaraguan charge is born out by Miami's Spanish language radio stations which have broadcast advertisements requesting individuals to join paramilitary groups. The paramilitary groups training in Miami are not restricted to p otential invations of Nicaragua, however. The groups are also reportedly preparing for an invasion of Cuba. Strong anti-Cuba statements coming from the government, particularly Secretary of State Alexander Haig, is believed to be reason for the recent step-up in recruitment by these Miami-based terrorist organizations.

Turkey Gets Big Bucks

(From France)---Western nations have expressed their strong approval of the new military dictatorship in Turkey by promising a billion dollars in aide. Western powers meeting in Paris ignored widespread reports of human rights violations by the new Turkish regime. It is also notable that two of the Western nations promising aide, the United States and Great Britain, have embarked on a policy of cutting domestic spending by weakening or eliminating many social programs.

UN Official calls for more Equitable Trade

(From Peru)---The Latin American Economic System's permanent secretary Carlos Alsamora has asked for more equitable economic relations between Latin America and the U.S. He was on his way from Lima, Peru to Montevideo, Uruguay where he will attend a meeting of the United Nations Commission on Latin America. He told his Peruvian audience that Latin America should take the initiative and make specific proposals for more equitable trade with both the U.S. and the European community. Alsamora added that the U.S. and the European community must recognize the need for a more balanced trading relationship with Latin America.

Unseasonal Cold Kills Fifty In Colombia

(From Colombia)---The head of the National Emergency Task Force, Carlos Martinez Diez, said that more than fifty people have died and thirty five thousand have been left homeless due to severe cold that has hit Colombia. Diez also said that more than two hundred families have been evacuated from Barrancabermeja City and an additional three hundres from along the Cauca River as a result of flooding.

Nicaragua Receives International Support

(From Nicaragua)---As a result of the U.S cut off of aide to Nicaragua, including much needed wheat to help feed the population of this war ravaged nation, other nations have come to Nicaragua's support. The Soviet Union has given the country twenty thousand tons of wheat and Bulgaria has given ten thousand tons. Eastern bloc nations have also set up an emergency fund through which Nicaragua will be able to obtain funds for purchase of machinery and agricultural and industrial products. The Soviet Union has also granted Nicaragua loan funds for the establishment of research facilities, an autonomous national university, a more powerful radio station, and a floating dock.

The Historical rights of the Palestinian People and the Illegitimacy of the Zionist State of "Israel"

Continued next week

Through history and because of its important strategic and geographic location Palestine has been under successive invations the latest of which is the Zionist invation. Since 1948 the Palestinian people peacefully appealed to the world's conscious but they were denied their rights. They found that the only way to regain their historical rights on their homeland was through ARMED STRUGGLE. Labeled as "terrorists" the P.L.O. is the vanguard of the Palestinian and Arabs masses.

The following facts are concrete evidence of the Palestinian people historical rights and of the illegitemacy of the racist Zionist entity, the so called state of "Israel".

The Canaanites - The First Semite Settlers of Palestine

-Since 3500B.C. Semites left the Arabian Peninsula in migratory waves for Egypt, Irag, Syria, Lebanon and Palestine.

-In 2500B.C. one such group settled in Palestine, they were called Canaanites.

The Ancient Kingdoms

-Around the year 2000 B.C. a number of states were established in the various lands reached by the migrants from the Arabian Peninsula.

-In Palestine the state of Canaan was first in history to be founded in that country.

The Hebrew Migration

-Around the year 1200 B.C. the Hebrews led by the prophet Moses fled from Egypt and crossing the Sinai Peninsula settled in the area east of the Dead Sea.

-Under the leadership of Joshua, the Hebrews invaded the state of Canaan, crimes of the most heinous nature were perpetrated against the inhabitants, as readers of the Old Testament know.

One Hundred Years Only

-The Hebrews were only able to occupy parts of Palestine and of the area east of the Jordan River, their kingdom was founded in the year 1020 B.C. by king Saul. His successors, King David and King Salamon ruled until 923 B.C.

-Under the guidance of the original communities (the Palestinians) of the occupied areas, the invadors gained their first experience in agriculture and urbanization.

-Other parts of Palestine remained under the free controlof the original inhabitants (the Palestinians).

The Down fall of the Hebrew Kingdom.

-In 923, during the reign of King Solomon, the Hebrew Kingdom suffered a rupturous split. The Kingdom of Israel took the Northern part while the South was dominated by the Kingdon of Judea.

-In 722 B.C. the Northern Kingdom was swept over by the Assyrians.

-In 586 B.C. the Babylonians brought to an end the Southern Kingdom and the Hebrew reign in Palestine was terminated. A very small number of Hebrews chose to remain in the land as residents (they then became Palestinian Jews).

-Throughout this period the original inhabitants (the Palestinians) kept their continuous residence in Palestine.

Invasions continue-The inhabitants persist.

-In 538 B.C. The Persian invasion.

-In 331 B.C. The Greek invasion.

-In 64 B.C. The Roman invasion.

The Islamic Era

-The year 636 A.D. saw the convergence on the area of the grat Arab wave from the Arabian Peninsula. From that date on the Arab identity of Palestine and the surrounding areas have been uncontestably reaffirmed.

The Crusaders-Another invasion

-In 1099 the Crusaders captured the city of Jerusalem and the Crusador state of Jerusalem was proclaimed.

-In 1187 Saladdin recovered Jerusalem and drove the Crusaders out of large areas of Palestine.

The Ottomans-400 years of rule

-The Offoman rule 1517-1917

-In 1917 the Arab people of Palestine and other Arab countries rose against the Ofomans and joined ranks with the allies during World War I. The allies had pledged complete independence for all Arab countries when the war ended.

-The promise was not honored and independence was replaced by colonization and the subsequent creation of a Zionist state in Palestine.

The Zionist Movement

-In 1897 the first Zionist congress was convened in Basle, Switzerland under the chairmanship of Theodor Herzl. The following resolution was taken. "The objective of Zionism is the establishment of a National home for Jews in Palestine".

The British Mandate-Beginning of the Tragedy

-In 1920 Palestine came under the British mandate.

-On November the 2nd 1917 the Balfour Decleration, the epitome of imperialist Zionist conspiracy was issued. Balfour Decleration,

"His majesty's government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national hove for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavours to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the evil and religious rights of existing non jewish communities in Palestine or the right and political status enjoyed by jews in any other country."

The Arab population and the Jewish minority

-In 1918, following an extensive Jewish immigration drive their ratio increased to 33 percent of the population. Their ownership of land ammounted to 5.67 percent of Palestine.

Palestine- an Endless Revolution

-The Arab people of Palestine rose in arms against Zionist and British Colonialism. They waged successive revolutions until the termination of British mandate in 1948.

50,000 Martyrs

-the British mandate legacy in Palestine:

1-196 Patriots were hanged

2-300 Patriots were sentenced to life hard labor

3-thousands of Palestine Arabs were interned in prisons and detention camps.

4-some 50,000 Arabs were killed throughout the British Mandate over Palestine.

State Aid to South Africa?

Bring Our Money Home!

SUPPORT SENATE BILL 1138

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has $131 million of our tax money invested in US banks and corporations in South Africa. In some cases these dollars are going to the same companies which have shut here, while expanding over there.

The money is invested through the state pension system-funds set aside to pay state teachers and employees their pensions when they retire. Many of these workers firmly oppose their pension funds being used to support a country whose official government policy is based on a flagrant system of racist laws. These laws are designed to deny 22 millions Africans the most elementary form of human rights.

South Africa may seem far away, but many of the same US companies which practice racism in South Africa discriminate against workers of color at home. And the very existence of the South African state provides encouragement to the KKK and other groups which promote racist violence in the US.

Senate Bill 1138 would require the pension system to take this money out of companies and banks involved in South Africa and invest it elsewhere - if possible, here in Massachusetts to provide jobs and home mortgages.

THE PENSION FUND

The money in the Mass. State Pension Fund comes from deductions from the paychecks of all public school teachers and state employees and from the state treasury. The fund's value as of December 1980 was $1.3 billion. At present the teachers and workers participating in the fund have no say in how their money is invested.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN CONNECTION

The pension fund has $130.8 million in investment tied to South Africa. This includes investments in the bonds of such firms as Exxon, Dow Chemical, and Union Carbide which have extensive facilities in South africa. It also includes ownership of stocks and bonds of banks such as Bank of America and the First National Bank of Boston which have made loans to the South African government and to private companies doing business in South Africa.

THE BILL

Senate Bill 1138 requires that state pension funds be divested from South Africa by January 1, 1982. It calls for the proceeds from this divestment to be reinvested as much as possible in companies doing business in Massachusetts.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH SOUTH AFRICA?

"We want to keep South Africa white keeping it white can only mean one thing, namely white domination, not leadership, not guidance, but control, supremacy".
-H. Verwoerd, former Prime Minister of So. Africa

South Africa has been universally condemned for its system of race rule. Blacks people in South Africa have no political rights. The white minority of 4.2 million people control over 87 percent of the land, leaving 13 percent for the 18.6 million black majority. Black people are allowed into the white areas only to work. They must carry passes at all times. Black workers are paid an averge of 1/8 of what whites are paid. Nearly ¼ of blacks children die before their first birthday.

Opposition to white rule has been brutally suppressed. Half of all executions taking place in the Western world last year took place in one country - South Africa. During the Soweto uprising in 1976, over a thousand people - most of them school children -were killed by the police.

WHY DIVESTMENT?

The products of foreignn investment in South Africa - oil, vehicles, computers - sustain the racist system there. Former Prime Minister John Vorster has said, "Each trade agreement, each loan, each new investment is another brick in the wall of our continued existence." Numerous black leaders in South Africa including nobel laureate Albert Luthuli, Steven Biko, Bishop Desmond Tutu and the leaders of the South African freedom movements have called for divestment. Before it was banned by the South African government, the Black People's Convention of South Africa stated that, "We call upon foreign investors to disengage themselves from this white-controlled exploitative system." Among the American organization which have answered this call are U. Mass., Hampshire College, the United Auto Workers, the United Electrical Workers, the National Council of Churches, the Methodist Church, and the City of Cambridge.

WHAT BENEFIT TO MASSACHUSETTS

Massachusetts workers are being increasingly threatened by "runaway shops" - firms which leave the state to take advantage of the low wages and anti-union climates in places like South Africa. Goodyear (New Bedford), Westinghouse (Springfield) and American Can (Needham) are just three examples of companies operation in South Africa. Senate Bill 1138 is directed at stoping "runaway shops." It call for the reinvestment in Massachusetts of the money withdrawn from the corporations in South Africa.

In addition, the very existence of the South African system lends support and encouragement to racist hate groups such as the KKK and the South Boston Marshalls. Such groups breed violence and create an atmosphere of fear which affects all of us. Send them a message.

A review of a new Asian-american recording

Affirming The Traditional

by Fred Houn NUMMO STAFF

The new album,Hiroshima (Arista AB 4252) by the Los Angeles-based group, Hiroshima, represent the diversity and range of styles, while affirming the fundamentals, of Asian American music.

Defining Asian American music is not that simple. As part of the conditions of oppression, inequalities, denied language, history, identity, and culture, the development of Asian American culture has necessarily been a struggle for legitimacy based on the aesthetics, traditions, perspectives and experiences of the Asian American peoples. It is a culture in the process of development, reflecting our conditions and experiences, drawing from the traditions and influences of our Asian heritages as well as the idioms of American society. As oppressed national minorities, our culture (art, music, writing, the totality of our way of life as distinct nationalities) is a vital part of the struggle to live and develop as a nationality--to have equal rights to practice our customs, learn our history, speak our language and promote our unique cultures.

The first Asian American recordings, A Grain of Sand and Yokohama, California, emerged in the context of the Asian American movement of the late-1960s and '70s and thus represented a conscious effort to explicate through lyrics, our history, identity and struggles. Though the content was about the Asian American experience, the cultural forms, though sophisticated, where invariably based on American idioms of blues, jazz, country, folk, pop-rock. The utilization and incorporation of Asian traditional forms and techniques was absent.

However, with the new addition, Asian American music has broadened in musical forms and styles. Asian American musicians continue to be closely based in the various Asian communities of J-Towns, Chinatowns, Manilotowns, in most cases involved in organizing in order to futher the collective situation of Asian Americans in general and the Asian American cultural movement in particular.

The obvious commercial appeal of Hiroshima should not mitigate against its significance and accomplishment to Asian American music and culture. The band has been around for the most part of this past decade, based in Los Angeles and having performed throughout the West Coast. The leaders are husband and wife, Dan and June Kuramoto. An insight into the lives and perspectives of these musicians can be gotten from viewing the Visual Communications (producer of the film, Hito-Hata) film, "Crusin' J-Town." The album's commercial success, reaching the tops of the Billboard list for Southern California, follows the formula of most commercial pop and rhythm and blues hits; innocuous (if not somewhat trite) lyrics, over orchestrations with melifluous strings and superflous background vocals, repetitive rhythmic cliches. This is no doubt due to the influence of Arista records and producer Wayne Henderson (of the Crusaders--who used to be called the Jazz Crusaders, dropping the "jazz" in order to sell more records).

ing the "jazz" in order to sell more records).

The musicians of Hiroshima are pros--with musical experience in Hollywood's studios.

Hiroshima has broad support especially among Asian Americas in the region. Hiroshima identifies itself with the Asian American movement, having performed in support of community struggles and for the Asian/Pacific Islander Students Unions. The Asian American communities have been major purchasers of the album.

There are now three organizations to combat this wave of police terror in New Orleans.

One group called The Police Brutality Committee was fromed and resolved that they would launch a "selective buying campaing" that would pressure New Orleans businesses who cnotrol the local government. On March 28, some 400 people took part in a march for justice.

Such activities are only effective to a certain extent when you deal with racist institutions like the American Judicial System which is, in short, "morally unjust." In cases such as these people must realize that there are times when Boycotts and marches are simply not enough. Blacks have got to learn that sometimes one must take control of matters himself, and do as one grat Black man called Malcom X put it,

"BY ANY MEANS NECESSARY"

of the law is due to expire next year. Mr. Hyde proposed allowing Federal judges to order such "preclearance" for four years wherever there was a pattern or practice of voting rights abuses. He said his proposal constituded " a sensible middle ground" between extending the present law and letting the preclearance provisions expire.

Jordan vehemently opposed the Hyde proposal saying, "I do not believe that for Black people, given our history in this country, there is a middle ground when it comes to our voting rights."

Mr. Jordan said that allowing part of the law to expire at the same time that many social programs are being cut would be particularly discouraging to Blacks and other minority groups. Benjamin Hocks, executive director of the N.A.A.C.P., said there was " a very grave danger that if this law is weakend in any way, it would embolden those who want to return to the bad old days under the guise of the good old days."

of many Asian-American leftists leaves the field of human sexuality open to capitalistic pornographers (check out the bookstores and theaters in and around Asian-American communities), religious conservatives, amoral Madison Avenue advertisers, flashy nightclub entrepreneurs, "hip" disco d.j.'s and slick "sex" experts. sexual liberation cannot wait until after the revolution!!!--especially for young people.

GSS considers TA unionization

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

The lingering issue of unionization for teaching assistants is again being considered by the Graduate Student Senate in light of expected budget cuts for the University.

A straw poll of 137 graduate students, conducted during last week's GSS elections, showed a solid 80 percent favoring a union for TAs, said Richard Fantasia, GSS vice-president.

A teaching assistants union was first proposed in 1976 as part of an effort to improve working conditions and to retain a level of pay, said Renee Tobach, a member of the Committee of Graduate Student Employees, and ad hoc group organized to look at alternatives and seek a more effective way of petitioning for unionization. The state labor commission declared the bargaining requests to be inadequate in 1979.

The movement toward unionization is continuing along these lines with additional motivation being provided by this particular round of budget cuts, Tobach said.

A committee has been "formed to explore alternatives, but unionization has never left our minds. It's the obvious solution to working-condition problems," Tobach said.

"We are not presently engaged in a union drive," Fantasia said. "We are exploring the legal situation and we are going to do so thoroughly over the summer with the advice of some excellent labor lawyers."

The security of TAs' positions are significantly threatened by budget cuts because the money allocated to them is not contracted and can be redistributed to other areas in the University.

The uncertainly of the situation, said Evelyne Woestelandt of the French department, leaves TAs unknowing whether they will have a job to return to and consequently whether they will be able to complete their studies at the university.

At issue for the graduate students who assist professors in the classroom is job security, teaching loads, wages and insurance coverage.

Coalition develops grievance procedure

By SIOBAHN BREEN and MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Staff

A woman who has a sexual harrassment grievance presently has no formal means of complaint at UMass, according to Ombudsperson Janet Rifkin.

Since September, 14 students have filed complaints against faculty members, said Rifkin, who addressed the Woman's Caucus of the Faculty Senate last week on the issue of sexual harrassment at this University.

Several groups on campus have collaborated in the development of a formal grievance procedure for sexual harrassment complaints. The proposed procedures were drafted by members of Students Against Sexual Harrassment, the Student Coalition for Educational Research and Advocacy, Student Legal Services, and the Ombudsperson's Office. The first draft of the grievance procedures was rejected by the Faculty Senate because the procedures did not protect the due process rights of the defendant.

The procedures now under consideration encompass all university personnel as well as students, and protect the constitutional rights of both parties.

These procedures call for the development of a grievance board comprised of representatives from the undergraduate and graduate student bodies, the faculty and professional staff, and administrative personnel.

Under the procedures, the complaintant would file a grievance with the Ombudsperson. If one wished to bring a formal complaint against the offender, the complaint would be forwarded to the administrative representative of the Grievance Board. A hearing date would then be set and three members of the board would hear the complaint and issue a recommendation no later than 14 days after the hearing.

These procedures were developed in coordination with the various unions on campus in an effort to insure that they do not conflict with the terms of the respective bargaining contracts.

Copies of the proposed procedures have been received by Provost Loren Baritz and Chancellor Henry Koffler, neither of whom were available for comment.

The administrative process that the proposal will have to go through in order to become university policy is uncertain.

UPC braces for Sunday; promises tight security

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

Union Program Council officials yesterday announced final preparations and details for Community Day this Sunday in Alumni Stadium and reaffirmed that tight security precautions will be enforced the day of the show.

The show will begin at 11 a.m. when NRBQ takes the stage. B.B. King will follow at 12:45 p.m., and The John Hall Band with John Hall will play for about thirty minutes starting at 2:30. At 3 p.m., Bonnie Raitt will join the John Hall band and play until 4:30 or 5 p.m., said UPC Talent Coordinator Frank Gironda.

There will be a half-hour break between each act to allow for set changes with the exception of Raitt, who will join John Hall on stage.

As of Friday, 12,000 free student tickets had been picked up out of approximately 17,000 available, Gironda said.

Five college ticket sales "haven't been phenomenal," Gironda said. "We haven't got a great response."

The UPC sent out 17,000 letter to all alumni last week who have graduated since 1978. The letter allows the purchase of two tickets for $11 each, Gironda said. Guests of alumni need not be affiliated with the University.

On the day of the show only the east entrance of the stadium on the University Drive side will be open, Gironda said. There will be two entrances; one for people under 20-years old and one for over the age of, 20 (There will be a detailed story on the alcohol policy later in the week).

"Patrons will be searched at the gates," Gironda said. No containers of any sort will be allowed in.

"We can't search 20,000 coolers," Gironda said, "and we're taking on a tremendous operation trying to screen alcohol. In dealing with this many people it's easier if they bring nothing.

"Our necks are on the line," Gironda said. "if we can't control outside alcohol, and this plan doesn't work, we won't be able to do this again next year."

Education rally scheduled

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

A rally will be held at noon tomorrow on the pond side of the Student Union Building to discuss budget cuts and how they will affect the future of higher education. The rally is part of Higher Education Week being held all this week, culminating Sunday with Community Day.

The rally is sponsored by the Union Program Council and The Coalition, a group of concerned students and student organizations.

There will be five speakers featured including Tony Crayton, director of the Office of Third World Affairs; Linda Cohen from the Student Center of Educational Research and Advocacy's Women's Issues Team, Student Government Association co-President Larry Kocot; Financial Aid Director Ed C. Apodaca; and a representative from the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

The rally is being held to support the demands of The Coalition, which include the resignation of the members of the Board of Regents who voted in favor of the recent tuition increase, tuition waivers for students who will be forced to leave school because of the tuition hikes, and full funding of all public higher education institutions in Massachusetts.

Following the rally, at 3:30, a workshop will be held in SBA 120 entitled, "Where Do We Do From Here?" with Apodaca and members of The Coalition available to answer any questions students may have.

"We are trying to reach those who may not be able to return next year," because of financial aid cuts and tuition hikes, said Carl Hoffman, a spokesperson for The Coalition.

French pols group for Assembly vote

PARIS — The Paris stock market and the franc fell sharply yesterday as France began a season of political uncertainty under a Socialist president, Francois Mitterrand. The Western allies reacted warily, unsure what role the Communists might have in running France.

Just a day after Mitterrand ousted Valery Giscard d'Estaing in presidential elections, the focus of French politics was switching to the vote for a new National Assembly, expected near the end of June.

Mitterrand hopes to elect a leftist majority in the Assembly that will support his plan of economic change, including major nationalizations.

Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, moving to take over leadership of the conservatives from the defeated Giscard d'Estaing, issued an appeal for unity among the center-right parties in order to hold their majority in the Assembly.

Reagan: Mitterand may prove better

WASHINGTON — President Reagan extended "warmest congratulations" to French President-elect Francois Mitterrand and a senior administration official held out the possibility yesterday that the socialist's victory could improve U.S. relations with France.

"We wouldn't anticipate any short-range changes," the official said. "It is anticipated that ... our relations will continue to develop with France."

He sought to play down the likelihood of Communist participation in a new French government and stressed that Mitterrand's election could improve the sometimes rocky relationship successive U.S. administrations have had with France, which has played a maverick role in the Western alliance for 15 years.

Reagan wins again: Senate ok's budget

WASHINGTON — The Senate rejected two attempts yesterday to cut $200 million for water projects, termed "a diet of pork" by one Democrat, as the chamber marched toward passage of a $699.1-billion budget plan made to order for President Reagan's tax and spending cuts.

First, the Senate voted 55-30 against a proposal by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., to transfer $200 million earmarked for water projects into accounts for mass transit and student loan programs.

Then, on a vote of 52-39, the Senate turned back an attempt by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio to cut the $200 million from the budget altogether and reduce the projected $48.8 billion deficit for 1982 by the same amount.

The votes were the freshest indications to date that Republicans and Democrats will combine to approve a 1982 budget blueprint almost precisely as Reagan likes it.

Begin discloses aborted jet strike

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Menachem Begin appealed to Syrian President Hafez Assad yesterday to pull back from the "brink" of a new Mideast war by withdrawing anti-aircraft missiles from Lebanon.

Begin disclosed in a speech to Parliament that he had ordered Israeli jets to knock out the missiles 11 days ago, but cancelled the order.

A good ground plan will get you places. If you've got a place, we've got a plan.

Prof urges better care for mentally ill

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Dr. Benjamin Ricci of the exercise science department last night warned that people cannot stop caring for the mentally retarded after they are born, saying that a pro-life attitude must extend beyond birth.

Ricci delivered a speech on "The Way We Treat the Outcast in Massachusetts," before an audience last night in Newman Center.

Ricci said his involvement with the state mental health department began when he placed his son in Belchertown State School, the result of "one of the most difficult decisions of my life." He said complaints to Governor Francis Sargent concerning conditions of the school prompted the Governor to create a study group, which included Ricci, to investigate the school. Examples of the school's disregard for its patients, Ricci said, included graves marked with numbers instead of a patient's name, and official occupancy limits recorded for rooms which did not exist, to allow for overcrowding.

Ricci said the group's report produced little change in the system, and when on sabbatical leave he visited mental hospitals in Norway which were in far better condition, he decided to take action. He said the department of mental health in Norway, which has a population comparable to Massachusetts, employs five people in administrative positions, whereas Massachusetts employs over 600.

Ricci said he filed a $55 million suit against the state and the system on behalf of residents of the Belchertown State School for charges including "cruel and inhumane treatment."

Ricci said the trial eventually involved five different judges, but that a consent decree binding the state to correct problems cited by the suit was signed in November, 1973.

Holyoke tenant held for apartment fire

HOLYOKE, Mass. — A tenant was arrested yesterday on charges of setting a Saturday morning fire that destroyed his apartment complex and left 80 people homeless, police said.

The apartment complex, which contained a four-story and a five-story building, was the third in the city to burn in three days.

Jesus Cruz, 38, a tobacco farm worker who had lived on the third floor of the block where the fire began, was charged with setting fire to a dwelling unit, according to Detective Captain William McCarthy.

McCarthy said police knew of no connection between Cruz and the other two fires, but he declined to reveal what led police and arson investigators to Cruz.

An innocent plea was entered on Cruz's behalf at his arraignment before Judge Michael Donohue yesterday afternoon in Holyoke District Court. Cruz was ordered held on $10,000 bond or $1,000 cash bail. A trial was scheduled for May 21.

No arrests have been made in the other blazes, but investigators have said they believe at least one other was set.

Bob Marley, 36, dies of cancer

MIAMI — Bob Marley, a Jamaican singer and songwriter who became the world's premier reggae music star, died yesterday after a seven-month battle against cancer. He was 36.

The leader of Bob Marley and the Wailers was flown to Miami last Thursday from West Germany, where he had been receiving treatment for lung cancer and a brain tumor, according to his record company, Island Records.

Karen Buchsbaum, a spokewoman for Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, said he died at the hospital yesterday morning. Island Records issued a statement in London confirming the death.

A record company spokesman said Marley's cancer was diagnosed last autumn after the Wailers' final concert at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

Marley was treated in New York before flying to West Germany at the end of 1980, and for the past five months had been receiving treatment at the clinic of Dr. Josef Issels in Bavaria, Island Records said.

'Don't worry, summer is almost here'

By STEVE MURPHY
Collegian Staff

George Orwell was right: Big Brother is making itself manifest, even at our humble school. This past October, our school administration, in an attempt to curb increasing vandalism, closed the Campus Center Concourse for Halloween activities. Thus a severe blow was struck against an outlet for traditional UMass revelry. And we, the student body, in our infinite optimistic wisdom, set our sights on the warmer weather and Spring Concert. But, Spring Concert has regressed into Community Day. What were previously labeled as opening bands are now deemed headliners. What was once the big event is now just another outdoor concert occurrence. But don't worry, the summer is almost here.

Dreaming: Debbie Harry says she'll do a solo album with help from members of "Chic" but that "Blondie" is not in any danger of breaking up....There are dark reports floating around that John Travolta will star in film bio of the late great Jim Morrison. Somehow I can't see Travolta belting out "Back Door Man."

The joke's on you: Have herb, will travel. Cheech and Chong's third film will be released early this summer. It's entitled "Cheech & Chong's Nice Dreams" and stars the dynamic duo, Stacy Keach, Evelyn Guerrero, and features sometime comedian Dr. Timothy Leary as himself. The pair plays a couple of ice cream vendors spreading good humor through the streets of L.A.....Also out this summer is Columbia Pictures' "Stripes," another comedy starring Billy Murray. The film also stars Warren Oates, P.J. Sole, and Harold Ramis, the director of "Caddyshack" and co-writer of "Animal House" and "Meatballs." This time the hijinx take place on an army base and involves "a major conflict with the Russians."....National Lampoon's editorial staff has put together "National Lampoon Goes to the Movies," a parody of four film genres—the tough cop film, the "Kramer vs. Kramer" type film, the Jacqueline Susann/Harold Robbins film, and the disaster epic. The cop satire features Robby Benson and Richard Widmark as two cops after a psychotic killer who has murdered a series of women to get back at a bank that turned him down for a vacation loan. There's supposed to be plenty of surprise cameo appearances. It too will be out this summer....

ONLY THE ARMY GIVES YOU TWO WAYS TO LOWER THE COST OF EDUCATION IN JUST TWO YEARS.

LOAN FORGIVENESS

If you have a Guaranteed Student Loan or a National Direct Student Loan (made after October 1, 1975) hanging over your head, consider spending a couple of years in the Army.

If you train for certain specialties, the government will release you from 1/3 of your indebtedness (or $1,500, whichever is greater) for each year of active duty.

Obviously, a three-year enlistment would eliminate 100% of your indebtedness. But you may prefer to take a shorter route and sign up under the Army's two-year enlistment option (and put 2/3 of your debt behind you).

Or you might want to join the Army Reserve. If you qualify, as a Reservist you can stay home, get paid for your active duty, and receive 15% loan forgiveness (or $500, whichever is greater) for each year you serve.

But we're not just offering you loan forgiveness. With your education, you can probably qualify for a higher rank and pay grade. You'll have your choice of many sophisticated Army skills.

And you may be eligible for generous monetary educational incentives.

TWO-FOR-ONE SAVINGS PLAN

If your dream is to continue your education some day, joining the Veterans' Educational Assistance Program can bring that day closer.

In fact, in just two years you can accumulate up to $9,200 for grad school. (Only the Army can offer you a two-year enlistment.)

It's not a loan, so you'll never have to worry about making payments. It's simply a savings program between you and the government.

If you save between $25 and $100 of your monthly Army pay, the government will match that amount two-for-one. On top of that, you might qualify for an exclusive Army educational incentive of $2,000. (Longer enlistments can result in higher incentives.)

And you can participate in VEAP at the same time you're receiving loan forgiveness.

So, in just two years, you can go back to school with 2/3 of your debt behind you and up to $9,200 for your education ahead of you. (Of course, a longer enlistment could result in more educational benefits and 100% loan forgiveness.)

To find out more about both ways to serve your country as you serve yourself, call 800-421-4422. In California, 800-252-0011. Alaska and Hawaii, 800-423-2244. Ask for the name of the Army's college representative nearest you.

THE ARMY'S COLLEGE BENEFITS

	Per Mo.	2 Yrs.
You Save:	$100	$2,400*
Gov't Adds 2-for-1:	$200	$4,800
Total:	$300	$7,200
Army Adds:		$2,000
Total Benefits:		$9,200

*Maximum individual contribution during a 2-year enlistment.
Certain 4-year enlistments can get you as much as $14,100 for college, plus a $5,000 cash enlistment bonus for a total of $19,100.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Guest column

Debate, not hysteria

People are dying in the streets of El Salvador. Many of them innocent bystanders caught in the cross fire between extremists of both the left and the right. Responding to such suffering one looks for a hope of peace and for a solution to the grossly unequal distribution of wealth in that overcrowded, underdeveloped country. Yet would-be liberators are apt to manipulate our desire for change with facile slogans and with grossly false information and half truths.

Such was the case at last Wednesday's May 6 talk by two Salvadorean students who support the Marxist FMLN (Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front) guerilla movement in El Salvador.

The pro-FMLN presentation Wednesday night, unfortunately met unquestioning, sheeplike acceptance by the audience, would be laughable if it did not portend so much more continued suffering for the people of El Salvador. It becomes necessary therefore to analyze some of the half truths espoused at the meeting.

The speakers asserted that the Duarte government is unable to solve the economic crises in the country, but failed to mention that one of the main reasons for that crisis is the FMLN guerilla policy of burning factories, power plants, cutting off highway traffic, burglarizing travelers, and burning crops. They even destroyed the water supply tower in Suchitoto—all in an attempto to destroy the economy of El Salvador and thereby the faith of the people in the present government of the country.

The speakers said that the Duarte government's land reform programs are only "demagogic measures" but failed to explain why Archbishop Rivera y Damas of San Salvador supports the reforms, which include the transfer of 44 percent of all cropland to the peasants themselves (212,000 peasant families out of 300,000 formerly landless peasant families).

The speakers claimed that the FMLN guerillas have widespread support from the "people" of El Salvador, yet failed to mention that the so called "Final Offensive" launched by the FMLN this January dismally failed to draw popular support. They also neglected to mention that Archbishop Rivera had said the guerilla movement lost credibility and popular support:

"I don't think they lost it because of government repression. They lost this support because the people say that they tended toward power for its own sake and not toward satisfying the hopes of the people...The majority of the people are fleeing not the government, but the guerillas because of their radical tendencies and for their sabotages."

In Response to my mentioning Rivera's criticism of leftist violence (6,000 killed by the FMLN in 1980), the speakers tried to discredit Rivera by asserting a distinction between the Archbishop and the "popular church," yet failed to mention that Rivera was extremely critical of Duarte until he saw that Duarte was taking serious steps to control and punish violence by right-wing elements of the National Guard, and when he saw that the land reforms were starting to work.

The speakers also attacked anyone who does not support the FMLN program for Marxist-Leninist takeover of the country as "right-wing." If Duarte is right-wing, why was he tortured and exiled by rightists in 1972 after winning the presidential election on a land reform platform? If kDuarte is only a puppet manipulated by the upper class, why did wealthy landowners, angry because Duarte took their land away (although with recompense), support three attempted right-wing coups against him since he returned to power in 1979? And why did the speaker omit that Duarte was elected mayor of San Salvador three times?

If the United States fails to supprt the reformist Duarte government then either a dictatorship of the ultra-right or of the ultra-left will take control of that nation. Is that something that students at UMass would like to support?

Finally, although I patiently waited to ask another question since the moderator told me to "wait my turn," he closed the meeting, pleading that the speakers were "tired." Why did "my turn" to question their inaccuracies never come?

On my way out one of the "progressive" students in the audience threatened "it could be dangerous for you to speak out like that." Is this a portent of the "liberated" society that will come to El Salvador if the "progressive" FMLN comes to power there?

I and other members of CARP will not be intimidated by threats or by the current smear campaign (cf. Collegian April 30, p. 1; May 7, pp. 10-11) against CARP by those who would deny us our right to express dissenting opinions.

Although the "progressives" accuse CARP of being McCarthyite because we point out the totalitarian record of Communism, in fact it is they who are guilty of McCarthyism, since in place of rational discussion of the issues they try to whip up mass hysteria by attacking us because of our personal convictions. That's why when "progressives" on campus can't respond to CARP's insistence upon the facts about El Salvador, they resort to calling us "Fascists," physical intimidation, and put constant pressure on the Board of Governors to have us thrown off campus.

We at CARP are ready to debate anyplace, anytime, the facts about El Salvador. I hope that students at future meetings about that tortured country will have the courage to question the omissions and outright distortions and not be frightened into cowlike conformity, such as occurred at last Wednesday's meeting.

The painful situation of the people of El Salvador cries out for our attention, but we must be wise to see through the cloak of lies of would-be liberators. Before we all rush to jump on the FMLN propaganda wagon, we ought to check to see of it isn't carrying a very full load of manure, fragrant with broken promises and betrayals of the Salvadorean people.

The best laugh all week

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Myra Hindus for her letter protesting WMUA's airing of the old Kinks song "When I Turn Out the Light." It was the best laugh I've had all week.

Rufus Horowitz

Abuse of power

The attempted flim-flam of the SGA's proposed PVTA funding (Collegian 5/8/81), is an outrage to any self respecting student. By charging students an extra $10 or $15 each towards transit costs, without subtracting the $10 portion of the present student fee allocated for transit, is a thinly veiled attempt to increase the amount of money under SGA control at the expense of students who are already hard-pressed by increasing costs of tuition, housing and books as well as by cuts in financial aid.

This abuse of power should not be tolerated. I strongly urge every student to let their senators know that such manipulation would demonstrate callous disregard for students' needs which could strongly influence voters in the next election.

Everett Harman

British generosity

I'd like to respond to a letter written by Janet Meyer, (Collegian, 5/7) in which she generalizes a bad personal experience into an analysis of the entire situation in Northern Ireland. I'm sorry that you were mistreated while there, Janet, but your words on the subject of the Northern Irish conflict reveal a lack of understanding of the actual situation. (the like of which is also happening in El Salvador, Haiti, and countless other lands).

Let's discuss the IRA, Janet. You've stated they're violent; but you never bothered to define violence, so I will. Violence is starving to death with your family, while foreigners export your grain for their profit; the British did this to all of Ireland in 1840 during the potato famine. Violence is taking land and homes from people for the purpose of giving the same to foreigners; the British also did this to the people of Ireland. Violence is being denied a job, basic freedoms and rights, and all of those things to which "civilization" lays claim, just because of your race; The British are still doing this today.

Yes, Janet, the IRA is using violent means, but compare that with the 800 years of violence committed upon the people of Ireland--before there was even an IRA. Do you deny people the right to protect their lives?

Incidentally, to the best of my knowledge, no one is really challenging the right of the Loyalists to live in Ireland. What is being challenged is the presence of the British army; and the racism that they perpetuate in the name of "peacekeeping."

As for Bobby Sands, you're dead wrong. You stated that he starved himself to death. I say that you don't even know what it was he was starving for. Were it that he were starving for food, I would concede to you that he did kill himself. However, Bobby Sands wasn't starving for food. He was starving for freedom--for rights. The British kept these from him. The British starved Bobby Sands, just as they are starving all of Northern Ireland's Nationalists. You see, Janet, Freedom is just as much a necessity for life as is food. Either of them, when denied to a human being, will bring death. For hundreds of years, the British have denied the Irish of the former — which makes the latter meaningless.

Bobby Sands is free now. Britain gave him his independance--the same independance that they've always offered to Ireland--death.

Somehow, I fail to see the generosity.

The nightmare isn't over

I want to commend Mark Mulcahy on his sensitive, empathetic commentary (Collegian, 5/6) "The Police Can't do it Alone" concerning last Sunday's reported gang-rape of a UMass student.

As Mulcahy so passionately pointed out, the nightmare is not yet over for this woman, or for any woman who refuses to remain silent after this hideous act of violence.

Mulcahy effectively made clear that rape is a man's, as well as a woman's, crisis. None of us is immune to the consequences of violence regardless of on whom it is perpetrated.

COMMENCEMENT 1981

10:00 am, Saturday, May 30

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

INSTRUCTIONS FOR PARTICIPANTS

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 am graduation morning, May 30, 1981. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to be assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of five formal invitations.

Faculty and Parents
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school or college.

Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends may wish to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Caps and Gowns
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be distributed from the Textbook Annex in the Physical Plant Building beginning April 27. There is no charge to degree candidates (Associate's, Bachelor's, Master's, Doctoral) for the cap, gown, tassel, and invitations. Please bring your ID. You must know what degree you are receiving and from which department.

Distribution Hours — April 27 - May 29, 10 am-4 pm, regular business days at the Textbook Annex. May 30 (Commencement Day), 8 am at the stadium (southwest corner).

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the Friday night before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the night of May 29. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-2591, by May 9, 1981.

Campus Center
Graduation Dinner, Top of the Campus Restaurant; reservations needed.
Graduation Brunch, Campus Center Room 1009; reservations suggested.
Coffee Shop, open 8 am - 4 pm.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available under the east and west stands at the north end of the stadium.

General Information
Diplomas will be mailed to graduates in the fall.
Medical facilities will be located in the van under Section 4 of the stands.
Public telephones will be located on the west side of the Facilities/Information Center.
Restrooms will be located at either end of the Facilities/Information Center at the south end of the stadium.

Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium, on the eastern and western walkways.
For additional information, contact the Office of Public Affairs, 303 Whitmore, 545-2560.

Commencement Ceremony Schedule

9 am—Robing for Commencement
- —MASTER'S and DOCTORAL candidates should assemble at the Northwest end of the stadium (on the gravel area);
- —Graduates from ARTS & SCIENCES should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area);

THAT'S JUST PERFECT! HOW MUCH WOULD IT COST?
WELL, THE IRIS IS FLOWN IN FROM HOLLAND, SO IT WOULD BE CLOSE TO $65 AN ARRANGEMENT.
OH, DEAR... I'M AFRAID THAT'S MUCH TOO EXPENSIVE.
OH? HOW MUCH WAS MADAM PREPARED TO SPEND?
ABOUT EIGHT DOLLARS A TABLE!
EIGHT DOLLARS?
I'M DREAMING, ARN'T I?
PERHAPS MADAM WOULD LIKE US TO ARRANGE SOME DANDELIONS FOR HER.

How nice. Some Mothers' Day gifts from our son, Rodney.
Yes, and a note.
Do read it.
Very well.
Thank you for the weekly checks you send me, without which these gifts would not be possible.
Love,
Rodney
How thoughtful.
Yes, I agree.
How thoughtful.

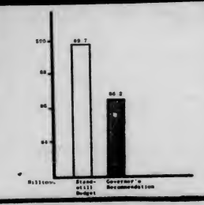
AFSCME Supports Full Funding for Higher Ed



Basic Principles

1. Eliminate waste, inefficiency, corruption and patronage in government - Not arbitrary cuts in budgets or level funding.
Arbitrary cuts mean reduced services to lower and middle income citizens. Such cuts may also jepordize substantial Federal funds.

2. Improve Tax Administration and Collections.
Employ more efficient procedures for collections and raise penalties for non compliance.

3. Raise new revenues based:
A.) Upon the ability of the group
B.) Recapturing some of the Prop. 2½ windfall for business to preserve vital services.
C.)Close loopholes that allow some groups to pay less than their fair share of taxes.

1. End contracting out essential jobs and services.
Reduce self replicating management positions and stop patronage.

2. Ameliorate effects of prop 2½:
Apply 2½ to Residential Property only (H 2383)
Grant local overide for 2½ (H 4003)
Exempt fixed costs from 2½ (H 4007)
Allow smaller towns currently under 2½% to increase their tax levy to 2½ (H 4002)
Flatten the reductions in tax rates to 2½% per year (H4004)

3. Tax Reform (a beginning)
A.) Close loopholes. A 5% excise tax on untaxed commericial services ie. Advertising, Computer or Data Processing Services, Commericial Art.
B.) Sales tax for corporations ie. Machinery
C.) Tax Commericial Bank assets as Savings Bank assets are taxed.
D.) Raise corporate income tax on utilities to narrow the gap between utilities and other corporations.
E.) Repeal capital gains exemptions tax unearned income the same as wages.

Rowers end season on up-note at Regatta

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's crew teams made an impressive showing at the Dad Vail Regatta held in Philadelphia this past weekend, with one boat winning silver and two boats winning bronze medals.

UMass brought six boats to Philly to race on the Schuylkill River and was able to have all of these boats qualify for the final round.

UMass was one of 56 schools to bring boats to this two-day competition which featured over 1800 competitors and represented the Division II national championship.

The women's varsity eight brought back the silver medals after being defeated by a very powerful University of Western Ontario crew by a four second margin. The UMass women held a slim lead through the halfway mark but were unable to hold off Western Ontario after that.

"Our goal was to pull as hard as we could and just be satisfied with the outcome, and that's what we did," women's coach Barb Roche said.

In the men's varsity eight race UMass, the defending champion had to settle for a third place finish in what was one of the closer finals seen at the Vail in recent years.

Though the UMass boat was in fifth place after 1500 meters, they put on a tremendous surge and were pulling up on the Coast Guard Academy and Trinity College when all three boats crossed the finish line. The time split among the three boats was only one second.

"They rowed as good a race as they possibly could," coach Dave Kumlin said. "They gave it their best effort. We just fell one second short."

Quite a few of the men in the varsity boat expressed disappointment at the result of the race but Kumlin said that such a reaction was only natural.

"When you win the gold one year and then a bronze the next there's bound to be some sort of letdown," Kumlin said.

The junior varsity eight went into the finals with high expectations after winning the New England title last week but had to settle for a fifth place finish. UMass began the race in fifth place and was unable to move up at all throughout the course.

"The junior varsity rowed well but appeared to get caught up in the excitement of the race. They rowed a much higher cadence than they should have," Kumlin said.

In the women's novice race a bad start proved to be fatal for the UMass boat as it finished its final heat in sixth place. At the start the UMass and Worcester Polytechnic Institute boats were too close to each other and were unable to row at full power for several strokes.

"After the novices crossed oars with WPI they were unable to regain control and couldn't get back what they had lost during those six or seven strokes," Roche said.

In the race that Kumlin termed "the most pleasant surprise of any UMass boat at the nationals" the freshman eight came from dead last at the 1000 meter mark of their final and pulled up to finish in third place, thus earning themselves bronze medals.

"There wasn't anyone down there happier than the freshmen when they had those bronze medals hanging around their necks," Kumlin said.

The freshmen four, which had only been rowing as a unit for the past two weeks, faced competition from boats which for the most part had been rowing together all season. Despite this, they managed to make the finals and finish a respectable fifth.

Both coaches were pleased with the overall performance of their people and attributed such a fine showing to all the hard work and dedication that the team members showed throughout the course of what can only be termed nine grueling months of workouts.

Both coaches also said that the seniors on their teams played an important role in the making of such a successful season.

Seniors on the women's team are co-captains Cindy Boyak and Sarah Piermarini and Candice Lee.

The men will lose captains Pete Ventre and Jack Frackelton, as well as Bob Murray, Pat Bronder, Paul Ordway and Barry Wilkinson.

Trackwomen end season at Eastern Championships

By JAMES M. GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts runners Karen Snow, Micki Callahan and Judy McCrone ended their spring season last weekend at the Eastern track and field championships held at Penn State.

For senior Snow it was an appropriate ending to a college career that has seen her become a UMass record holder and one of the best javelin throwers in New England. Snow placed second in the Easterns with a throw of 149'6". It was her second best throw of the season, being short of her school record of 151'3" which she set at Springfield College three weeks ago.

"She's improved a lot this year and I've been very pleased with her performances. This season she's improved her best from 139 feet to 151," coach Ken Banda said.

Placing seventh in the seven event heptathalon was UMass' Callahan with a personal best of 4,145 points. Callahan ran her third best time ever in the hurdles with a 15.7 and ran her fastest 200 meters ever in 26.9. It was only her third time competing in the heptathalon which includes the hurdles, shot put, high jump, 200 meters, javelin, long jump and 800 meter run. Callahan has been the top point scorer for UMass this season.

"Micki and Karen have been putting in enough time to make them ready for National competition. They have worked really hard to get to where they are." Banda said.

Junior Judy McCrone ran in the 3000 meter run but did not place in the field which included 18 of the best runners in the East. McCrone was nearly 30 seconds off her best time in the event. She went through the mile in 5:06 but faded in the later stages of the race.

"Karen Snow really came through. She was the best javelin thrower from New England in this meet. It was a good way to end her college career. She has a lot of potential to improve if she competes after college," Banda said.

Rocketball is ugly but effective

BOSTON (AP) — Del Harris calls it Rocketball. Billy Paultz calls it just plain ugly.

The brand of basketball being played by the Houston Rockets may not be very stylish, but it certainly has been effective.

The Rockets, who were only 40-42 during the regular season and are seeking to become the first team with a losing record to win a National Basketball Association championship, have split the first four games of the title series with the Boston Celtics by hitting the boards hard, playing gritty defense and carefully controling the tempo of each game.

They bounced back from Saturday's 94-71 embarrassment with a solid performance Sunday, when a 28-17 edge off the offensive boards helped them to a 91-86 victory to even the series at 2-2.

The best-of-seven series resumes Tuesday night in Boston Garden, with Game 6 in Houston's Summit on Thursday night. A seventh game, if needed, would be played here Sunday afternoon.

"Right now I'm starting to think that this is a fairy tale that's going to come true," said Rockets forward Robert Reid, who has hounded Boston star Larry Bird throughout the series, limiting him to 53 points in four games and just eight points in each of the last two games.

"Our offense needs some punch and I'm going to have to start looking to score more," conceded Bird. "If I can go to the hole and get a few hoops, it will be easier to sneak a few passes inside."

But going to the hole and sneaking anything inside are not very easy against Rocketball.

Regents to cut $5m. more

By KEVIN MCGUIRE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Massachustts Board of Regents Chairman James R. Martin said yesterday Governor Edward J. King has instructed the regents to prepare recommendations for an additional $5 million cutback in the state's higher education budget.

"The Governor has asked the board (of regents) to consider review of the budget and make recommendations to him," said Martin.

Martin said cuts were going to be made in all state programs to provide the necessary funds that will be sent to aid cities and towns across Massachusetts suffering from the effects of Proposition 2½. The Judiciary and higher education were being given relatively light cuts compared to other state programs, said Martin.

These recommendations will have to be made within the next 10 days before the governor's budget is reported out of the House Ways and Means Committee onto the house floor before moving on to the senate.

The regents had previously lowered their 1982 budget recommendation of $413.1 million to $360 million upon King's instructions; the University of Massachusetts-Amherst was then scheduled to receive $81.1 million. Martin said he did not know where the new cuts would be made.

Meanwhile, UMass President David C. Knapp is expected to make a major announcement today at UMass Board of Trustee meeting concerning possible widespread layoffs and a cutback in high technology research.

He is also expected to criticize King and the state legislature for cutting UMass' budget, even though the university is the only state agency generating new revenue (through increased tuition), said a source close to the president.

In further business the regents delegated the authority to make basic personnel decisions to the ten state colleges' individual boards of trustees.

These boards can now hire, fire, promote and grant leaves of absence to their schools' employees in accordance with policy set by the Board of Regents.

Regent George H. Ellison went on record saying he disapproved of the resolution, that it was "clearly in violation of the contract that we made in good faith with the Union." Ellison was former chairman of the now-defunct ten-state college board of trustees which negotiated the existing collective bargaining contract with the faculties.

Chancellor-designate of the regents, John B. Duff, said his regents' counsel had advised him that the resolution was legal.

"You can take this power (to make personnel decisions) back sometime in the future if the trustees abuse it," added Duff.

The regents' Boston Task Force, studying the proposed merger of UMass-Boston and Boston State College, as well as Roxbury Community College and Bunker Hill Community College, was scheduled to present their recommendations, but task force members said, they still had not finalized their proposals.

"It's back to the drawing board," said Regent George W. Hazzard.

In other business the board voted to give Duff "signatory authority" for the regents when he assumes his full-time status on June 1. The board also approved a trust fund to cover regent expenses not taken care of in existing legislation and also approved the appointment of Dr. William Hogan to replace Duff as president of the University of Lowell.

Undergrad senate to discuss budget recommendations

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

A public budget hearing to discuss undergraduate student senate budget committee recommendations for next year will be held Friday night and a special Senate meeting for further discussion of the budget is scheduled for Monday night, the undergraduate student senate announced yesterday.

Barrington Henry, chairman of the budget committee said the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) budget recommendations are nearing completion and all that remains to be done is to iron out the $20,000 difference between proposed allocations of the committee and the diminished income of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF).

Henry said problems in budgeting have arisen due to next year's projected decrease in enrollment at the university. The decrease, coupled with the SGA's refusal to raise the $79 annual SATF fee, means the budget committee has around $70,000 less to allocate next year.

The committee also must automatically allocate annual fixed amounts to certain organizations, regardless of the SATF, Henry said. These groups are the Distinguished Visitors Program, which receives $.75 per student; Union Program Council, which receives $1.50 per student; and the transit service, which receives $10 per student.

The Student Senate decided that, in order to help relieve the budget problems, they would discontinue funding the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students (CCEBS), and the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP).

A portion of both programs' budget has been supplied annually by the SATF, but the Student Senate has now asked the university administration, which is both programs' major funder, to entirely fund the groups.

Ed Lee, speaker of the Student Senate, said yesterday that both programs are academic, and should have been supported by administration.

Senator Linda Geary said, "The fundamental problem lies in the fact that the university currently has a three percent Third World population, and does not care if it goes up or down." She noted that the senate has not received what it considers a commitment from the administration to fund CCEBS and BCP.

Esther Terry, associate provost, said yesterday she assured Henry of the administration's intention to continue funding of CCEBS and BCP.

Terry said the administration has funded the programs every year, and although the university budget has not been determined for next year, "the administration is committed to supporting BCP and CCEBS."

Terry said she realized the budget pressures the SGA must handle, but added, "I hope they can realize that we are all in this together."

Women faculty don't get tenure due to 'weakness'

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

Women faculty at this University have failed to receive tenure because they have been "systematically misdirected" into service roles such as working on committees and advising students said Deputy Provost Robert Sleigh, member of the tenure review board of the Provost's office.

Sleigh said he has noticed a pattern of women tenure candidates being weak in the research area as a result of this overemphasis.

University tenure requirements state that a candidate must show excellence in two of the following three areas: teaching, research and service. Candidates must be at least "strong" in the third area. Sleigh said that an overabundance of excellence in one area cannot make up for a deficit in another area. This has been a problem for women tenure candidates, he said.

Of the 33 faculty eligible for tenure this year only eight were women and of the 23 positively recommended candidates only four were women, said Sleigh. The four remaining female candidates have not yet received tenure because of a weakness in the area of research, however the cases are still under consideration, Sleigh said.

"If a profile is weak in research because the person is weak in research, that's the way it goes, but if the profile is weak in research not because of a scholarly lacking of the person but because, for one reason or another, they have been overextended in the service area then we have a real tragedy on our hands," Sleigh said.

Members of the Women's Caucus of the Faculty Senate have suggested that women faculty refuse to do more than the minimal service required to eliminate the problem. This solution is not perceived as the most workable by some members of the caucus since it would eliminate women's input into the decision making process on campus. "If women refuse (to do service work) there are no women involved and that's not what we want either," said one member.

Another member of the Caucus suggested that the three areas required for tenure are not weighed equally and that an over-emphasis is placed on research. "Psychological studies have shown that we tend to devaluate areas that women become involved in and service has obviously been devalued," said Margret Culley acting director of the Women's Studies program. In response, Sleigh said that this may be true but the tenure requirements must be met and a candidate weak in research does not meet those requirements.

After being reviewed and recommended by departmental and college review boards the tenure applications are forwarded to the Chancellor and the Provost who often coordinate their final recommendations, Sleigh said. If the Provost's review board feels competent to review the research of the candidate they do so, if not, they rely heavily on the recommendation letters from outside scholars, he said.

World and national news

Senate approves Reagan budget

WASHINGTON — The Senate overwhelmingly approved a 1982 budget limit of $700.8-billion last night, handing President Reagan a second major victory within days for his proposed tax and spending cuts.

The vote was 78 to 20 in favor of the non-binding plan, which is similar on virtually all major points to the $689-billion measure passed last week by the Democratic-controlled House.

Aides said House and Senate negotiators would begin work Wednesday on ironing out the differences — mostly technical — and expressed hope a compromise could be approved in both houses by the end of the week.

The final outcome of the Senate vote was never in doubt, since most of the majority Republicans and many Democrats had long indicated they would support the Reagan-backed proposal, which recommends a $50.5 billion deficit in 1982. It calls for a balanced budget in 1984, but that goal is contingent upon more than $22 billion in future spending cuts not yet identified by the administration.

Council favors bill to curb spending

BOSTON — In a surprise move, the Massachusetts House yesterday gave initial approval to a bill to curb Boston Mayor Kevin H. White's spending powers, a limit the City Council has tried to get for months.

The measure would give the council control over year-end transfers of funds. Proponents contend the transfer tactic is a key tool by which White takes care of patronage and "payroll patriots."

At present, state law permits mayors to transfer funds from one agency to another without council approval during the last three weeks of the fiscal year, from June 10-June 30. The pending bill, which has a long way to go before enactment, would make transfers subject to a two-thirds vote of the council.

Meanwhile, White and the City Council are locked in a tug-of-war over an emergency financial plan; the House last week rejected a bailout bill.

The council has been seeking to put new controls on the mayor which White won't accept. It has refused to approve White's own plan to sell $75 million in bonds, which the city's financial community generally supports.

Second IRA hunger striker dies after 59 days of fasting

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — IRA prisoner Francis Hughes, 25, died in Maze prison yesterday after 59 days without food, the second hunger striker in a week to die in a campaign to win political status from Britain for imprisoned Irish nationalists.

Hughes died a week after fellow IRA prisoner Bobby Sands, 27, succumbed in the 66th day of his fast. Three other Irish nationalist prisoners are on hunger strike.

The two, and three other prisoners still fasting at the Maze, were trying to force the British government to grant imprisoned IRA guerrillas privileges that would give them political prisoner status. Britain said it would not concede because to do so would give legitimacy to the IRA terrorist campaign to end British rule here.

DPU probes last winter's natural gas shortage

BOSTON — Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co. did all it could to pump emergency supplies to Massachusetts during last winter's natural gas shortage, the firm's vice president testified yesterday.

James R. Keys told a hearing of the state Department of Public Utilities that the company's pipeline operated at peak capacity during the energy emergency that forced school and business shutdowns in January.

He said pipeline pressure prevented the Houston-based firm from increasing its capacity of supply shipments.

Communist participation in his government.

As Mitterrand set about building a coalition to rule France, the market was inundated by sell orders. Buyers were outnumbered, and for that reason, the start of trading was delayed 45 minutes.

Even though the session was extended a half-hour to make up for the delay, only 104 of the exchange's 200 issues were traded.

Prices fell about 10 percent on average and some issues dropped 22 percent, but the flood of orders prevented officials from calculating an exact market indicator.

Syria fires missles at Israeli jets, no damage reported

CHTAURA, Lebanon — Syria fired anti-aircraft missiles at Israeli jets over the eastern Bekaa Valley yesterday. None of the planes were hit in the salvo, Syria's first use of the missiles since it moved them into Lebanon April 29, spurring the most dangerous confrontation with Israel since the 1973 war.

The Israeli military command confirmed the surface-to-air missiles were fired and said the jets were on a routine reconnaissance flight over the Bekaa Valley, but didn't give any other details. Syria had no comments.

Children's TV programming could be hurt by Reagan's cuts

BOSTON — Federal budget cuts and "censorship" by groups like the Moral Majority threaten to undermine recent gains made in television programming for youngsters, the president of Action for Children's Television said yesterday in presenting the group's annual awards.

"If the Reagan administration succeeds in its budget cuts, public broadcasting could cease to be an alternative, especially in children's programming," said Peggy Charren, whose organization has spent the last 13 years working for more diverse programming for young people.

UM students visit reps. for support of higher ed.

By KEVIN MCGUIRE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — A dozen University of Massachusetts at Amherst students yesterday visited their state representatives urging greater support for higher education, and later met to discuss strategy in the State House with state Rep. James G. Collins, (D-Amherst) House chairman of the Education committee.

"The main responsibility is on the shoulders of public higher education," said Collins.

"It's important that the message is clear and specific, and that 500-1,000 phone calls come in (to the House) during the next week," said Collins.

Collins is expected to propose a floor amendment adding a specific, although not yet determined amount of money to the UMass-Amherst budget appropriation in about two weeks. The House Ways and Means budget will be made public this Monday, according to Ken Moore, one of the UMass students responsible for organizing the day's events.

David C. Brainerd, a UMass freshman from Patterson Dormitory, met with two representatives and aides to two other representatives in his rounds through the State House yesterday.

"Most of them were sympathic but non-committal. They said that every group was lobbying this week, and that it was just too early to tell until the House Ways and Means committee came out with their budget this Monday," said Brainerd.

Collins said that 15-20 phone calls are enough to compel a legislator to vote accordingly.

Fine Art Center finalizes 1981-82 concert series

By ANNE KIRBY
Collegian Staff

After negotiations with many artists, the Fine Arts Center Concert Series at the University of Massachusetts has finalized the 1981-82 season.

Opening the 1981-82 theater season at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center will be the award winning Broadway musical, A Chorus Line.

According to Judith Allen, Director of Programming for the Fine Arts Center Concert Series, "A Chorus Line is back by popular demand after being so well received last fall." Two shows of A Chorus Line will be held on September 20 with tickets for UMass students being half price as they are for all performances.

Students at the University are given the opportunity to "complement and complete their education and enhance their lives," through the Fine Arts Center Concert Series, Allen said. Probably at no other time will students be given the opportunity to see such a variety of performers at such a low price.

Always performing before a sell-out crowd at UMass, Marcel Marceau will be returning to the Fine Arts Center as a special attraction on March 15. Also featured as special attractions will be Groucho, a comedy play and Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol."

The 1981-82 season offers a variety of series with something for everyone. Series include The Broadway Theater Series, Musical Matinee Series, Concert Series, Dance Series, Duke Ellington Series, Emerging Artists Series, and a variety series that will offer an assortment of events.

"We feel we have developed a well-balanced program that features both perennially popular attractions like Broadway theater, Marcel Marceau and the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and new performers like cellist Leonard Rose, trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, and a group of talented young classical soloists," Allen said.

Although next year's schedule of events is set, cuts in the federal budget threaten to cut the following year's series. Arts organizations usually generate funds that are matched by the government. The impact of the federal budget cuts in the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) will be similar to a double cut, Allen said.

Generally speaking, 44 percent of the audience is students. Monies to make performances at the Fine Arts Center accessible to students is received from federal grants, the NEA, and private sources. Although some private sources will still donate, the incentive will not be there without the matched funds from the government, Allen said.

Graduate senate hears of TA layoff announcement

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Teaching Assistant layoffs of up to 88 percent in certain departments in the school of Humanities and Fine Arts are scheduled for next year, the Graduate Student Employees Committee said last night at the Graduate Student Senate meeting.

Committee members said planned TA layoffs include 64 percent of the French and Italian Department's, 50 percent of the Comparitive Literature Department's, and 88 percent of the Art Department's.

Senate members expressed concern that the Senate was allegedly not notified of the layoffs directly from the school's dean, and instead learned of them through individual TAs and department heads.

The Senate voted to send formal complaints concerning the layoffs to the dean of the school of Humanities and Fine Arts, Jeremiah Allen, and to Provost Loren Baritz.

In other actions, the Senate heard the results of a referendum conducted among graduate students concerning the financially troubled University of Massachusetts Transit System. According to the referendum results, 80 percent of students polled favored increasing the amount of money they pay to the system, rather than experience a decrease in service.

The university's approximately 5000 graduate students currently pay $43,000 annually to the Transit System, said Jack Delmond, GSS president.

The Senate also voted to accept the constitution of the Arts Council Committee, which included provision for membership allowing six undergraduate student members, six faculty members, three graduate student members, and two university staff members. The Arts Council, which is supported by an annual $3 per student fee, is responsible for most of the university's Fine Arts programs, Delmond said.

The GSS announced plans for a Phonothon, in which graduate students will phone alumni and parents of students, asking that they petition their state representatives for support of the UMass budget, currently up for debate in the House of Representatives.

The Senate voted their four officers annual pay raises from $4,000 to $4,400, in order that the Graduate School would grant the officers tuition waivers. The GSS currently pays the four officers approximate $1,000 annual tuition, Delmond said, and that $4,000 savings, minus the $1,600 salary hike, will allow the senate to realize a $2,400 total savings.

The GSS defeated a motion to go on record condemning alleged British "acts of oppression" resulting in the death of Bobby Sands and other Irish Republican Army members, and condemning the "terrorist" activities of the IRA.

The Senate also voted to accept the constitution of the Arts Council Committee, which included provision for membership allowing six undergraduate students members, six faculty members, three graduate student members, and two university staff members. The Arts Council, which is supported by an annual $3 per student fee, is responsible for most of the university's Fine Arts programs, Delmond said.

Peace group supports halt of arms race at D.C. rally

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

The Women's Party for Survival, a national peace group, and individuals from various disarmament groups joined together in Washington, D.C. last Sunday and Monday to call a halt to the nuclear arms race by marching and rallying at the White House.

Frances Crowe, a western Massachusetts coordinator of the American Friend's Service Committee, said, "The signs were good, the spirits were high and the participation was outstanding." Crowe relayed march information to the Collegian yesterday.

Hilda Mason, a supporter of disarmament and a rally organizer told a crowd of thousands, "Tomorrow is today and we are now at war with the government. Poor people are victims of the government's budgeting over $500 billion towards nuclear advancement. Many people die of hunger each day, yet the government keeps spending money on nuclear weapons."

Helen Caldicott, founder of the Women's Party for Survival, read a recent endorsement made by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), which stated that American people will not have any protection under a nuclear war, Crowe said.

On Monday morning, the women brought signed petitions to members of Congress showing that Americans supported a nuclear moratorium.

Crowe said, "Some leaders were indifferent towards these petitions. A congressional aide to Rep. Silvio Conte (R-Mass.) admitted that he hadn't seen any signs that Americans were suffering from the increased military aid for weapons. He felt that college students shouldn't worry about their financial aid cutbacks because they would get it all back very soon."

Slain black youth found in wooded area

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Another black youth was found asphyxiated in a wooded area Tuesday — 17-year-old William Barrett, who had been missing only a few hours. Authorities said they hoped the speed of the discovery might help them turn up evidence to solve the murders of 26 other young blacks.

DeKalb County Public Safety Director Dick Hand said an autopsy showed the cause of death was asphyxiation "consistent with ligature strangulation." Fifteen of the earlier victims in the string of slayings also were asphyxiated.

"There was minimal evidence of a struggle," Hand said.

Barrett's body was found in a wooded area of suburban DeKalb County between 1 a.m. and 2 a.m. EDT, about the same time he was reported missing by his mother, said DeKalb police spokesman Chuck Johnson. Police said Barrett was last seen late Monday afternoon.

Johnson said he expected the case to be turned over to a special Atlanta police task force investigating the deaths of the 26 other young blacks during the past 22 months. But Atlanta police spokeswoman Beverly Harvard said Barrett's name had not been added to the task force list by Tuesday afternoon.

"We feel there are sufficient similarities in the case to warrant investigation...however we do not have sufficient proof at this time to connect this case with the other cases," Hand said.

Officials said Barrett, 5 feet 4 and 125 pounds, was fully clothed, unlike the most recent of the 26 other victims who were clad only in their undershorts.

Hand would not comment on whether police had a suspect in the case or whether any evidence was recovered with the body.

The task force is investigating the slayings of 26 black youths since July 1979. One youth — 10-year-old Darron Glass, who was reported missing last September — remains on the task force missing list.

Before Barrett's body was found, the most recent victim had been Jimmy Payne, a 21- year-old of slight stature whose body was pulled from the Chattahoochee River on April 27. He had been reported missing four days earlier.

Johnson said Barrett had been dead approximately three hours when his body was found by a motorist near Interstate 20 just outside the Atlanta city limits. Four of the earlier victims lived or were last seen within a mile of the area where Barrett's body was discovered.

First Step to Summer Job

Young people planning to work for the first time this summer should be aware that the first step is to get a social security number — and the time to take that first step is right now.

Many young people may not realize that getting a social security number takes a little longer today than it did for their parents. Today it takes about 6 weeks to receive a social security number and card.

The major difference is that the application is now more closely scrutinized to assure the applicant's correct identity, citizenship, or lawful alien status, and age. When the social security system first started 45 years ago and in its early years, the concern was to make it as easy as possible for people to get a social security card. Now that the system is a household word — the Nation's primary means of providing an income to a family at the retirement, death, or disability of the breadwinner — the major concern is that the card and the rights it represents are protected from fraud and abuse.

Freedom for E. Timor discussed

(From Portugal) — U.N. Secretary General Kurt Walheim arrived in Lisbon Monday for talks with the Portugese government about freedom for the former Portugese colony of East Timor. East Timor has been occupied by Indonesian troops for the past six years. The Red Cross reports that over two hundred thousand Timorese have been killed by the Indonesian troops. East Timor, whose people are of African and Portugese descent, has a population of only about one million.

Nigerian economy booming

(From Nigeria) — Industrial growth in Nigeria exceeded that of most European nations and the United States this year. The Nigerian economy fueled by its petroleum sector is one of the most vibrant on the African continent and rapid growth has resulted in a shortage of professionals and technicians.

Namibians killed by S. Africa mine

(From Angola) — Eight Namibian civilians were killed near the Namibia-Angolan border when they encountered a land mine that had been set by the South African army.

Civil war in Uganda gains support

(From Uganda) — Francis Boigny, a senior official in the opposition party in Uganda's parliament, said many within his party now support the armed struggle against the elected government of President Milton Obote. However, Paul Semagarare, head of the opposition Uganda Democratic Party said Boigny was in the process of being replaced as secretary-general of the party and did not speak for the party.

Emergency meeting cancelled classes

The Mechanical Engineering department cancelled classes for one hour yesterday while an emergency meeting was held between department members and Provost Loren Baritz.

Larry Murch, chairman of the Personnel Committee of the mechanical engineering department said classes were cancelled between 11 a.m. and 12 noon because, "We wanted to have a showing of faculty," to discuss administrative procedures with the Provost.

Murch would not reveal details of the meeting, which he said was strictly intra-departmental.

Deputy Provost Robert C. Sleigh Jr. also declined to release details of the meeting until Baritz conferred with Russel C. Jones, Dean of the School of Engineering.

Sleigh said "The issue is internal to the department, but is also of substantial interest to the rest of the university."

Six to receive honorary degrees

Six people, including Harvard University professor Archibald Cox, will receive honorary degrees at the University of Massachusetts commencement ceremonies May 30.

Other recipients include former UMass Board of Trustees chairman Joseph Healy, noted Black poet Gwendolyn Brooks, Smith College President Jill Conway, UMass astrophysicist John Strong and U.S. News and World Reports publisher William G. Dunn.

Dunn is a 1950 graduate of UMass.

More details on the six will be available tomorrow.

The former UMass Board of Trustees decided on the recipients during an executive session of their Dec. 3, 1980 meeting.

Annual ceremony held for cadets

By Tom Faison
Collegian Staff

More than 300 people crammed into the Campus Center Auditorium yesterday, as the combined elements of the University of Massachusetts Army and Air Force ROTC Units held their annual awards presentation ceremony.

More than 30 cadets were presented with awards in categories ranging from military and academic excellence to proficiency in leadership and practical skills.

Opening remarks were made by Air Force Colonel Vincent E. Gormley, Professor of Aerospace studies at UMass. During his speech, Col. Gormley noted that the ceremony was taking place on Mother's Day and there was a very definite link between the two occasions. "Without mothers" Gormley said, "The achievements being recognized could never have taken place."

Following the opening speech, the awards for the Army cadets were presented by Army Captain Bruce D. Bachus to young men and women of the UMass community who ranked in the very top of their respective classes in the fields of military science.

Following the presentations, closing remarks were made by Lt. Colonel James C. Faison of the UMass Army ROTC program who took the oppurtunity to congratulate the cadets again and wish the best of luck to the rest of the men and women in the cadet corps who had shown such exemplary performances in the past and "who will undoubtably show similar outstanding performances in their military and civilian careers in the future."

UM police report on campus thefts

A vacuum cleaner valued at $250 was reported stolen from the basement of the John F. Kennedy tower in the Southwest Residential Area, University of Massachusetts police said. The incident was reported at 7:52 a.m. yesterday, they said.

In another incident, a pair of pearl earrings valued at $130 were reported stolen from Chadbourne residence hall in the Central Residential Area at 11:52 a.m. yesterday, police said.

Caps and gowns are now available

Graduating seniors may pick up their caps and gowns at the Textbook Annex from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday until May 29 and on Commencement Day starting at 8 a.m. A set of five invitations for each senior is also available at the Textbook Annex. Caps and gowns do not have to be returned after the graduation ceremony.

Students planning to attend the Campus Center's graduation day brunch or dinner should make reservations at the Campus Center or the Top of the Campus restaurant.

Seniors participating in commencement ceremonies should arrive at Alumni Stadium by 9:00 a.m.

Foreign language conference set

The American Youth Language Association, an organization devoted to promoting interest in foreign languages among students, will hold a spring conference tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the third floor lounge of Herter Hall.

Associate Professor Clayton Hubbs of Hampshire College, editor of Transitions magazine, will speak on "Global Illiteracy and How to Overcome It." AYLA President Karen Hermann, a UMass doctoral candidate, will discuss future directions of the AYLA, and Frank Fagundes, of UMass' Portuguese and Spanish department, will speak on the study of Portuguese.

Computer dedication to take place today

A $330,000 computer that helps engineers with three-dimensional design will be dedicated at the School of Engineering today by the Digital Equipment Corporation Vice President Andrew C. Knowles.

Knowles, a graduate of UMass, will dedicate the computer to University President David Knapp and Amherst Chancellor Henry Koffler at 11:00 a.m. in room 114 of the Engineering East building.

Gnomon Copy employees petition for unionization

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The ten employees of Gnomon Copy of Amherst emphasizing wages, benefits and working conditions, unaminously petitioned the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) last Monday for recognition as members of Local 267 of the United Electrical Workers.

Spokeswoman for the employees, Jeanine Rioux, said the employees have not been recognized by the NLRB because the Gnomon corporation of Cambridge has asked for time to campaign against union efforts as allowed by law.

Manager of Gnomon Copy Michael Wheatley said he had no objection to the employees speaking as a group but saw no reason why the employees would want a union.

"A large national union in a ten person shop is absurd." Wheatley said.

Rioux said the major reasons for organizing were: a lack of sick days; a pay scale substandard to the average skilled machine operator; and the use of carcinogenic ink.

Wheatley said the thought the conditions; at Gnomon were good and hoped the employees' grievances could be worked out "within the shop."

"The effort to organize is something that should have happened along time ago," Rioux said.

Rioux said she believes that the union will provide job security, raises, health and pension plans and an improved working environment.

Wheatley said the union would help him do his job as manager by setting out guidelines for running the shop. He said it would also limit the flexibility that could be shown to employees because of the contract.

No date has been set for the union balloting, Rioux said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The Ulster problem is an Irish problem

The current conflict in Northern Ireland is readily understood from the perspective of Britain's colonial history. After losing the Irish War of Independence (1919-21), Britain faced the dilemma of maintaining its colony without direct rule. Having a large and loyal settler population in northeastern Ireland provided the ideal solution: partition.

Thus 26 of Ireland's 32 counties were handed over to the right wing of the Irish Nationalist forces who became the government of Southern Ireland. Meanwhile the pillage of the country by British bankers, landlords and their various Irish cronies continued as per usual. Today the so-called Republic of Ireland provides a tax haven for British, U.S. and other multinational corporations, mints its own celtic coins, flies a green flag, and shares with Northern Ireland the highest profit and unemployment rates in Europe.

The remaining 6 counties of northeast Ireland (carefully selected to insure a two-thirds majority of British Loyalists) were partitioned off to create a sectarian monstrosity known as Northern Ireland. Lord Craigavon, the first Prime Minister of Nothern Ireland, quickly elucidated the basic constitutional principle for the new British colony: "A Protestant Parliament for a Protestant people." Had he been in Africa, "A White Parliament for a White people" would have done just as nicely.

In Northern Ireland religion has served as a sectarian dividing line to oppress the native Irish Catholics (Nationalists) ever since the British Protestant settlers (Loyalists) first colonized that part of Ireland back in the early 1600s.

The legislative backbone of the Northern Ireland colony was the Special Powers Act of 1922. Legalizing internment without charge or trial, banning of newspapers, political parties, demonstrations, etc., this legislation graced the Northern Ireland statute books for 50 years until replaced by the even more repressive Emergency Provisions Act in 1972. For Nationalists such statutes (backed by the Northern Ireland police, the Royal Ulster Constabulary [RUC] police), have meant 60 years of dole lines, ghettos, and racist abuse. For the Loyalists, the same laws (and the sectarian state which supports them) have meant substantial benefits in jobs, housing, social services, etc. (eg., Nationalist unemployments figures are always two to three times higher than Loyalist). The real beneficiaries, however, have been the British government and its multinational allies for which Northern Ireland has long provided strategic military functions and of course sizable profits (eg., $2 billion in 1972 alone).

In recent years, the Northern Ireland natives have gotten uppity. Taking a cue from the U.S. civil rights movement, the exploited Nationalists took to the streets in 1968 in peaceful marches demanding equal rights (voting, job access, etc.) as citizens of Northern Ireland. As in all colonial regimes, the first line of defense fell to the settler forces. The RUC batoned the marchers off the streets in 1968 and then led Loyalist pogroms into the Nationalist ghettos in 1969, killing a dozen people. Instead of granting reforms, the British Army came in to shore up the Loyalist state. The Provisional IRA was not even in existence at the time.

In August of 1971 British concentration camps opened in Northern Ireland, soon filling with 100s of Nationalist internees. In January 1972 British paratroopers opened fire on a peaceful anti-internment rally, killing 14 unarmed Nationalists on a day now remembered as Bloody Sunday. As in all national liberation struggles, the rapid escalation of violence since 1969 has cost the oppressed Nationalist community the vast majority of victims, nearly 80 percent of the over 2000 deaths.

By 1972, under the spotlight of international publicity, Britain was forced to phase out its concentration camps in favor of a more "legitimate" system of conveyor belt justice for the Nationalists — the Diplock Courts, featuring seven days of pre-trial detention by Loyalist police without access to doctor or lawyer, documented use of torture to obtain pre-trial "confessions," non-jury trials before a single Loyalist judge, resulting in a conviction rate of over 95 percent with 85 percent of these made on the basis of a "confession" alone.

Before March of 1976, a Diplock conviction resulted in political status, as one would expect from such a kangaroo court. After that date with the international spotlight elsewhere, Britain attempted to criminalize the Irish national liberation struggle by withdrawing political status and requiring Diplock "convicts" to wear the prison uniform, the mark of a criminal. The Nationalist prisoners, including Bobby Sands (who had earlier held political status for a pre-1976 Diplock conviction), resisted the British attempt to criminalize their struggle. They fought back with the best weapon they had — refusal to wear the criminal uniform. The British authorities, with the arrogance that exemplifies their colonial history, sought to break the prisoners by systematically removing their rights (reading and writing materials, visits from relatives, etc.). In 1978, the British took away toilet "privileges" from all prisoners who refused to wear the criminal uniform. For over two years nearly 500 Nationalist prisoners lived in cells filled with their own excreta (for women, menstrual fluid as well). After five years of this torture, Bobby Sands, Frankie Hughes, Raymond McCreesh, and Patsy O'Hara turned to the final weapon at their disposal in fighting for political status and ultimately for the freedom of their country from British domination.

Meanwhile British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, brutally muttering "a crime is a crime is a crime" under the intense glare of international opinion, is being pressured by the likes of Ted Kennedy and the British Labour members of Parliament to buy off the Loyalists and get on with "peaceful reunification" talks with the Irish Republic government, before they, too, lose all credibility in the eyes of the Irish people and Britain's last colony slips into the hands of the IRA and their Nationalist supporters, who are not about to hand it over to any multinational corporate interests.

Taking steps backward

If you're one of the 1.1 million women who had an abortion this year the Human Life Amendment could make you a criminal.

If you use an IUD, the HLA could make you an outlaw.

If you accompany your friend or lover to an abortion clinic you could be charged as an accessory to murder.

If you are a woman of color or a poor woman, it's already impossible to choose whether or not you want to have children, now that Medicaid funds have been cut — but if the HLA is passed that decision will finally be made for all of us.

And we can expect the number of deaths of full grown women beings to increase dramatically as we are forced into back alley abortion shops.

And there's more, if you miscarry during your pregnancy, you could be investigated to see if you caused it or not, if the HLA is passed.

A woman's life is a human life. The proposed Human Life Amendment implies a value judgment about whose life has priority, an either/or decision between a woman and a fetus.

Some people say that they just can't understand the great number of abortions each year, why so many women choose that option. Such a question really asks if woman are making flippant moral decisions, do they really agonize enough over their choices?

The statistics suggest to these people that we don't, that women choose abortion for their own "convenience." It's convenient for them not to believe that behind that gross number, there is that much poverty, that much despair, that much rape, that much incest, that much women battering. It's easier to believe that the number of abortions each year attests to the immorality of women, thus shifting the responsibility from the culture collectively to women alone.

The current HLA will send us back even further than the years before 1973, in that it declares a fertilized egg or fetus a "person" under the constitution giving the same rights and responsibilities as you and I. Laws defining murder, assault, kidnapping and manslaughter just to name a few would have to include the fetus as a potential victim. In other words crimes against pregnant women are crimes against two people.

Maintaining the right to determine if and when to have children, the right to control one's own body, is a fundamental part of women's freedom. Legislation like HLA opens the door to an all out assault, aimed at the core of our freedom, the right to choose, that will ultimately take away our ability to function as equal active members of society.

Eighty percent of the people in this country are pro-choice but less than one percent of these people are actively involved. We have the numbers and if we are to keep abortion a woman's right to choose...WE MUST ORGANIZE OUR MAJORITY. Tomorrow there is going to be a table set up in the Campus Center Concourse to write letters to your Congress person. Only WE can stop the Human Life Amendment. Act now. Act today.

The slave trade continues

Black slavery is alive and well. It is shocking to learn more than 100 years after the American Civil War that black Africans are still sold as chattel. Incredible as this may sound, the slave trade continues today in a number of Arab states.

Two organizations, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the British Anti-Slavery Society, claim there are more than 500,000 slaves on the Arabian peninsula, and another 250,000 in a number of North African Arab states. Furthermore, the numbers are on the increase, according to the above sources. In Saudi Arabia alone, an estimated 10,000 people are sold into slavery each year. (See, for example, Jonathan Derrick's "Africa's Slaves Today," page 143, 1975).

Historically, the sale of black Africans by Arab slave brokers is an old institution that preceded that of the Europeans by many years. However, by the end of the 19th century the slave trade in Western countries had virtually come to an end. It seemed for a period that the Arab slave trade would also cease, much like its European counterpart, but such has not been the case.

Details about the slave trade, including the prices that various slaves were bringing in the Saudi Arabian market as late as 1956, are given in an article which appeared on the front page of the Wall Street Journal on April 10, 1956. The concept on Arabs selling human beings in a market place may be abhorrent to most Westerners but, reports the Wall Street Journal, "enough evidence from authoritative witnesses has piled up to make it clear that the current slave traffic across the Arabian peninsula is brisk and getting brisker."

The article points out that despite the increase in traffic, the "supply is more than equalled by a rise in demand from petroleum-rich sheiks of Arabia." The increased demand inflated the price of slaves which meant a greater profit for the Arab slave brokers.

Where does today's slave traffic originate from? It is believed the traffic originates in a number of states: Nigeria, Mali, Mauritania, and Ethiopia, to name a few. The destination is usually Saudi Arabia.

The Nigerian newspaper Morning Post carried an article (November 4, 1961) that expressed concern over the fate of a group of Nigerian children. They were taken to Saudi Arabia, supposedly on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and never returned. The British Anti-Slavery Society's journal indicated that the children probably ended up as slaves ("Anti'-Slavery Reporter," March, 1962). This is one method of bringing young healthy blacks to the Arabian markets.

The British government, which until recently controlled much of the Middle East, was so concerned about the slave traffic that a special parliamentary debate, devoted entirely to the subject of slavery, was held on July 14, 1960.

The debate ("Official Report Vol. 225, NO. 104") contains testimony given by Viscount Maugham. He, like others, acknowledged that slavery did exist and gave several accounts of it in vivid detail. He also claimed that the demand for slaves had risen, "because a man is known by the number of slaves he has."

Many Arab governments have been sensitive to the adverse publicity the slave trade has caused. They want to enjoy the continued support of black Third World countries. Some states have for this reason "officially" banned the practice, although in actuality it still continues to this day. Such is the case, for example, in Saudi Arabia, which officially banned the slave trade in 1962. However, there are still a number of Arab states where the ownership and trading of black slaves is legal even today. These are the states of Muscat, Oman, Dhubai, and Qatar (Middle East Review, Winter 1976/77).

It is now standard practice for these governments to expel any reporter who attempts to write about the present situation. Still, there are eye-witness accounts, one of which was given by Eldridge Cleaver, the former Black Panther leader.

Cleaver, who returned to the United States in 1975 from self-exile in Algeria, wrote that, "Many Arab families that can afford to, keep one or two black slaves to do their menial labor. Sometimes they own an entire family. I have seen such slaves with my own eyes." (Boston Herald American, January, 1977).

All civilized people, both black and white, should insist on an end to the inhumane practice of slavery. The Arab world cannot expect Americans to listen to them seriously until they terminate the black African slave trade, once and for all.

No sympathy here

I'm sorry Myles Cavanagh, but your letter denouncing a previously "anti-Carp" article stirred no sympathy from me. You deliberately failed to address any of the points Mr. Maschi made. I think his sources of information were very good. You should too, for you (the Moonies) are the authors. He quoted directly from The World Student Times, the New Hope, and Reverend Moon himself. . Your "Messiah" is basically quoted as saying that those against us will die. If that's the type of philosophy you practice and preach, then you can throw my name in with Mr. Maschi's as a religious bigot!

Whose principles?

In response to Myles Cavanagh's letter "A Moonie is what I am" (Collegian, 5/11): How dare you! How dare you compare the "emotional bigotry" you claim surrounds Moonies to Nazism! More than once now I have heard members of CARP refer to the beliefs that oppose them as Nazi. As a Jew — as a human being — I am deeply offended and angered by your attempts to connect yourselves with the suffering inflicted on the Jewish people through the hideous actions of Nazis. Isn't this merely one of CARP's tactics to mask its own fascist tendencies?

I have been harassed by CARP members, by Moonies. I call it harassment when I am asked by total strangers, "Do you believe in God?" I call it harassment when the same strangers ask if I "think Judaism is all there is in life?" And after this, I find it sickening that you liken yourselves to Jews. Idle observations

The Western Massachusetts Latin America Solidarity Committee (WMLASC) has worked hard in our area this semester to educate people about the implication of U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

In the attempt to inform the campus community about the El Salvador situation, we have brought such speakers as Tulio Mendoza, a Salvadorean refugee seeking asylum in this country; Americo Duran, a representative of the Democratic Revolutionary Front; Sister Maria Russo, of the Maryknoll order (the same order as the sisters killed in El Salvador); and Salvadorean student representatives.

We feel that these respected speakers have legitimately represented the Salvadorean struggle — not one of a moderate government caught between left and right, but one of a despotic system of political and economic oppression against broad masses of Salvadoreans.

A recent column in the Collegian belittling progressive work on El Salvador made use of undocumented "facts" and idle observations. Supporters of the Salvadorean junta and current U.S. policy should do some homework on El Salvador.

Anyone is welcome to purchase the pamphlet, El Salvador Land Reform 1980-1981, put out by OxFam America, explaining why the land reform is a complete failure, continuing to deny benefits to the vast majority of landless peasants and acting as a cover for government directed repression. Another pamphlet of interest is A Report of the Permanent Tribunal of the Peoples on the Violation of Human Rights in El Salvador, which documents the role of the Salvadorean government as the primary source of atrocities. Our table will be set up Wednesday and Thursday of this and next week in the Campus Center.

We respect the rights of other groups and individuals to speak out, either critically or in support of the Salvadorean struggle. However, these and other basic rights do not exist for the Salvadorean people, and they will never exist under the Duarte regime, supported by the continuation of U.S. military and economic aid.

Generating paranoia

I was surprised and considerably dismayed to discover Richard Panzer as a guest columnist in Tuesday's Collegian. As a Yale student visiting friends here at UMass, I did not expect I would be subjected to the ravings of one of New Haven's most notorious Moonies on your editorial page. Certainly, I am in favor of freedom of expression — but I am uncertain as to the quality or accuracy of Panzer's statements regarding El Salvador. Do you really think it wise to legitimize CARP, the Unification Church and fascism in general by permitting them access to an editorial page which reaches some twenty thousand people?

Back in New Haven, we were foolish enough to make the same mistake. Panzer and his fellow Moonies sought to dominate the editoral pages of the Yale Daily News and the Yale Graduate/Professional by introducing issues which really did little but take up space and get CARP in the headlines. After all, how can you respond to right-wing extremists? One feels obligated to grant them an equal say, but soon discovers that this "say" amounts to little more than a denouncement of the U.S.S.R. and a plug for the Reverend Moon.

This attitude became even more apparent to the radical community in New Haven when Panzer (by far the most rabid of our local Moonies) started showing up at every demonstration, every teach-in, and at more than a few informal outdoor gatherings to disrupt our activities. This he did with disgusting predictability, indicating to some of us he was either very good at his homework, or getting assistance. The pattern of disruption usually consisted of a distribution of CARP literature, followed by vocal disruption of scheduled speakers through screaming, heckling, and finally a bullhorn. All the local Moonies would provide enthusiastic backup vocals to Panzer's lead. At demonstrations, they came equipped with props that would make Broadway proud — bear suits representing Russia, cages representing Russia, professionally printed signs denouncing Russia, etc., ad nauseum. We began to wonder how they managed to budget all these activities. Certainly, anyone in full control of their powers of deductive reasoning could determine that the local Moonies weren't earning much bread out there on the street from students. In fact, they alienated the Yale student body rather quickly. People became annoyed when Richard would make them late to class with his raps about world salvation and the Reverend Moon.

But enough of this background information; I digress from the issue at hand. Why let the whole cycle start anew in Amherst? Panzer was forced to leave New Haven because editors and organizers realized that CARP's intent was to distort issues and facts, rather than provide a rational point for debate. CARP exists purely as a disruptive force amidst progressive action. Sure, the Russians are imperialist bastards — but then so are the Americans. It's common knowledge. Neither government provides a sane alternative to mutual destruction. But it's more than a polarized issue. A cooperative attempt at world peace would be a much more constructive approach to the continued existence of the species. U.S. intervention in El Salvador is bad enough without generating paranoia about Russia's fictitious hand in this mess. With Moon's already-proven connections to the CIA and other terrorist groups, is it necessary to provide his groupies with yet another soapbox for fascism?

Men of action

Dear Members of the Massachusetts State Legislature:

I wish to commend you for your noteworthy reluctance to take any action that might hasten the much delayed payment of the so-called salary raise for the UMass faculty. You are men of action, doers of deeds, men of the world, men of deep pragmatic understanding.

I can well understand your total lack of respect for so spineless and sniveling a collection of apathetic gutless wonders as are to be found in the faculty offices at this institution. No wonder year after year you choose to give them a pay cut by "raising" their salary less than the inflation rate raises the cost of living. You must get quite a laugh out of their voting to cut their own salary. Here is a faculty that takes screwing after screwing, shaft after shaft, and utters not a peep, not a squeak.

What can such so-called educators possibly be teaching the children of this state by their behavior? What do they model for the young by their apathetic acceptance of the undermining of the financial base of what could be a great educational institution? It is certainly not a sense of responsibility to themselves, their families, or the educational goals for which this institution was established.

By all means delay these token raises. Hold them as long as possible. Squeeze every drop of interest out of the bank accounts holding those raises that you can. Use that money, which rightfully belongs to the faculty, to support Mayor White. He deserves it. There is a man of action. A doer like yourselves. Someone who can be respected and who deserves to be financed. And when you do, have no fear. No sound will rise from this campus. No strikes. No direct grading. No television interviews or press conferences. Graduation will proceed as usual. The faculty flunkies and stooges will march over in their funny gowns and play the game with great pomp, even in these circumstances. And as this semester comes to a close the students will take with them the lessons they have been taught by example: timidity, cowardice, passive self-deprecation, loss of self esteem, worthlessness and failure.

Rest assured, men of action, that even now as future budgets for the University face greater peril, faculty committees at every level are finding new ways to try to make do. They will undercut their colleagues, give more to the haves and less to the have-nots. They will fight for merit raises when everyone is falling behind. Others will fight against merit raises. But on one will fight you, dear representatives of the people. That is because there is no fight to be found in these mice.

Listen to the mentality so you can grasp how harmless this whole lot really is. One departmental union representative, when confronted with the insult that our recent contract is to the faculty, worked up all his nerve and replied, "Well, just remember, if we get more money someone else will be getting less." Now that is enlightened breadth of vision. With unon representatives like these we don't need a legislature to do us in. They'll do it for you.

I understand that none of this is news to you. I know you are aware that the faculty, mored in their status illusions, will take almost any financial abuse rather than give the appearance of being in any manner concerned with money. After all, are they not public servants? Are they not dedicated to the discovery and transmission of knowledge? How can they be expected to descend to the level of pecuniary affairs. Yes, I am sure this is all clear to you, dear legislators. My only purpose here is to commend you and urge you to continue your footdragging to the greater glory of our progressive state.

LACEY, RICK AND I ARE SO GRATEFUL TO YOU FOR LOANING US YOUR HOUSE FOR THE WEDDING...
WELL, IT'S MY GREAT PLEASURE, DEAR. HOW ARE THE PLANS COMING ALONG?
SO FAR WE SEEM TO BE ON TOP OF THINGS. I'M PICKING UP THE INVITATIONS TODAY.
HAVE YOU BEGUN MAKING UP YOUR GUEST LIST YET?
YES, AND THAT PARTS A SMALL NIGHTMARE. THE POSSIBILITIES FOR OFFENDING PEOPLE ARE JUST ENDLESS.
WELL, THOSE ARE THE PERILS OF A SMALL WEDDING, DEAR. WHEN DICK AND I GOT MARRIED, WE LOST SEVERAL DEAR FRIENDS THAT WAY.
OH, NO. HOW BIG WAS THE WEDDING?
LESS THAN 600. BUT PEOPLE ALWAYS THINK THERE'S ROOM FOR ONE MORE.

Sound Advice

Michael William Gilbert
The Call [Gibex]

By Rob Huffman
Collegian Staff

Collegian photo by Peter Jepsen

When Michael Gilbert plays his music for people, he dims the lights — never to total darkness, — but just dark enough to create an ethereal, dream-like atmosphere.

In truth, there is little to see, for Gilbert's is electronic music, created almost entirely in the recording studio. An Amherst resident, and technical supervisor of electronic music studios for Five Colleges Inc., Gilbert has just released his second album, The Call, on his own Gibex label.

As on Moving Pictures, Gilbert's first album, the music seems at first experimental, but ultimately reveals itself as highly structured and well realized. He works less with the familiar components of rhythm and melody, and more with creating unique sounds, colors, moods, shapes, and textures. His pieces can effortlessly blend electronically altered natural sounds into pure electronic tones with a calculated theatricality, or can rely on confident sequester rhythms which abruptly halt, jarring the listener into an uneasy, mysterious region of uncharted sounds.
uncharted sounds.

Where The Call differs from Moving Pictures is in its use of other musicians to augment Gilbert's far-ranging skills — (Moving Pictures was an entirely solo effort). Tim Moran's flute and saxophone are especially impressive, and other talented guests include drummer Royal Hartigan, guitarist Bob Rosser, conga drummer Charlie Miller, bassist Salvatore Macchia, and percussionist David Moss, who improvises wonderfully original sounds over a prepared tape part on "There Shall Come Soft Rains," the album's closing tune.

Like some of Brian Eno's recent work, The Call meshes high-technology sonic materials with the hypnotic, repetitive rhythms of African music. Gilbert acknowledges that both are drawing on music from more than one culture, but perceives his work as "less rock oriented in terms of its roots."

Indeed, The Call is hardly a rock'n'roll record. Listeners from all musical backgrounds, however, who seek inovation in contemporary music should find Michael Gilbert's The Call to be an intriguing aural experience.

UMass' Steve (Murray) Cramer delivers a pitch in a game earlier this season. Cramer and teammates travel across town today to take on Amherst College at 3:00.

Gorillas at UNH today

AROUND THE CREASE — The crowd of 8,000 at Saturday's game was the largest in New England lacrosse history. The main reason for the great turnout was the importance of the game in determining the Gorillas' playoff chances, but the seventy degree temperature and sunny skies certainly helped the cause. Good weather for sippin' and tippin'...All-American senior midfielder Pete Schmitz might be on the field at Durham today for the Gorillas' 3 p.m. matchup with the University of New Hampshire. Tri-captain Schmitz has missed the last four games due to a sprained knee injury sustained in a pre-game warmup...This will be the second game of the season between the two teams. Massachusetts edged the Wildcats 18-15 in a Boyden Field slugfest two weeks ago...Possibly unnoticed in the Gorillas' recent success has been the play of defensive midfielder Steve Martino. He's been outstanding in the last three games for Massachusetts, scooping ground balls, distributing well-placed hits to enemy attackers and hustling all over the field...Attacker Jim Weller needs 11 points in his next two games to set a new Gorilla season scoring record. Brooks Sweet's 87 points in 1979 is currently tops...Both Weller and tri-captain Chris Corin had goal-scoring shots that would have been worthy of an instant-replay Saturday. Weller faked a pass and flipped one in lefty over his shoulder and Corin popped his in between the legs of the Syracuse netminder after being knocked off his feet...Corin is now sixth on the all-time Gorilla scoring list.

PLAYOFF PICTURE — Massachusetts is fifth in the latest United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association (USILA) poll. Unbeaten Johns Hopkins and North Carolina are one-two, Army is third and Virginia is still fourth. The 11-1 Gorillas would have an excellent shot at making the top four if they won their remaining two games. They'll easily make the top final eight cutoff but top four would give them the home field in the playoffs.

Sportsism in the news is it really necessary?

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

Commentary

Racism and sexism are two fairly well-defined and well-known ideological basises of discrimination and the fieid of journalism, especially in the area of newspapers, is the target of the charge that racist and sexist overtones embellish its endeavors.

However, sexism and racism are not the only discriminatory "isms" in the newspaper world. A few recent incidences and one past example indicate that another new bias has come to light in newsprint, namely, sportsism.

On the weekend of April 25, the Northeast-Sylvan Area held its annual outdoor Quad Day concert. Usually when an event like this is held, with its usual combination of large attendance and consumption of alcoholic beverages, there tends to be some problems. The Collegian ran its pre-concert story on the Friday (the concert was held on the following Sunday) and it included the form statement from the organizers of the event that "they didn't expect any problems with the crowd." Apparently, these organizers were correct in their predictions and there were no problems at the concert, except for one.

Several burly men (not more than three) were at the event and they appeared intoxicated to some observers. These men chose not to limit their wrestling and roughhousing to their immediate group and included a passer-by, a mime who worked at the concert. They grabbed the man, poured beer on his head, and threw him in the mud.

The following week two letters appeared in the Collegian editorial page condemning the behavior of those involved. Granted, the men who assaulted the concert worker should have been condemned since their behavior was purposeless and cruel. However, both letter-writers, who were each on the Quad Day staff in separate capacities, went out of their way to identify the offenders as members of the University of Massachusetts Rugby Club. One commentator did write that he was "sure the actions of the rugby players (note rugby players not assaulter or offender — ed.) participating in this incident do not reflect the entire UMass Rugby Team."

This qualifying phrase did not do the trick. The damage was done and sportsism was perpetuated. It seems that some letter-writers and some news reporters think that because a person disgraces himself in public or breaks a law and is also on a sports team, then it is especially newsworthy that this identifying label of sports team member be incorporated into the letter or story. In the above example, it would not matter if the word "football player" or "member of the UMass basketball team" or any other team name was mentioned because the intent would still be there.

It is strange that people think this way and it is also not fair, to persons named directly or to the teams that are mentioned.

The idea of sportsism is not confined to the editorial page. Discrimination of this sort has front page status as well. Recently, three suspects of a rape case were identified in a page one story in the Collegian. Two of the men were listed by name and address only. Apparently no other affiliation reference was deemed necessary by the reporter who wrote the story. In the third case, this was not true as the reporter listed the man's name as well as the fact that he was"a member of the UMass football team."

Why was this done? It was not necessary or newsworthy. It doesn't matter that the charges were dismissed in court later. The man was identified as a suspect by name in a serious crime and needed no further identification and the fact that he was a member of the athletic team was just thrown in for good measure. Sportsism lives.

Sportsism is not just a recent phenomenon. Two years ago, a man was arrested for larceny in Amherst. The Collegian usually has a separate section for police reporting of all types. In this case, however, a larceny arrest was considered front-page news. An accompanying photo of the man in handcuffs was considered appropriate also. It didn't matter that the man had only been charged with the crime and had not even gone to trial yet.

It was also merely coincidence that the man happened to be a member of the University of Massachusetts football team at the time and that it was newsworthy to make sure that this was mentioned in the story. Right? It is quite doubtful.

Identifying labels should be judged with care and not employed hastily, without too much thought. The degree of relevance that a label contains should also be carefully weighed. Unless these two items are considered, sportsism will surely continue its existence.

Celtics romp, lead championship series 3-2

BOSTON (AP) — Robert Parish and Cedric Maxwell led a furious first-quarter Boston burst as the Celtics got their running game going early and breezed to a 109-80 victory over the Houston Rockets Tuesday night for a 3-2 lead in the National Basketball Association championship series.

The Celtics will try to wrap up their 14th NBA title in Houston Thursday night. If the Rockets win that one, the best-of-seven playoff finals would be decided here Sunday afternoon.

Boston's running game had been closely checked by the Rockets in the first four games of the series. But midway through the first quarter of Game 5, the Celtics finally got their fast break in high gear and raced away from Houston with a dazzling 19-1 surge.

Larry Bird started it off by hitting a 12-foot jumper that gave Boston a 15-14 lead with 6:02 left in the first period. Nate Archibald sank a 16-foot jumper, and Maxwell scored on a spinning layup before Houston center Moses Malone sank a free throw.

Bird set up Chris Ford for a fastbreak layup and then Parish, the Celties' 7-foot center, took over. He scored eight consecutive points and blocked a shot by Houston's Bill Willoughby to set up a three-point play by Maxwell that gave Boston a 32-15 lead with 1:23 left in the opening period.

The Celtics, who were ahead 34-19 after the first quarter, widened their advantage to 59-37 at halftime. Maxwell had 16 points in the first half and Parish 14, while Malone scored 13 for the Rockets.

Houston had just one field goal in the last 7:40 of the second quarter and was held without a basket for the first 4:26 of the third period, by which time Boston held a 69-42 advantage. The Celtics biggest lead after that was 29 points, and Houston came no closer than 22 points in the fourth quarter.

Maxwell led the Celtics with 28 points, his career playoff high. Parish finished with 18, while Malone led the Rockets with 20.

Bob Levey is a two-way contributor

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Bob Levey, a senior Sport Management major at the University of Massachusetts, is a member of a very unique group — the male, two-sport athlete. A la Mike McEvilly (baseball and football) and John Allen (football and wrestling), Levey has participated in two sports and excelled in one.

Levey, who will be representing the UMass bowling club in the Nationals this weekend, sported number 35 in two men's lacrosse games this season and is in the record books with a goal against Williams College.

He has been manager and chief statistician for the Gorillas for four years before assuming the additional role of attackman this season.

"I bet this is the only top ranked team in the country where a manager could get into the game and score a goal," Levey said. "Most coaches are hung up on winning at all costs."

A statistician in high school at Burlington, Levey was recruited by Massachusetts football coach Jim Reid to keep statistics at UMass.

"Coach Reid recruited seven players and me, my senior year in high school. I'm the only one of his recruits from Burlington still with the UMass sports program," he said.

In addition to managing a team currently ranked fifth in the country and destined for post-season play, Levey has kept stats for the football and basketball teams while working for the Sports Information Office.

"It's not a glorified, ego-type position. I do all behind-the-scenes work and the satisfaction comes from seeing my work used by the press."

In the past four years, Levey has worked for the New England Patriots (helping to set up and run pre-season training camp as well as working for the public relations office), WEEI radio (keeping stats and helping with locker room interviews) and the Boston Bruins. Levey's ultimate goal is to become the general manager of a professional sports team.

It's not all behind-the-scenes for Levey. He will compete in the National Collegiate Individual Bowling Championship this weekend in Memphis, Tenn. He will be bowling against 31 other challengers from all over the United States for the national title.

Levey snagged a spot in the Nationals by winning the New England championship earlier this semester by a five pin margin over the second place finisher.

A two-time New England champ, Levey started the team with Herb Bonacker and both currently teach bowling classes through the General Physical Education department.

Pope John Paul II shot

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II was shot at close range and wounded in five places yesterday by a man believed to be an escaped Turkish assassin who vowed to kill him. The pontiff underwent some four hours of "successful" surgery after being hit as he stood waving from his white jeep at some 15,000 people massed in sunny St. Peter's Square for his weekly general audience.

The 60-year-old pope was rushed in an ambulance to the Gemelli Policlinico, Rome's most modern hospital.

The director of the surgery unit there said the operation was "successful" and the Vatican earlier said "Although the condition of the pope is cause for concern there are well-founded hopes for recovery."

The hospital director, Prof. Luigi Candia, said one bullet passed through the pope's body, causing a wound as it went in and another as it left. He said a section of the pope's intestine was removed. The pope also received two minor wounds on his right arm and one on his left hand, Candia said, plus blood transfusions.

Student sends well wishes

Only one hour after Pope John Paul II was wounded in Rome yesterday, a University of Massachusetts freshman picked up a get well card and began gathering signatures from students around campus.

Michael Deltergo, 18, of Stoneham, said he heard of the shooting about 12:15 p.m. as he was eating lunch at his fraternity.

Deltergo, who said he is Catholic, had gathered about 150 signatures in about 30 minutes on a sheet of notebook paper attached to the card.

The card states, "Today, tomorrow and yesterday, God keep you in his care. Our wishes and prayers for a speedy recovery and long life. Thinking of you, the undersigned students at the University of Massachusetts."

UM president predicts layoffs and reductions in services

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp yesterday predicted a grim series of layoffs and substantial program reductions in student and community services at the University if more cutbacks are made in the proposed budget for fiscal year 1982.

Speaking before the UMass Board of Trustees meeting in Memorial Hall yesterday, Knapp said a layoff of 8 percent of University personnel, approximately 400 academic and non-academic employees, as well as the closing of nearly 300 courses and sections in the University, could be expected if the state legislature fails to appropriate an additional $6.7 million to the University's $133 million budget.

Knapp also said students in Massachusetts were unfairly bearing much of the responsibility of providing additional funds for the state in the wake of Proposition 2½.

"Put together the tuition increase and the application to higher education of further decreases in state appropriations, and the end result is that the students...and their parents will have been singled out to bear the burden of Proposition 2½ as no other group in the state has as yet," Knapp said.

"Closing down, next year, something like 300 courses and sections in the University will be as dramatic to our students as the closing out of police and fire stations and public schools has been to the neighborhoods of cities and towns," he said.

The trustees voted unanimously to endorse Knapp's statement.

Knapp's comments came after Tuesday's announcement by Board of Regents Chairman James Martin that Gov. Edward J. King has requested an additional $5 million slashed from the $360 million budget for the state's higher education system, as well as predictions that higher education will be forced to cut anywhere from three to 15 percent more in additional reductions.

UMass-Boston Chancellor Robert A. Corrigan said administrators on the harbor campus were making efforts to do some "real belt tightening." Corrigan said as a budgetary measure he was freezing all personnel positions as they are vacated.

Corrigan also said last week's publicity over a $1.6 million sexual harassment suit filed against UMass-Boston's former director of the Health, Education and Information Program did not present the full story, although he said it was not entirely the media's fault since the University has declined to comment on the pending suit.

"You could not tell from the articles that the individuals had been removed from the University the next day, and were suspended within several days," Corrigan said. "Boston has taken the strongest stance against sex discrimination of any university in the country. You would not know that from the media."

In other business, trustee members unanimously approved the appointment of Professor Daniel Padberg to Dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources on the Amherst campus. The board also approved Padberg for tenure along with Professor George Sprio.

Trustee members unanimously agreed upon the establishment of a masters of public health program on the Amherst campus.

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, George Beatty

Vice chancellor Beatty to resign effective July 1

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty has resigned effective July 1 to pursue "other interests."

Beatty's resignation was confirmed by UMass News Bureau Director Art Clifford and then later by Chancellor Henry Koffler, who issued a statement in which he accepted the resignation.

"I have accepted this resignation with regret because I have come to regard him (Beatty) as both a talented colleague and a valued friend," Koffler's statement read. "I am certain the campus community will wish him well and feel itself fortunate to find an equal replacement."

Neither Beatty nor Koffler were available for comment last night.

One University official, who asked not to be identified, said Beatty was leaving the University to devote more time to his Amway distributorship, which was described as "successful." Amway is a distributor of home care products.

In an unrelated move, it was also announced that former acting director of student activities, Dr. O.C. Bobby Daniels, is also planning to leave the University to take a position at another school, Clifford said. Daniels was most recently on the staff of Dean of Students William F. Field. He could not be reached for comment last night and no other details were available.

Beatty, 42, a North Carolina native, first came to UMass in 1973 as associated director of the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies and became director of the office in 1977. In August, 1978, Beatty was named acting vice chancellor of administration and finance by then Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and was appointed to the post permanently by Koffler in August of 1979.

As vice chancellor, Beatty oversees campus operations involving personnel, the physical plant, the Campus Center, transportation, payroll and accounting and all campus business practices, Clifford said.

A 1961 graduate of North Carolina Agricultural and Technical State University, Beatty received his masters in engineering from the University of Toledo in 1967 and is currently a doctoral candidate in the UMass School of Education.

Gov. King unveils new local revenue plan

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King unveiled a plan yesterday to give the cities and towns $246 million in new revenue to cope with Proposition 2½, raising most of the money through state budget cuts that strike hardest at human services.

"This program recognizes that sacrifices have to be made at the state as well as the local level if Proposition 2½ is to properly implemented," King said at a news conference.

He recommended that his proposed $6.39 billion spending plan for the fiscal year beginning July 1, filed with the Legislature in January, be trimmed by $206 million. Accounting for federal reimbursements that would be lost, this would amount to a net state saving of $158 million, King said.

Changes in corporate excise taxes would add another $20 million and recommended legislation permitting communities to impose hotel-motel taxes and charge whatever fees they wish would give them another $30 million.

King originally recommended only $37.6 million in new local aid when he filed his budget, now before the House Ways and Means Committee and due on the floor next week.

The governor acknowledged that the House and Senate are working on their own spending plans. But "with the executive branch, the House and the Senate working independently but cooperatively, there can be no question that significant cuts will be made in state spending."

Reaction to King's plan was swift.

"It's exactly what we've been looking for," said Barbara Anderson, head of Citizens for Limited Taxation, the group that got the property tax limiting Proposition 2½ law on the ballot in November.

"We'll have to see the specifics on a lot of things, but overall, the intent is excellent."

Cambridge City Manager James Sullivan said, "It's not enough, as far as I'm concerned.

"The question basically is how those funds will be distributed. Under current formulas, the money goes to the towns and not enough to the older cities which are adversely affected" by the tax limiting law.

State Sen. George Bachrach of Watertown charged that "the governor's budget cuts failed to address questions of mismanagement, political patronage and duplication of effort.

Northampton boy 15, charged with murder of other teenager

NORTHAMPTON — Northampton police have arrested a 15-year-old boy in connection with the death of another teenager, they announced yesterday.

District Attorney Thomas Simons said the body of Glenn Hebert, 16, of Northampton was discovered by police at 11:13 a.m. Death was caused by injury to the head, he said. The arrested boy was charged with murder, he said.

The police said they were called to a Northampton home where they say they found the body. Thomas Lesser, an attorney for the arrested teenager, whose name was withheld because he was a juvenile, said his client did nothing until he was attacked.

'Trace evidence' links latest Atlanta killing with others

ATLANTA — Police investigating the death of William Barrett, the 27th young black slain here in less than two years, discovered "trace evidence" that links his case to other recent deaths, city law officials said yesterday.

The 17-year-old boy, whose strangled, punctured body was found within a day of his disappearance, was added yesterday to the caseload of a special police task force investigating the slayings and disappearances that have terrorized Atlanta.

Barrett's corpse was found early Tuesday in a wood off a dead-end road in DeKalb County just outside Atlanta.

Police retrieved "trace evidence" that linked his death to other recent slayings, said DeKalb County Public Safety Director Dick Hand.

The rapid discovery of Barrett's body also enabled police to trace his steps from the time he left home early Monday afternoon until 5 p.m. the same day, Hand said. Most recent victims had been missing at least a week before their bodies were discovered.

Reagan considers delaying increases for Social Security

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is considering postponing an 11.2 percent cost-of-living increase due in July for 36 million Social Security recipients as a cost-saving move, sources disclosed yesterday.

A three-month delay in paying the increase — to Oct. 1 — would cost the average Social Security recipient roughly $100 and move nearly $4 billion in federal spending from the 1981 budget to the 1982 budget, which starts Oct. 1.

One knowledgeable administration source, asking that he not be identified, said postponing the upcoming 1981 increase is one of several items Budget Director David Stockman is considering as a way to offset an unanticipated increase in the projected budget deficit for the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

The source emphasized that a final decision has not been made by President Reagan, who would have to submit the proposal to Congress for its approval.

Disclosure of the administration's consideration of postponing the 1981 cost-of-living increase came just one day after the administration called for an unprecedented 10 percent cut in Social Security benefits by 1986 to save an estimated $53 billion.

Part of that plan calls for pushing back annual cost-of-living adjustments until Oct. 1 starting in 1982.

Details of alcohol policy given for Community Day

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council yesterday announced a detailed plan of the alcohol policy for Community Day this Sunday.

Students who show proper identification will be given a "hospital like" wrist band, which will allow them to buy beer, said Bruce Levy of UPC.

There will be two entrances on the University Drive side of the stadium, one for those over age 20 and one for under age 20 (see stadium diagram for details), Levy said.

Students with a wrist band will then be able to purchase three tickets, which allows them to get one beer at a time, Levy said. People without wristbands will not be allowed to purchase beer.

There will be fifty kegs tapped at one time, and there will be 25 ticket sellers, 50 beer pourers and 25 beer servers working, Levy said.

Beer tickets will be on sale for $1 each starting at 11 a.m. and closing at 3p.m. Students will be able to get three tickets at a time, which they can exchange for 16 ounce beers, Levy said.

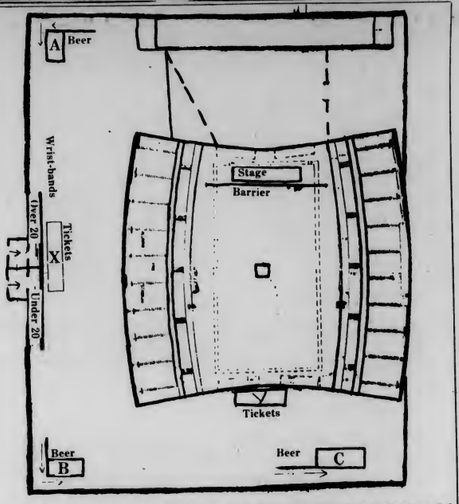
Beer will be available from 11:30 a.m. until 3:30 p.m., and at that time beer will stop being distributed. Tickets left over will not be refundable. Levy said.

"The policy was written to make beer accessible to students, but comply with the standards set by administration, health services and police, in order to allow the event," Levy said.

He said they expect to make a profit, but that it will help subsidize the cost of the show. UPC officials said they were uncertain how much profit they would make.

No other alcoholic beverages will be sold, but there will be six locations with free water, as well as soft drinks and cider on sale.

"Absolutely no cans, bottles, coolers, or containers of any kind will be allowed and they will be confiscated at the gate," Levy said.



The above map shows where beer and ticket locations will be situated for Sunday's Community Day. One table inside the entrance and another at the rear of the stadium will be used for the purchase of beer tickets. Tables A, B and C will be the beer distribution points.

Angela Brown takes the hint from a neighboring balloon at yesterday's tuition rally at the Student Union and writes to her representative at the State House to help stop budget cuts.

Budget cuts, tuition hikes and faculty layoffs spur student rally

About 100 University of Massachusetts students rallied outside the Student Union Building yesterday to protest proposed budget cuts, tuition increases and possible faculty layoffs.

The students rallied on Metawampe Lawn while the school's Board of Trustees was meeting in nearby Memorial Hall. (see story page one)

The students listened to several speakers talk about the current fiscal plight and broke into chants of "Lack of funds, that's a lie, it's being spent on lobster pie," and hissed and booed each time the state's Board of Regents was mentioned.

"I'm not being theatrical when I tell you if this happens, there won't be much to come back to this fall. Don't let it happen," said Bruce Laurie, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the faculty Union.

Laurie, one of four speakers at the rally, said a proposed $5 million cut in the state higher education budget may force the layoffs of more than 300 campus faculty members and teaching assistants.

"At the moment, life at this University is at stake and we've got to preserve it," Laurie said.

UMass Financial Air Director Ed C. Apodaca said large numbers of low income and minority students may be forced to leave school because of rising costs and decreasing financial assistance.

"The problems confronting financial aid are extremely serious. More than you know," Apodaca said.

Apodaca said more than 14,000 students on campus are eligible for a total of about $31 million in financial aid, but the University only has $10 million to distribute.

"We don't necessarily lose students, we just change the type of students at UMass," he said.

The rally was part of a week-long series of events focusing on the future of public higher education in the state. The week's events will culminate with the annual Community Day this Sunday.

No pass/fail option for language courses

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-President Kevin Mangan informed the Undergraduate Student Senate last night of a decision by the College of Arts and Sciences Steering Committee Monday to exclude 110, 120 and 130 level language courses from the pass/fail option.

Mangan, a student member of the committee, said the rule will not take effect until the spring semster of 1982 because students are already involved in pre-registration.

"If you take 110 and get a D, they feel you don't really have the background to move into a higher level," said Mangan.

"Our position was that we feel it's up to the students to make that decision," Mangan said.

James W. Shaw, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and chair of the nine-member committee, said the decision was aimed at keeping students from advancing to the next level without enough information to pass the course.

"We're concerned that a significant number of students are painting themselves into a corner by taking these courses pass/fail," he said.

In other business, the senate passed by acclaimation a motion to appoint Lisa Ziebel as Attorney General of the Student judiciary system.

Ziebel, a junior political science major, has been acting Attorney General since December 3 after Dana Collier resigned from that post citing lack of time and unclear responsibilities of the position.

Ziebel has served as a judicial advocate, a judge, a judicial coordinator in the Southwest Residential Area, and as a member of the governing board of the Legal Services Office.

Committee to hold letter-writing campaign

The Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom will be holding a letter writing campaign today in the Campus Center concourse to protest the proposed Human Life Amendment. The organizers are sponsoring this event in conjunction with the International Day in Support of Reproductive Freedom.

Letters written at the concourse table will be sent to members of Congress urging defeat of the amendment which would declare that human life begins at fertilization, and ultimately outlaw abortion.

$140 reportedly stolen from Southwest dorm

University of Massachusetts police received a report of $140 in cash stolen from a second floor room in Pierpont residence hall in the Southwest Residential Area. Police said the door to the room was locked but the window was open. The incident was reported at 10:46 p.m. Tuesday, they said.

In another incident, a car battery valued at $60 was reported stolen at 9 a.m. yesterday from a car parked in lot 49, police said.

Police also reported $25 damage to a Pontiac parked in lot 22 at 7:46 a.m. yesterday. The right front window had been forced open in an apparent attempt to start the ignition of the car, they said.

Koffler to receive honorary degree from U of Arizona

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Henry Koffler will receive an honorary degree from the University of Arizona at Tuscon Saturday, said UMass Spokesman Art Clifford.

Koffler, who graduated from Arizona with a degree in biochemistry in 1943, will receive the degree as an honorary Doctor of Science.

Koffler came to the U.S. in 1939 from Vienna, Austria. He did his graduate studies in microbiology at the University of Wisconsin and then was Provost at the University of Minnesota system before he came to the UMass campus in 1979.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR PARTICIPANTS

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 am graduation morning, May 30, 1981. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to be assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of five formal invitations.

Faculty and Parents
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school or college.

Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends may wish to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Caps and Gowns
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be distributed from the Textbook Annex in the Physical Plant Building beginning April 27. There is no charge to degree candidates (Associate's, Bachelor's, Master's, Doctoral) for the cap, gown, tassel, and invitations. Please bring your ID. You must know what degree you are receiving and from which department.

Distribution Hours — April 27 - May 29, 10 am-4 pm, regular business days at the Textbook Annex. May 30 (Commencement Day), 8 am at the stadium (southwest corner).

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the Friday night before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the night of May 29. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-2591, by May 9, 1981.

Campus Center
Graduation Dinner, Top of the Campus Restaurant; reservations needed.
Graduation Brunch, Campus Center Room 1009; reservations suggested.
Coffee Shop, open 8 am - 4 pm.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available under the east and west stands at the north end of the stadium.

General Information
Diplomas will be mailed to graduates in the fall.
Medical facilities will be located in the van under Section 1 of the stands.
Public telephones will be located on the west side of the Facilities/Information Center.
Restrooms will be located at either end of the Facilities/Information Center at the south end of the stadium.

Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium, on the eastern and western walkways.
For additional information, contact the Office of Public Affairs, 303 Whitmore, 545-2560.

State aid to S. Africa
Good money in a bad place

Mary Ann Cloherty

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has $131 million of our tax monies invested in U.S. banks and corporations in South Africa. In some cases these dollars are going to the same companies which have shut down here, while expanding over there.

The money is invested through the state pension system — funds set aside to pay state teachers and employees their pensions when they retire. Many of these workers firmly oppose their pension funds being used to support a country whose official government policy is based on a flagrant system of racist laws.

These laws are designed to deny 22 million Africans the most elementary forms of human rights. South Africa may seem far away, but many of the same U.S. companies which practice racism in South Africa discriminate against workers of color at home. And the very existence of the South African state provides encouragement to the KKK and other groups which promote racist violence in the U.S.

Senate Bill 1138 would require the pension system to take this money out of companies and banks involved in South Africa and invest it elsewhere — if possible, here in Massachusetts to provide jobs and home mortgages.

The pension fund

The money in the Mass. State Pension Fund comes from deductions from the paychecks of all public school teachers and state employees and from the state treasury. The fund's value as of December 1981 was $1.3 billion. At present the teachers and workers participating in the fund have no say in how their money is invested.

The South African connection

The pension fund has $130.8 million in investments tied to South Africa. This includes investments in the bonds of such firms as Exxon, Dow Chemical, and Union Carbide which have extensive facilities in South Africa. It also includes ownership of stocks and bonds of banks such as Bank of America and the First National Bank of Boston which have made loans to the South African government and to private companies doing business in South Africa.

The Bill

Senate Bill 1138 requires that state pension funds be divested from South Africa by January 1, 1982. It calls for the proceeds from this divestment to be reinvested as much as possible in companies doing business in Massachusetts.

What's wrong with South Africa?

"We want to keep South Africa white — keeping it white can only mean one thing, namely white domination, not leadership, not guidance, but control, supremacy."
—H. Verwoerd, former Prime Minister of So. Africa

South Africa has been universally condemned for its system of race rule. Black people in South Africa have no political rights. The white minority of 4.2 million people controls over 87 percent of the land, leaving 13 percent for the 18.6 million black majority. Black people are allowed into the white areas only to work. They must carry passes at all times. Black workers are paid an average of one-eighth of what whites are paid. Nearly one-quarter of black children die before their first birthday.

Opposition to white rule has been brutally suppressed. Half of all executions taking place in the Western world last year took place in one country: South Africa. During the Soweto uprising in 1976, over a thousand people — most of them school children — were killed by the police.

Why divestment?

The products of foreign investment in South Africa — oil, vehicles, computers —sustain the racist system there. Former Prime Minister John Vorster has said, "Each trade agreement, each bank loan, each new investment is another brick in the wall of our continued existence." Numerous black leaders in South Africa including nobel laureate Albert Luthuli, Steve Biko, Bishop Desmond Tutu and the leaders of the South African freedom movements have called for divestment. Before it was banned by the South African government, the Black People's Convention of South Africa stated that, "We call upon foreign investors to disengage themselves from this white-controlled exploitative system." Among the American organizations which have answered this call are UMass, Hampshire College, the United Auto Workers, the United Electrical Workers, the National Council of Churches, the Methodist Church, and the City of Cambridge.

Opposition to white rule has been brutally suppressed. Half of all executions taking place in the Western world last year took place in one country: South Africa.

What benefit to Massachusetts?

Massachusetts workers are being increasing threatened by "runaway shops" — firms which leave the state to take advantage of the low wages and anti-union climates in places like South Africa. Goodyear (New Bedford), Westinghouse (Springfield) and American Can (Needham) are just three examples of companies which closed plants in Massachusetts since 1970, and all have operations in South Africa. Senate Bill 1138 is directed at stopping "runaway shops." It calls for the reinvestment in Massachusetts of money withdrawn from corporations in South Africa.

In addition, the very existence of the South African system lends support and encouragement to racist hate groups such as the KKK and the South Boston Marshalls. Such groups breed violence and create an atmosphere of fear which affects all of us. Send them a message.

Join us, support Bill 1138. We need your help.

—Call or write to your state representative and senator to ask them to vote for the bill.
—Organize a meeting with your neighbors, coworkers, church or union to support the bill.
—Contribute what you can for leaflets, rallies, etc. to publicize the issue.

HOME TO ROOST

Pigeonchild in the promised land

Farewell columns being among the most dreadful of all boring collegiate journalistic conventions, I will eschew my adieu and instead offer the first of a series of "hello columns," formally introducing myself to all of you who know me only as that twisted perverter of editorial page privilege, upon whose words you spill your Turkey Divan and macaroni salad every Thursday. So, the story of my life, Part I:

I was born three months after the death of my mother in a double-parked Checker Cab in Passaic, New Jersey 22 years ago. Immediately after birth, I decided to adopt the surname of Benno Conte, the kind-hearted cabbie who guided my dead mother through the silent anguish of her torturous labor pains. Because my mother died a virgin, I had no natural father, so Benno decided to take me home and raise me along with his prize brood of imported New York City pigeons.

I was just getting used to the chicken wire and sawdust of my rooftop cage when my brother and sister pigeons prodded me into joining them in an afternoon's flight to the statues in Central Park. I'll never forget the wondrous exhilaration of taking off for my first flight, my senses so sharp and alive, my thin baby hair whipping in the bristling wind. It wasn't until we had almost reached Manhattan that it occurred to me that, because I was human, I couldn't fly. A frenzied panic raced through my mind as I looked over to see my brothers and sisters trading amused glances and snickering softly to themselves. I vowed my vengeance to these cruel practical-joking pigeons as I plunged headfirst into the teeming filth of the East River.

I floated on my back for three days, surviving on algae and river fungus, until I was reeled in by a street wise hobo named Ace Fedirko who, recognizing a gold mine when he saw one, smeared mud and garbage all over me and dragged me around to all the local newspapers.

"Pigeon Boy Thinks He's Fish" screamed the bold Daily News headline the next day, and I was instantly a hot property. The Svengalian Fedirko quickly appointed himself my business manager and booked a grueling six month cross-country tour of television and radio talk shows. But, because I was only five weeks old and unable to speak, I was a terrible flop and the tour had to be cancelled after only eight weeks.

Depressed and needing someone to change my diapers, I fell in with a pseudo-Satanistic commune in Greenwich Village, where I met and allegedly impregnated a 27-year old Slavic ornithologist named Natasha Klunk. Our child was born a day before my first birthday but, to my disappointment and shock, turned out to be a white-crowned spotted pigeon.

"This is not my child!" I screamed, unable to suppress my anger.

"Of course it is," she cried. "How many pigeon boys do you think there are in this city?"

"What do you take me for? I was raised a common city turtledove. This is a white-crowned spotted pigeon. You've been roosting around on me, you tramp!"

Out of control, I stabbed her repeatedly in the knee with my switch rattle, until she tumbled backwards out the window to her grisly sidewalk death seventeen floors below.

The next day, I confessed all to the boys downtown and became the youngest death row inmate in the history of Rikers Island. The horror of being a baby in prison turned me to hard drugs, and I spent the last dark days of my infancy struck out on everything from turpentine to morphine. Soon I had the line on every dope connection in Rikers and, after six months of waiting for the right moment, my boys and I got ahold of some black market rifles and took over the whole ring. In a year I had wrangled enough money and influence to buy the governor's pardon, and on June 2, 1962, I stepped out of Rikers to stay. I was exactly three years old.

I went to Monte Carlo to write my memoirs. "Infantbeast" spent eight months on the Times best seller list and earned the non-fiction Pulitzer for its unprecedented combination of childish babble and keen social insight. The next year I retired from the public eye and married and had another child, a human this time, who will be a freshman at the University next fall.

Obedience battles truth

"At Leipzig I discovered that college students confined their search for truth to discotheques and pubs, and that it was more important to practise the art of fornication than to study the aesthetic systems of Aristotle and Schopenhauer."

Friedrich Nietzsche
My Sister and I (1890)

When I was eight years old, my father told me to never offer anyone opinions they don't ask for. Why not? Because, my father explained, if someone does not have enough interest in your opinion to ask for it, then they aren't going to listen when it's given unsolicited.

I would have seen the wisdom of my father's opinion — about giving opinions — sooner, except I hadn't asked him for it. Case in point. So my father's advice did not reach me until years later — until now, after overlooking the Collegian editorial pages for a year and a half.

In that time I edited over 1000 regular columns, written by weekly columnists; guest columns, written by members of the University community at large who have special concerns and knowledge, and some Collegian staffers; and letters to the editor, written by anyone at all. Besides publishing other writers, I also wrote for the editorial page, occasionally giving readers a dubious alternative to the back of the Sani-flush can.

All gave opinions that were in the strictest sense unsolicited. Nobody came down and said, "Hey Eric. How about a column on what you learned from your job?" Likewise, nobody asked for Bob Conte's opinion of fraternities, the SCERA anti-something team's opinion of some alarming social trend, or a letter writer's opinion of a song played by a WMUA disc jockey.

My impression is that almost nobody listened to what column and letter writers said, unless the reader's and writer's opinions were in agreement, but that doesn't count. That is not an exchange of opinions, which is what the editorial section is supposedly for.

Two questions: Why was my father right? And, if not a forum for the exchange of opinions, what is the editorial section?

My father was right due to three major principles of information:

1. People are annoyed by information that conflicts with what they already know.
2. Where people have no previous knowledge, they prefer a presentation of information that is emotive and strong in imagery. They are generally annoyed by facts.
3. The only facts people are not annoyed by are those coming from sources they have come to honor, trust and respect; that is, sources that are in consistent agreement with their perceptions of circumstances.

So a reader of the editorial pages commonly did not listen to the opinion of a writer, either because their opinions conflicted or the writer failed to present an opinion imaginatively.

Where does this leave the editorial section? Perhaps in the garbage along with Aristotle and Schopenhauer. Why? Because searching for truth is not just something you do, it is a way of thinking. It is a critical approach to life, involving a lot of effort and personal expense. It means questioning your perceptions and most trusted intuitions.

This way of thinking, this approach, is no more sanctioned here at UMass than it is in the real world, the corporate world. UMass — and high school and junior high and elementary school before it — means to make you a good employee. Take a close look at your classes, and the systems of grading and accrediting. You are being taught obedience. Not to truth, but to the proper impression.

A valuable experience

This past semester I took a course dealing with racism. It was a very valuable experience for me because it gave me insight and knowledge about different races. The course enabled me to separate myth from reality concerning different races, including my own, which is white. I would encourage anyone to take a course dealing with racism if they really want a well-rounded education.

Continued pressure

The recent letter-writing campaign to "Save the Social Sciences" (April 27-May 1), sponsored by the Anthropology department, received generous support from the UMass community. During the week, 1300 letters were sent to Congress-people throughout the nation (with more than a third going to U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte), urging them to recognize the importance of funding the social and behavioral sciences, and the arts and humanities.

Although initial passage of the proposed Reagan economic package occurred last week, letters received from key Congress-people indicate that they are aware of the adverse impacts this budget has at several levels (e.g. research, education, direct social benefits). We should remember that House passage is just one step along the way to final implementation of this "economic package"; continued pressure (i.e. more letters, lobbying, protests, etc.) is the only way broad-based research in these disciplines and these programs can be salvaged.

We were gratified by the positive and thoughtful response of people from a broad spectrum of backgrounds and academic fields. Please count on us to continue our efforts, and to reciprocate in support of your endeavors in the future.

Thank you all.

Not doing their job

Last semester, Coolidge Upper Government planned a party at Farley Lodge. It was well arranged and many people were looking forward to it. The Registered Student Organization Office also had it well arranged. Then they cancelled the party and sent us a memo. We did not receive this memo until two weeks later with other outdated mail, the day before the party was to be held.

The next encounter with the RSO involved our semiformal for this semester. We reserved the 10th floor Campus Center last semester, and everything was ready. Unfortunately we had not filled out the confirmation papers — which we knew nothing about — so we got cancelled. We aren't the only ones in this situation; 40 other dates were cancelled on just one day. The problem, again, was that we found out only accidentally a few hours before our dance. The room was set up for another event, we could do nothing. People were not disappointed this time — they were furious.

We reset the date and got the Student Union Ballroom; not great, but ok. But, the Five College Events had also been scheduled for that slot. We could not argue with such a powerful group, so we were then given the Hatch. By this time many people were disillusioned with us and not at all pleased at having the Hatch for their semiformal. We even lost some government members because of this confusion in communications.

RSO was created to eliminate communication confusions in scheduling events among its groups. RSO is a necessary bureaucracy for over 400 groups now. But in messing up activities of groups, no matter how small, they are not doing their job. There is a new director for the office, and we sincerely hope that he can reform the office to eliminate such problems. It might help the RSO if they asked for students' suggestions in dealing with problems. After all, we are here to learn how to function in this world.

Opinionated semantics

Susan Scheide's letter "Leave the Walls Alone" (Collegian, 5/9) prompts me to write this letter before I graduate. Her letter made it sound as though feminists, lesbians and socialists were being viewed in the same negative regard as bigots. Her opinionated semantics are not the issue of my letter, however.

My observations are based on the prevalence of gay-oriented graffiti on men's room walls. The minority of gay graphic artists and frustrated writers of "stimulating" erotica have made it very difficult for me to come to grips with myself as a gay 22-year old. The problem enters when I feel inclined to come out to straight males whom I value as friends. Most of their exposure to gay culture is limited to the sounding board of stall walls. The publicity prompted by movies such as "Cruising" and by groups like the Moral Majority combined with this "stall wall" impression of gays makes for a warped perception of the gay community.

We can't dismiss these scribblings as harmless outlets for our sexual repression. They are very visible attestations of our presence everywhere. Let's channel our energy towards progressive activity promoting gay pride and not defeat our purpose. Refrain from sexual graffiti in public places and let each gay project his own individual impression on society.

Always the underdog

In response to Rufus Horowitz's letter (Collegian, 5/12) Myra Hindus is one of the most respectable, knowledgable people I know who can still maintain her good sense of humor even when dealing with attitudes like yours. Women have always been the underdog, and songs as "When I turn out the Light" played by male rock singers and male Dj's, only reinforce sex-role stereotypes. As a Jew and a woman I am insulted by the song. I hope you will not be leaving the area soon, Mr. Horowitz, because you have yet to begin your education.

Looking at racism

Even though racism is prevalent on this campus, resources are available to help us learn about the persistance of human oppression. When we return home this summer, it is unlikely that specifically issues of racial oppression will be examined. Because of the major lack of concern and knowledge pertaining to racism in many areas of the "outside world" don't let yourselves be victims of apathy. Remember that Third World children are still being slain in Atlanta, impoverished on Native American reservations, undernourished as a result of Nestle profits and abundantly dying in Bantu camps in South Africa. Racism examination shouldn't stop at this University, for racism is not only prevalent here, but in your own home town and ultimately the world in which we live in.

Intellectualizing guilt

I am at a loss as to how a guest columnist for the Collegian can write such lies as Mr. Dinc did in his article "Kurds and Class Conflict" (Collegian, 5/5). It especially bothers me because Mr. Dinc seems to have put more thought in one editorial in the Collegian than the whole Turkish government has ever put anywhere in the last 66 years. I hate to discourage such thought, but I do have some things to point out.

Why was the genocide of the Armenian people inevitable? Does Mr. Dinc feel comfortable playing Monday morning quarterback with the lives of one and a half million people? I have heard similar voices raised to justify the slaughter of the Native Americans in "this yet to be United States." Mr. Dinc makes a feeble effort to separate the Turkish government in 1915 from the people of Turkey. The government of Turkey has never been representative of the people of that land, especially when one considers that they came into that land on the coat-tails of conquest. His attempt to disassociate himself from his people's history would be much like me not coping with racism in this country because the government of the United States does not and has not ever represented its people.

Mr. Dinc mentions that the Turks should have sympathy for what happened to we Armenians. Thanks, but no thanks. We don't want your sympathy. We want our land. The complete superficiality of Mr. Dinc's article leads me to wonder if he has ever spoken to an Armenian man or woman that went through the genocide. At work, I meet quite a few. Last week I met a man whose mother had carved his name in Armenian into his arm so he could never be kidnapped and raised as a Turk. I met a woman who has a tattoo on her lip where she was branded as a slave. She walked through the deserts naked for three weeks. I met another person (all of these people live close to Worcester) who, when the genocide started out, left his job in a Boston shoe factory to go back and fight for the free Armenia that existed between 1918 and 1920. Surely if Mr. Dinc had ever met any of these people he would not be trying to intellectualize his guilt. He might have tried to write from his heart.

The Roches

'The Roches' pucker with sour notes

Nurds
The Roches (Warner Bros.)

By JULIE GEANAKAKIS
Collegian Staff

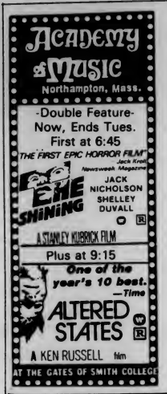
These three sisters are up against the wall. On the jacket of Nurds, the Roches make a suggestive sister sandwich, sinister and suspicious; hips thrust into the foreground. Their faces are hidden, all emotion sinking behind the darkness of three protective shoulders. The back cover is even less revealing. It is a line-up of the trio in arrest posture, their forms outlined surrealistically against a stark white barrier; all this without a trace of hi-fashion and glitter. Only with the revolutions of the turntable do we find the mystery revealed, and the Roches a bit more "off" the wall.

The Roche sisters, Maggie, Terre and Suzzy, (Suzzy? Yes, Suzzy), are young Irish Catholic women very much dependent on sibling harmony, usually in three parts. At target points in the album, dissonance enters through some intelligent and even exquisite harmonies. Deepest sister Maggie utilizes it quite effectively in her song, "One Season:" "We go on arguing/no one can say a thing/set down your key and trumpet/go have a dream and hump it." The dissonance emphasizes the anger and, of course, discord. Other sour notes are slipped into songs seemingly without motive. This annoys. Another low point is vocal blending, at times like oil and water. Terre's soaring soprano clashes with her sisters' tight-throated chest tone alto, making for music that is alternatively sweet and sour.

The lyrics are reflections of the personal lives of the Roches. Maggie is a thoughtful and intense lyricist, even picking up on the plight of the boat families, affected so much as to write a song about it, a song sung from the viewpoint of an inaccessible chocolate bar: "Then I went to high school/It really hit me hard/I started finding out that they were calling me retard/In the gymnasium/I was not a hit/There was something really interesting about how my gymsuit fit." Nurds could easily be a parody on Janis Ian's "Seventeen", only Suzzy looks back and laughs, not laments. At first listen it's funny Suzzy's self-degradation and Maggie's double meanings. Add music, give it another spin and it comes on like an obnoxious drunk, tone-deaf and talking your ear off.

The music is a mere fringe on a fabric of songs that could've been sung just as well a cappella. A simple guitar line is often the extent of accompaniment. The Irish folk ballad, "Factory Girl," is one of the rare exceptions, with synthesizer providing a full rich background like a bagpipe's drone serving to heighten the class of this classic under the Roches' novel arrangement. Vocals are the main instrument, all others simply follow along the melody line. The simplicity of the music makes attending the lyrics that much easier, but still, when the absurdity abounds, it would be better drowned in heavy metal.

Nurds has small parcels of strong lyrics, lyrics that defy the Sex, Drugs and Rock'n'Roll themes a majority of shock and roll is based upon, but will listeners relate to the tragic comedy and skeletal music? Perhaps Nurds will fit in well between your Othello and Cheech y Chong discs. Try them on, but don't take them too seriously. These ladies, if tuned up correctly and turned on to the commercial sex-symbol image, could amass quite a green following.



IMPORTANT INFORMATION!

University Food Services has developed a meal ticket system which will eliminate the meal book. The new system is based on the new University I.D. card—the one with two magnetic stripes on the back. All persons entering the University this year already have one of these.

If you do not now have the new I.D., you will need one to be on board contract in September. Go to the north lobby on the second floor of Whitmore to get your new I.D. today!

The Chipmunks, Alvin, Simon, and Theodore pictured here with several RCA record executives.

Get ready kids; we're heading down the homestretch, and we've got a head-on conflict staring us in the face. Do we go to the concert Sunday or write that 10 page paper. No contest, get psyched!

As one reader put it, if the bands don't amuse you, the crowd sure will.

If you've got time to do anything else this weekend, Buddy Rich and his Big Band are going to be at Rahar's. Yes, you read it correctly, at Rahar's. If you can spare the time, go for it.

Probably one of the most obnoxious bands ever created, the Plasmatics, take to the stage at Stage West Saturday. Wendy promises to destroy a shiny new Cadillac so you can't miss it. What stunt will they come up with next?

The Shaboo All-Stars will be at the Rusty Nail Saturday, a band that hasn't been to the area in at least two or three weeks.

Woody Herman and the Young Thundering Herd will appear Thursday, May 28, at 8 p.m. in E.M. Loew's Center for the Performing Arts in Worcester. Tickets are available for $7.00, $8.00, and $9.00, at area outlets.

The Blue Wall brings Martian Highway Friday and Signal Saturday.

Ok., it's the Bush Tetras and the Sci Ams Sunday night at Rahar's. You can do with this one what you will.

On a serious note, Reggae artist Bob Marley died Monday night at the age of 36. The music world has lost yet another valuable member.

That group of fun loving, furry little musicians, The Chimpunks, recently signed with RCA, and they have a new album that should be in the stores this week. It's called Urban Chimpunk and features guest appearances by Brenda Lee and Jerry Reed. No lie.

I have to agree with Bob Conte's observation of Van Halen and AC/DC in his column last week (Collegian, May 8), but he forgot Styx, REO Speedwagon, and Ted Nugent.

Nothing irks me more than blatant commercialism, and face it, the fore-mentioned bands write songs with dollar signs in their eyes.

There is no truth to the rumor that Cookie Monster won the Justin Griswold Look-Alike Contest.

The best concert I saw this academic year was Jeff Beck, October 9 in the Cage. The man lived up to his reputation.

Just in: John Hall will not play the Rusty Nail this week.

Vosburgh scores at will

Gorillas top UNH, win 12th

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — The entire first quarter, save the final minute of yesterday's men's lacrosse game here, was like a series of instant replays. University of Massachusetts midfielder Tom Walters would win every faceoff and the Gorilla offense would pass around the net and score. A total of six replays brought the score to 6-0 before the quarter was through.

And at the end of four quarters, the Gorillas (12-1) had come close to securing a home game in next Wednesday's first round of the National Lacrosse Tournament with a 16-11 win over the University of New Hampshire yesterday.

The Wildcats' defense could do nothing to stop senior attackman Skip Vosburgh who went past New Hampshire defensemen as if they weren't even there. Vosburgh scored at will throughout the first half, putting in five of the first seven Gorilla goals on just six shots taken.

"I knew how the guy that was covering me (UNH senior John Bonczek) played defense," Vosburgh said. "I decided to dodge, and it worked."

Vosburgh started his four-goal quarter 1:49 into the game off of a pass from midfielder Mike Lavin. Lavin and middie Ernie Shapiro each played an outstanding half, controlling the ball and feeding it to the Gorilla attackmen. At 5:51, Vosburgh ran toward the net, stepped right, spun and slammed the ball into the net. In the next minute, he scored twice more, once off a feed from senior tri-captain Chris Corin and once off of the same dodge play.

"I felt good today," Vosburgh said. "I'm always passing off and it's good to score for a change."

Walters won the first five faceoffs of the game, giving UMass offensive control for all but fifty seconds in the quarter. Vosburgh scored again fifteen seconds into the second quarter before the Wildcats even got on the board. UNH sophomore attackman Jay Budd tallied two unassisted goals in the quarter to break the Wildcat scoring ice, but the Gorillas racked up five more scores by halftime for an 11-2 lead.

In the second half, the Wildcats gave Massachusetts more of a contest, coming within five goals at one point.

UNH had sent in its premier attackman John Fay who was making his first appearance in lacrosse garb since breaking his leg at the start of the season. A minute after he ran on to the field, Fay, a senior tri-captain playing in his last home game, stuck one in off a scoring pass from attackman Mike Van Vleck, also a senior.

This tally set off a string of five unanswered goals which brought the Wildcats within six, 14-8. Fay also scored his second goal in that surge, an unassisted effort.

Massachusetts' Corin broke up the Wildcat sprint in the fourth quarter off of a pass from middie Ray Cozzi. Cozzi scooped the ball at midfield after defensemen John Mincone, Bryant Goulding and senior tri-captain Paul Kinnane had successfully shut down the UNH attack.

Jim "Skank" Weller, who needs just two points in Saturday's Gorilla-Dartmouth Big Green matchup to set a new single-season scoring record, tallied three goals and four assists on the game. Midfielder Tim Cutler scored three goals and junior attackman Morgan Mohrmann added two.

Mittmen crown Jeff's

Lovellette hits two homers

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Amassing 16 hits, including five (yes five) homeruns, the University of Massachusetts baseball team won its twentieth game and overpowered crosstown rival Amherst College 15-10 yesterday.

Freshman Keith Lovellette celebrated his nineteenth birthday in fine style, smashing two consecutive homeruns over the centerfield fence, his second and third of the season, while acquiring four runs batted in.

The Minuteman (20-17) scoring barrage was persistent as Massachusetts scored at least one run in every inning but the sixth and seventh.

Third baseman Barry Bennett began things in the top of the first when he singled, moved to second on a passed ball by Amherst catcher Mike Larery and scored from second on a single up the middle by Minuteman catcher Jim Aulenback.

Centerfielder Mark Litano reached base on a walk to set the stage for Loyellette's first blast, a two-out, three run homer, which quickly staked Massachusetts a 4-0 lead.

Amherst, which sits atop the New England Division Three poll with a 21-6 record, also scored one in the bottom of the first off starter and eventual winner Chuck Thompson whose record was upped to 8-2.

With one out in the second designated hitter Kelly McDonald on first via a single through the hole between first and second, Barry Bennett walloped his fourth homerun of the season to give Thompson and the Minutemen a comfortable 6-1 lead.

Lovellette's next trip to the plate, in the third inning, was much the same story when he hit a shot that left the field in the same spot his first one had.

Thompson, who walked six and struck out three on the afternoon, gave up two more runs in the bottom of the third when the Jeffs' Larery knocked in two with a single, scoring centerfielder Doug Hansen and first baseman Larry DeRespino.

The UMass offense continued their attack on Amherst starter John Pettengill by adding three more runs in the fourth.

Leftfielder John Krahan and McDonald stroked back to back singles placing men on first and second. A ground ball sacrifice by second baseman Dean Bennett advanced the runners for brother Barry who scored Kraham on a sacrifice fly. McDonald also scored on the play, when the Amherst shortstop Frank Anderson threw the ball into the stands in an attempt to nail McDonald who was advancing to third.

With two out, Litano added the tenth run with his third four-bagger of the year.

The fifth inning was much of the same with Kraham hitting the teams fifth homerun of the game and 35th of the season. Shortstop Vin Bonanno scored on Krahams sixth blast of the year, and McDonald scored the thirteenth run on a series of Amherst errors.

Amherst reliever Steve Gallagher quieted the UMass bats in the sixth and seventh innings, while Amherst began to pick at the Minutemens enormous 13-3 lead.

The Jeffs scored a lone run in each of those innings when Thompson walked in pinchhitter Hoddy Nichols with two out in the bottom of the sixth, but the senior righthander came back to strike out Kyle O'Brien to end the inning and the threat.

Litano's twelfth double of the season scored Barry Bennett in the eighth, his third run scored of the game UMass added the fifthteenth and final run in the ninth off of the Jeff's third pitcher of the game, Greg Perry, Joe Larkin's walk, Krajams third hit of the day, a single, and pinch hitter Brian Finnegans single to right-center which scored Larkin.

Amherst presented their only serious scoring threat in the ninth when they scored five runs off Thompson, who completed his seventh game of the season.

The Minutemen end their season tomorrow when they face the Big Green of Dartmouth College in a rescheduled game that was cancelled due to rain earlier this week. Starting this final series for UMass will be Steve (Murray) Cramer and freshman Tony Presnal. Game time is 1:00 at Earl Lorden Field.

IM softball into semis

T. Redwoods soccer champs

The field in the men's division of the intramural softball league has been whittled down to four semifinalists. In tonight's semifinal round, the Maroons will meet Romp in one game and Flem will face off against the Ballbusters in another encounter.

The Maroons made it to the semis by knocking off Phi Sigma Kappa in a 13-11 upset last night. In other men's quarterfinal action last night, Romp edged the Traveling All-stars, 3-2, Flem got by the Van Meter Swamp Rats, 8-4, and the Ballbusters defeated the Shockers by an identical 8-4 final tally.

In the women's quarterfinals, the Wimps walloped Sugar and Spice 22-0, the Meglo Maniacs blasted Pssst 19-1, Boomerang slid by the Space Shots and the Zooies beat the D. Dodgers 7-3.

In grad-fac action, the Macaques burnt Deadwood 10-9, the Misfits edged Cell Debris 5-4, Sport Studies Plus blanked Son of Walt 11-0 and the Contenders scattered Seemingly Unrelated 8-4.

In co-rec quarterfinal games, the Liberal Democrats defeated Burlington 8-4, the Road Apples flattened PVTA 10-0, the World Games Gang swamped Gorman 14-1 and the Leaches and Butterfield will play a protested game tonight.

After losing in the finals for the past two years in a row, the Thatcher Redwoods, riding on two goals by Dan Fleming and some strong backstopping from goalie Taylor Brennan, hung tough to take the intramural soccer championship from the Latin Brothers, 3-2.

The Redwoods, who have posted undefeated regular season records for three consecutive years, upset defending champion Phi Sig 1-0 in Tuesday night's semifinal round to reach the finals once again. Brennan headed out two penalty kicks in the game and Fleming tallied game-winner three minutes into the second half to spark his team to the championship victory last night.

All semifinal games will be played tonight starting at 4:30 p.m. at the Boyden playing fields.

New approach used to collect evaluations

By ROGER ATWOOD
Collegian Correspondent

The student Senate Academic Affairs Committee will be sending evaluation forms directly to students this year to compile On the Other Hand, a yearly evaluation of professors and courses.

Cathy Linn, committee chairperson, said sending the forms directly to students instead of distributing them through professors should make the evaluation book more representative and useful.

Each student will receive six forms in the mail, fill them out, and, the SSAAC hopes, send them completed to the On the Other Hand office, she said.

Previously, the SSAAC asked professors to circulate the evaluation forms in each of their classes, where students would fill out the forms and hand them back to the professor. Each instructor had the option of deciding whether or not to release the students' evaluations, and many did not, Linn said. Sometimes whole departments would not return the evaluations and so, On the Other Hand became an overwhelmingly approving survey of University of Massachusetts professors and courses, Linn said.

Linn said she "hopes to get a better sampling of the students' opinions" with the new system.

"In past years, only about 45 percent of professors were consistent about returning the evaluations," said Linn, "and it seemed like we were getting responses from the same professors, and mostly the better ones."

The new forms have already gone out to students in some dormitories, and response so far has been moderate, said Linn.

Professors' response to the new method has been mixed, she said. Some support the new system "just because it gets the whole process out of their hair," and because they feel it is a "more honest system," she said.

Committee has developed model contract for majors

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The Academic Affairs Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate has developed a model contract to explain the rights students have within their majors.

The model contract has been created to serve as a guideline for students who wish to organize within their major to get more out of their education, Candyce Carlon Co-chair of Academic Affairs Committee and co-author of the contract said.

"There is more to a major than learning in the classroom. Students should have proper career counseling and healthy environments in which to learn," Carlon said.

Carlon said she hopes the model contract will inform students of their rights. The contract will also serve as an idea of how students can organize Councils within their majors, she said.

"Classrooms should be free of toxins and fire hazards. Students have a right to learn in an environment conducive to classroom use," Carlon said.

Carlon also said she hopes the contract will "raise a few eyebrows" and "get the professors to clean up some of their departments."

The contract will be sent to student councils already in existance and will be available to all students, Carlon said.

"Professors have contracts with the administration and know what to expect. Students should also have the right to know what is expected from them and what to expect from professors," Carlon said.

Carlon said she felt students should have sylabai that are not subject to change half way through the semester.

"The contract is just an idea and we have no plans on implementing it," she said.

Everywoman's center fears end to funding for rape counselling

Staff members of the Everywoman's Center and concerned women at the University of Massachusetts said yesterday they are urging women to attend today's public budget hearing where they expect Student Government Association budget committee opposition to funding of the center's coordinator rape counseling.

Helen O'Donnell of the Everywoman's Center called the $2,750 received from the Student Activities Trust Fund "critical" for the maintenance of the position. The position is also funded by $2,524 from the Graduate Student Sentate and $3,600 from the Student Development and Counseling Center.

SGA Treasurer Richard Goldman said yesterday the $2,750 is included in the budget and he did not expect any opposition. Barrington Henry, the committee's co-chair, also said there would not, to his knowledge, be any committee opposition.

The hearing, originally scheduled for 4 p.m., is now scheduled for 2 p.m. in Campus Center Room 101. O'Donnell said the budget committee has kept information about the meeting quiet and that women at the center had not been contacted about the time change.

According to O'Donnell the Everywoman's Center has received the same amount of money from the trust fund for the past three years.

Faculty Senate elects new officer

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

In its final and busiest meeting of the semester, the Faculty Senate yesterday elected a new presiding officer, recommended the establishment of an institute for advanced study in humanities and referred back to committee a proposed constitution for the arts council.

The senate took 20 votes on 17 motions, unanimously passing 15 and referring two back to committees, in completing the four pages of agenda in just under two and one-half hours.

Political Science professor Dean Alfange was elected to the one year term of presiding officer in a contest with Psychology professor Stanley Moss. Alfange replaces David Booth, also of the Political Science department. Booth recieved a standing ovation from the senate when the meeting adjourned.

The establishment of an institute for advanced study in the humanities was recommended by the senate. According to a Program and Budget Council special report, the institute is "intended to serve the research interests of faculty with humanistic concerns across various disciplines." Booth, chair of the program and budget council, said that "on balance, this (proposal) is a rich and promising idea." Booth noted that in recent years the council had not supported new programs, but that this was "new and different."

Questions concerning the funding of the institute were raised. The institute seeks a budget of $19,900 to be funded from trust funds, however Provost Loren Baritz said that about $13,000 was set aside for the program. Booth ended the discussion by saying that "it's anticipated that this institute will cut its coat according to its cloth."

A proposed constitution for the arts council was referred back to the Faculty Senate Rules Committee after Baritz read a letter from Chancellor Koffler announcing that Koffler would not accept the constitution in its present form. The arts council will continue to operate with the same constitution it has employed the past 15 years.

History professor Bruce Laurie was announced as the new president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP).

The senate passed a motion recommending that no administrator "simultaneously hold two or more positions where one of the positions reports to another."

An exchange agreement with Tunghai University in Taiwan was approved as was a minor in food science and nutrition

A motion that attempted to more precisely define the terms academic record and transcript was referred back to the Committee on Admissions and Records.

The academic calender for 1983-1984 was approved. Luther Allen, chair of the Space and Calender Committee, announced that the calender contained the "innovation of having commencement on Sunday." Allen said this change was made to accomodate those of the Jewish faith.

The senate passe a motion to halt the "informal practice of granting deferred degrees to undergraduates," beginning in the September 1981 degree granting period. This means that students graduating after their original degree date will have their diploma dated for the actual year of graduation.

Pope reported to be making excellent recovery

Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II was reported making an excellent recovery yesterday from bullet wounds inflicted by a Turkish terrorist, and despite mild depression and the high risk of infection was visited by two aides and a Polish nun in his sterilized hospital room.

Thousands flocked to St. Peter's Basilica to pray for the pontiff, who was reported to have received last rites when he first entered the hospital. Police interrogating his attacker said he began a hunger strike and claimed he was a Palestinian sympathizer.

Meanwhile, Ann Odre, 58, of Buffalo, N.Y., one of two women wounded in the attack in St. Peter's Square Wednesday, was reported in serious condition after the removal of her spleen. The other woman, Rose Hall, 21, wife of a Protestant minister serving U.S. forces in Wuerzburg, West Germany, was reported in good condition with a severed nerve in the elbow.

Earlier reports had said Mrs. Hall was a Jamaican and was wounded in the leg.

A medical bulletin issued at 6 p.m. — noon EDT — by Rome's Gemelli Policlinico Hospital said: "The general conditions of the pope are substantially unchanged. In the 10 successive hours since the first bulletin was issued, his state of consciousness is much better, with a little bit of activity in the room. The post-operative clinical limits are normal for cardiovascular, respiratory and metabolic activities. The prognosis is still guarded."

But Dr. Francesco Crucitti, one of the pope's surgeons at the hospital, said the pontiff was making an "excellent" recovery. He said the pope, who turns 61 Monday, remained under mild sedation, receiving intravenuous feeding, and that the main worry was infection over the next few days. "If we can control this one, we may be able to say we are out of the woods," he said

Italian police identified and charged the suspect arrested after the shooting. They named him as escaped Turkish terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca, who had threatened the pope's life once before.

Convicted in absentia and sentenced to death in April 1980 for murdering a noted Turkish newspaper editor, the 23-year-old suspect was described by interrogators as a "stoic, real quiet type."

Lebanese villagers pose with Israeli reconnaissance drone that was shot down about seven miles from the Syrian border in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley.

Diplomatic attempts threatened

Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib consulted yesterday with the leaders of Syria and Israel, but his diplomatic attempt to resolve the two countries' dispute in Lebanon appeared threatened by the Syrian downing of a pilotless Israeli reconnaissance plane.

The plane, called a "drone" and used to photograph troops on the ground, was shot down by a volley of Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles in eastern Lebanon while Habib was in Damascus yesterday morning for talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad.

In the evening, the veteran American diplomat flew to Tel Aviv for talks with Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who was to address a political rally before seeing Habib.

Israel demands the Syrian missiles be removed from Lebanon. Yesterday, Begin said the downing of the aircraft had created a "grave situation" even if Israeli pilots were not involved.

"It proves our thesis that those missiles are dangerous to our national security," Begin told reporters in Jerusalem.

In Damascus, informed diplomatic sources told The Associated Press that Habib could not talk Assad into withdrawing the SAM-6 missiles. The sources believed Habib's mission was in a "critical phase."

Nuclear Plant operational after shutdown

VERNON, Vt. (AP) — The Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant was at 75 percent of power yesterday after a 33-hour shutdown caused by a blown fuse that will cost New England utilities hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Vermont Yankee spokesman Steve Stoll said yesterday the Vernon reactor should be back at full power within 24 to 36 hours, more than a day later than first predicted.

A fuse in a reactor safety system blew Monday morning, automatically triggering a shutdown of the 540-megawatt reactor.

The plant had been scheduled to return to full power Wednesday night but Stoll said today officials decided to "creep up toward 100 percent" because of a change made in the pattern of the reactor rods. Such a change always requires a slow start-up for safety, he said.

Meanwhile New England utilities are beginning to put together estimates of the cost of the shutdown.

Because the shutdown was unscheduled, utilities that receive power from Vermont Yankee were forced to buy replacement power at the highest prices.

Vermont's largest utility, Central Vermont Public Service Corp., estimated the shutdown cost about $100,000 a day while Green Mountain Power Corp. officials put the pricetag at $50,000 a day.

Intimidation of Vietnamese shrimpers ordered to stop

HOUSTON — U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald issued a preliminary injunction yesterday ordering the Ku Klux Klan and a group of American fishermen to stop all acts of intimidation against Vietnamese shrimpers on Galveston Bay.

The judge did not rule on a request by the Vietnamese shrimpers that the federal marshals be assigned to the area and that Coast Guard patrols be stepped up when the 60-day bay shrimping season opens Friday.

The Vietnamese claim they were given until opening day to evacuate the bay, a charge the defendants denied.

Ms. McDonald also said she would not order paramilitary training camps run by the Klan shut down, but said she may rule on the matter later.

Former Massachusetts Women shot at the Vatican

FITCHBURG, Mass — A 21-year-old woman, wounded in the assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II, was a "devout and peaceful girl" who had plans to go into the ministry, former instructors at a Fitchburg parochial school said yesterday.

Digest

By the Associated Press

The victim, Rose Hall, was shot in the elbow Wednesday when a would-be assassin sprayed bullets at the pope during a weekly general audience at the Vatican in Rome.

The pope was seriously wounded in the abdomen. Another bystander, Ann Odre, 58, was reported in serious condition with a chest wound. Ms. Hall was reported in good condition.

Another jailed guerrilla joins ranks of the hunger strikers

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Irish Republican Army kept up its pressure campaign against the British government yesterday and another jailed guerrilla joined the ranks of hunger strikers as a replacement for dead IRA gunman Francis Hughes.

In London, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher reiterated her government's resolve never to give in to demands for political status for jailed IRA guerrillas.

Responding to a call for more "flexibility" from Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and three other American politicians, Mrs. Thatcher said, "yielding to coercion would provoke further coercion and encourage more young people to follow the path of violence."

Hughes, 25, died Tuesday in the hospital wing of the Maze prison near Belfast after 59 days without food, a week after fellow IRA prisoner Bobby Sands died in the 66th day of a hunger strike aimed at forcing the government to grant political prisoner status to Irish nationalists.

Unborn baby successfully treated for deadly disease

SAN FRANCISCO — An unborn baby girl suffering from a deadly inherited disease was treated successfully when doctors gave medicine to her mother, University of California doctors reported yesterday.

Treating the baby by treating the mother is an "important new concept," tried only twice before, said Dr. Seymour Packman of UC-San Francisco. The technique "could be applicable and very beneficial for a fair number of (inherited) metabolic diseases," he added.

The child, Nicole Whitmore, of Santa Rosa, was born last Dec. 21 with a disorder that prevents her body from utilizing a crucial vitamin called biotin.

Budget for next year approved by SW gov't

By JOHN DIPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Area Government last night unanimously approved their $25,508 budget for the 1982 fiscal school year.

The budget gives $18,808 to the Southwest Residential College, which in turn funds the Southwest Women's Center, the Malcolm X Center and various Southwest Residential College courses.

An additional $6700 will be used to fund the salaries of the government's officers, the salary of the engineer for Southwest radio station WZZZ, and the government's office supply budget.

Also, the government allocated $300 as salary for a summer position to be held by co-president Theresa Kolish.

Kolish, citing the fact that the University of Massachusetts administration makes many decisions affecting students during the summer, said the post was needed "to ensure that there is student input."

The new position will involve monitoring university plans affecting the Hampden Student Center, organizational planning for next year and acting as liason to the Student Government Association Coordinating Committee this summer.

The position would also entail sending bi-weekly reports to members of the government's executive staff during the summer.

In other business, Eric Spiel briefed the government on plans by the Undergraduate Student Senate to cut the government's $43,000 budget by approximately eight percent for next year.

The government this year received $9 out of the Student Activities Tax Fund for every Southwest resident. The Senate proposal would cut that to $8.25, a $.75 decrease.

Spiel said he and other government members plan to lobby SGA senators to cut the allocation per resident only 50 cents.

Inferiority complex results from competition

By PAUL GUEST
Collegian Staff

"A measurable effect in the in-state inferiority complex at the University of Massachusetts results from the competition with Harvard, M.I.T., Boston University, and Boston College," the director of English education at UMass said.

Department director John Nelson discussed in a Collegian interview the common misperception of UMass as a party school rather than a serious academic institution.

Nelson said the misperception, primarily held by in-state students, has become pervasive enough to prevent the recruitment of some of the Commonwealth's top high school students.

"In-state students have an image of UMass implying an "animal house" atmossphere with students as animals presided by an administration of zoo keepers," Nelson said.

"I think about the reality of the 1980's, where we as a university should welcome self-criticism, but not fall into the cliches of the past," Nelson said.

Students here know the whole spectrum, he said, from intellectual challenges to the Drake. The word should get out of the excellence of academics, the clubs, and the international level of the foreign exchange program, Nelson said.

The reputation of the all-night blast is covered by the underground, but what isn't covered is the enormous amount of people learning a wide variety of degrees, he said.

"What is bad gets publicized instead of hearing of the quality of professors," said Jacqualine Dorfman, an economics major from New Jersey.

The economics department is the second best in the country, Nelson said.

Nelson's experience with UMass is one with a big educational value. Because UMass isn't an elitist school, its own members pay lip service to the members of the elite, he said. Journalistically, a bizarre, congruous, dominant image appears of the school, Nelson said. Perhaps 75 to 80 percent of the damage done on Halloween is by non-students, he said and students should be aware of the inaccurate reputation of UMass.

Joseph P. Healey of Arlington, chairman of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees for the past 12 years, will deliver the commencement address May 30 in Alumni Stadium.

Honorary degrees will be awarded to Healey, poet Gwendolyn Brooks, Smith College President Jill Conway, Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox, publisher William G. Dunn, and UMass astrophysicist John D. Strong.

UMass President David C. Knapp is expected to confer degrees on more than 3,880 candidates; 2,800 undergraduates and 1,080 graduates. Chancellor Henry Koffler will address the graduates and Ellen Davis, of Boxford, a journalism major, will deliver the senior address.

Healey, president of Baybank Middlesex, will be awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Healey is a graduate of Harvard College, Harvard Business School and Harvard Law School and has taught at Boston College Law School.

Gwendolyn Brooks of Chicago will receive an honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree.

Brooks has published 12 books of poetry during the past 35 years and has won awards including the Pulitzer Prize for Poetry in 1950 and two Guggenheim Fellowships.

Jill Conway of Australia will be awarded an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

BOG supports effort to save auto workshop

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors, in an effort to save the Student Auto Body Workshop from financial death, overwhelmingly voted last night to begin a petition drive to solve the crisis.

The Board, pledging its support against the Auto cooperative's financial woes, authorized a table to be set up in the Campus Center concourse next week to obtain student signatures petitioning the university's financial requirements of the co-op.

Currently, the Workshop, located in the Campus Center garage, is charged an annual yearly rental fee of $2,400 by the Campus Center Parking Office.

Gerald Aldridge, spokesman for the Workshop, said, at the present time, the Workshop is the only co-op on campus that is charged any kind of fee by the university, and if it is not abolished by next fall, the co-op will be nonexistent.

Although the Workshop is cutting back on the space used in the garage, Aldridge said, the co-op still needs an estimated $6,800 to cover next year's rent and deficit payments incurred over the last fiscal year.

BOG Legal Intern, Ernie Dwork, emphasizing the need for active student involvement to save the Workshop, said the petition drive is a way of getting to the administration.

"This is something people can get behind. If students get organized either over the summer or in the fall it can work. If the administration gets its way with this they might start coming down on other co-ops," he said.

At present, the Auto Workshop is designed to meet the auto needs of university students.

In other business, the board voted Scott Cashman as new BOG chairperson for the upcoming year. Cashman takes over the position from graduating senior Brian DeLancey.

The Coalition provides facilities for lobbying

The Coalition, a group of concerned students and student organizations who advocate full funding of all public higher education institutions in Massachusetts, is providing free facilities for students to lobby their state legislators concerning Governor King's proposed budget cuts for Massachusetts' state colleges and universities.

Letter writing and telephone facilities are available today at the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) office in Room 422 of the Student Union Building. Telephoning facilities are also available at Alumni Hall, near Bartlett Hall, from 10-4 today.

Items reported stolen from area apartment

University of Massachusetts police received a report of a television, typewriter and radio all valued at $785 stolen from a North Village apartment at 1:42 p.m. yesterday.

In another incident, three bicycles valued with a total value of $735 were reported stolen yesterday in three different incidents from in front of the Student Union, Cance and James residence halls in the Southwest Residential Area, police said.

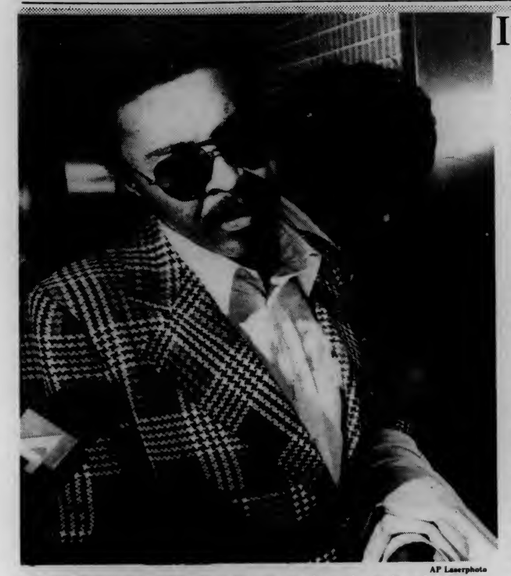
BLACK AFFAIRS



AP Laserphoto

BUFFALO—Albert Menefee, the lone survivor of a series of eight attacks on Buffalo area black men, leaves the Erie County Grand Jury chambers following his viewing of a lineup which included Joseph Christopher, who has been charged with second-degree murder in three of those attacks. Menefee was stabbed in the heart last Dec. 31, and survived following extensive surgery.

NNPA Pres. calls for unity

In a clarion call to publishers of 210 black newspapers throughout the nation, John L. Procope urged "A unanimity of purpose" to make manifest "one powerful voice" to improve the quality of life for a census counted 30,000,000 black Americans. Procope, himself publisher of the New York Amsterdam News, made the statement in an inaugural message since becoming President of the National Newspaper Publishers Assoication.

Procope, as NNPA's first vice president, last month succeeded President John Sengstacke, association founder, who resigned recently because of "excessive business and personal commitments." He said he would serve out Senstacke's term until June of 1982. He received the unanimous endorsement of the NNPA board of directors "with the full commitment for establishing and maintaining the viability of the association and to increase its visibility, image and impact within the nation" Procope added that we would seek "to enhance benefits to members and to move forward under new vitalized programs."

In issuing a call for unity, Procope decried what he called "internal politics and bickering" among publishers, manyh of whom are NNPA members but of such other publishing untis as Black Media, Amalgamated Publishers or "what have you." He recommended that all the black media—newspapers, magazines "or even shopping guides—pull together to help each other" fill the vacuum of leadership and maximize the potential for service to an estimated four million readers.

International News Brief

Integration increases in Zimbabwe

(From Zimbabwe) — Zimbabwe's press reports an increase in the number of black Africans buying homes in formerly all-white neighborhoods of Harare (Salisbury), the Zimbabwean capital. Most of these new residents are professionals, government bureaucrats, and other more privileged Africans. They include some Zimbabweans who had been in exile.

Soviet press attacks S. African repression

(From the Soviet Union) — The Soviet press lashed out at the government of South Africa for its recent step up in repression of the black population. The increased repression includes more no-knock searches, increased surveillance, and arrests.

Mobil Oil investigated

(From Zimbabwe) — Mobil Oil is running into problems with the U.S. Department of Justice for past violations of sanctions against shipping oil to the now defunct government of Rhodesia. Mobil Oil has in the past argued that it could not obtain documents from its subsidiary in Rhodesia as a result of that country's internal security act. However, Zimbabwean Minister of Justice Simbe Mubako has informed the U.S. government that such information is now available and has been available since the new government of Robert Gabriel Mugabe took office. As a result of this new development in the case Mobil Oil is attempting to change its defense. Mobil is now arguing that its U.S. based leadership cannot be held legally responsible for the actions of its subsidiaries.

Zimbabwe allows guerilla bases

(From South Africa) — A top South African police official has claimed that Zimbabwe's government is allowing guerilla bases of the revolutionary African National Congress to be established on the Zimbabwe-South African border. The police official hinted that South Africa might take military action against the government of Zimbabwe as a result. The African National Congress (ANC) has been declared illegal by the racist government in power in South Africa. Although the ANC has a political headquarters in Zimbabwe there is no evidence that it has established any military organization. The Zimbabwe government denies the existence of any such military bases. A top official of the Zimbabwe government expressed concern over this new posturing by South Africa, which has invaded other African nations almost at will. The officaial, speaking for the government, said that if attacked the Zimbabwe government "would not hesitate to figh back."

Doctors arrested in Kenya

(From Kenya) — Ten doctors have been arrested in Kenya for being illegally on strike. Medical techinicians, doctors, and nurses have been attempting to negotiate salary increases with the government for several months without success.

C.I.A.

(From India) — The Indian press has reported that the U.S. CIA may have been involved in the sabotage of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's jet.

Nicaragua pledges to never invade U.S.

(From Nicaragua) — Miguel D'Escoto, Nicaragua's for foreign minister, says he does not understand the Reagan administration's hostility towards his nation.

D'Escoto, a priest turned revolutionary, says that U.S. policies make little sense. "Nicaragua is a country with fewer people than the smallest borough of New York City. Yet the Reagan people express concern about us threatening U.S. security," D'Escoto said.

"I give my word of honor that we will not invade the U.S.," D'Escoto added. "The people of Nicaragua have never invaded the U.S. or tried to annex any part of U.S. territory. We have never deposed their presidents and replaced them with our friends, or gangsters, to rule over them."

D'Escoto made it clear, however, that the Nicaraguan people would defend their honor and sovereignty "to death." He was critical of U.S. support for raids into Nicaragua by former national guard troops who had operated as the private army of deposed dictator Anastasio Somoza.

Police report burglaries and shoplifting in the area

Two apartments in Brittany Manor were burglarized Wednesday and class rings were stolen in both incidents, Amherst police said.

In the first incident, the apartment door was pryed open and two rings valued at $150 were taken, police said.

In the second incident, there were no signs of forced entry, but a class ring and $70 were reported missing, police said.

Police said local ring dealers have been notified.

Peleton, Incorporated was reportedly burglarized between Wednesday night and yesterday morning and two Peugeot bicycles, valued at $852, were stolen, police said.

A vehicle parked at Amherst Towing was broken into Wednesday and an am-fm tape player was reportedly stolen, police said.

Police said the Yellow Sun Natural Food Co-operative reported a shoplifter tried to steal $32 in food Wednesday. The alleged shoplifter was given a trespass notice and the store intends to seek complaints in district court, police said.

Police said an accident occurred Wednesday on Triangle Street at the East Pleasant Street intersection when a car driven by George Leidig, 23, of Cheshire, Connecticut, struck a car driven by Ruth M. Carpenter, of Amherst. Carpenter, 79, was traveling east on Triangle and was making a right turn on to East Pleasant St., police said.

Police said there were no injuries and no citations were issued.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Editorial

Rape: a violent crime in a violent society

It is estimated by some that one woman out of every three will be raped in her lifetime. It can happen to any woman, anyone's mother, sister, wife, girlfriend, grandmother, or daughter.

A high school girl takes a walk with a casual friend in the woods on a sunny spring day. He decides to force her to "go all the way" with him and nobody hears her screams. Afterwards he asks her if she wants to got out with him Friday night.

A middle-aged woman is headed toward her parked car one night when a man with a knife jumps out from behind a car and forces her to submit to intercourse with him. When he's through he asks her for her phone number so they can get together again.

A woman is hitchhiking after her car has broken down on the highway. A man offers her a ride to the gas station. He takes her to a deserted area and forces her at knife point to have intercourse. Afterwards he offers to take her to her destination.

A five-year-old girl is lying in bed at night when her father comes in to kiss her goodnight and sexually abuse her. He tells her he loves her.

A college woman leaves a party drunk with a couple of acquaintances who take her to their apartment and force her to have intercourse with them. Afterwards they tell her she's welcome to spend the night.

Once every seven minutes acts similar to these occur in the U.S., according to FBI statistics.

All these instances of rape have some things in common. The females did not want to have sexual intercourse with the male, and the male didn't care. The male didn't think he did anything wrong, but the female probably thought she did, and the people she might have told about the rape probably thought she did too. They think, for instance, the high school girl shouldn't have gone into the woods with a boy she didn't know very well, even though they were in the same classes in high school. The middle-aged woman shouldn't have been alone at night in the parking lot. The hitchhiker should have been aware of the chance she was taking. The five-year-old girl must have seduced her father. And the college woman shouldn't have gotten so drunk.

From this point of view, we might conclude that once every seven minutes some sex maniac loses control of himself in the hands of a loose or seductive woman. But then how do we account for studies showing that, with the exception of about three percent, rapists seem to be sexually and psychologically normal? How do we account for the fact that research shows the primary motive for rape is aggression, in which the rapist is motivated by the need to abuse, humiliate and degrade the victim? And how do we account for the results of a recent survey of college males who were required to read an account of a man with a knife raping a woman, in which 17 percent responded that they would be likely to do the same under the circumstances, and 51 percent said they might if they were assured of not being caught?

It would be very convenient to continue blaming the woman for her behavior. Then it's her responsibility to prevent rape, not society's. We could continue to suggest that women impose restrictions on their own behavior, which would supposedly decrease their chances of being raped. But rape, which the FBI says is the fastest rising violent crime in America, will not diminish until the rapists, who feel it is their right to rape, impose limits on their own behavior, and respect the right of half the human race to live without the threat of rape, as they themselves do.

Limits to advertising

Yesterday's Collegian contained an insert advertising four movies that are to appear locally in the coming months. The Collegian received a number of complaints from readers who found parts of the insert sexist. Many at the Collegian agreed.

The insert was not seen by the Collegian before the paper circulated because, as all national advertising inserts, it was delivered by the advertiser to the printer for insertion.

With the knowledge that national advertisers cannot be trusted to deliver responsible material, the Collegian will in the future request all inserts, like normal display ads, to be sent ahead of time for review. If the Collegian finds an insert objectionable, the advertiser will be asked to revise the ad accordingly.

Readers sensitive to the First Amendment rights of advertisers might take exception to this practice by the Collegian and see it as censorship. They are reminded that the courts distinguish between advertising and other forms of expression.

Quoting from Legal Limits in Publishing, Radio and Television (Paul P. Ashley, University of Washington Press, 1976): "The public has a strong interest in the operation of newspapers and magazines. However, the courts hold that publication is a private enterprise and that those who engage in it are free to deal with whomever they choose. Hence, any advertiser may be refused unless the refusal furthers an illegal monopoly, conspiracy, or other unlawful purpose."

The guest column "State aid to S. Africa" that appeared in yesterday's editorial page was incorrectly attributed to Mary Ann Cloherty, through no fault of her own. The actual authors of the column were members of the Massachusetts Committee for Divestment from South Africa.

Architecture's influence

Steve Masse

The Valley Advocate has been running an advertisement for the Amherst Savings Bank, and the ad has an intriguing photo of the old Amherst House. Somehow the picture strikes in me a feeling of intense nostalgia. I'd like to tear down the Savings Bank and reconstruct that beautiful antique in its proper place. There would be a barber shop, a community hall, a saloon with stained glass windows and lion's head fountains, an apothecary and of course, a bank. What a great town Amherst would be if all its original buildings were still standing—but alas, fire and modern commerce have taken their toll.

A lot of people breeze through this town in a matter of a few years or less, and I'd bet a lot of students leave without ever really exploring the place. I myself didn't even see Puffer's Pond until my third year, much less swim in it. I've never been in the town hall (that big brick edifice that looks like a church but always has police cars around it), or in the upper floors of Cook's Block across Main Street. Cook's Block—doesn't that sound old New England? Then there's Emily Dickinson's house, and I never visited there even though I was an English major.

There is something enchanting, almost haunting, about old buildings. Solid walls of brick that were built by the calloused hands of laborers, stained and leaded glass that reflect the care of bygone artisans, woodwork hewn from the finest grains and sanded smooth, finished to frame a room with splendor that can not be matched for any kind of money today. When we enter one of these old houses, there is a feeling in the atmosphere—a presence of the vanished spirits whose handiwork made the building. It's a pleasant rush—if you remember how you used to shiver sometimes as a kid when you went into an old house, you can understand the power of that presence. That presence lives on. It's all the work of human hands, work done with pride and work that is a powerful testament of the better side of humanity—building good things.

Whenever people talk about self-destructive tendencies in the human being, the talk can get pretty depressing because there is a daily assortment of news about human destruction. Destruction reflects anger and dissatisfaction, hunger and hatred. But it is comforting to know that there is another important and very evident drive in people—to build and to keep that beauty alive.

I've worked as a restorer in many homes, both antique and modern. Old oak and mahogany has been replaced with easy pine and plywood. Carved doors have become hollow core, and glass doorknobs have become hollow brass sarcasms. Stained glass windows—never mind.

It doesn't take long to visit a couple of old places. Being aware of living history doesn't take a college degree. All you have to want is that feeling there is something permanent around you, something strong and lasting. The Campus Center is huge and peculiar, and the Fine Arts Center carries the UMass tradition of weird art, the library tower is a big brick phallic object—and in the midst of it all it the most photographed building on campus, the Old Chapel Why? Because it stands quietly attesting to its own strength and sublime beauty—it knows that this campus would be a mere factory if it weren't for the antique buildings.

Be aware of the buildings as you are aware of advertising tricks, sexism, racism, costs of living. Buildings are extremely influential, and just like the people you hang around with, the building you gravitate toward reflect your personality. Perhaps few of us can change what is built before our eyes, but at least we could find out a bit about the effects of buildings on our brains.

I got a sneak preview (by word of mouth) about the next issue of The Other Voice. There will be articles on colonial, solar and campus architecture. Don't worry, it comes free with next Wednesday's Collegian—and it shouldn't be tossed out with the daily rag. Save it for a quiet time, and become aware of the architecture that surrounds you even though you pass by it every day.

Steve Masse was a Collegian columnist

Rock n' roll safety

On May 17th UMass students, alumni and others who comprise the Five College community will saunter through the gates of Alumni Stadium to participate in this year's Spring ritual: Community Day. Music performed by John Hall, Bonnie Raitt, N.R.B.Q. and B.B. King. Fun and games played and provided by you. Community Day is an event which has been anticipated an planned for with no small controversy.

Now, after much negotiating among the various campus agencies it is time for a positive experience, one which will prove the prophets of doom unequivakably wrong. Your actions, as a member of the audience, will now play one of the most important parts in making the day.

Although the University administration agrees with the philosophy of a spring concert, they were understandably hesitant to support this year's program. This reluctance was due largely to a concern brought on by some of the accidents that occured during Spring Concert 1980. Even a cursory look at the statistics compiled by the University Health Services will underline the administration's concern. EMT's and Health Center personnel treated 100 people in the stadium, transferred 35 to the Health Center for treatment and admitted 20 for more extensive care in the inpatient unit. Not very comfortable for those involved.

It may appear that these figures are not "critical." After all, approximatley 25,000 people were in attendance at the concert. It is the extent of the injuries, however, that raises the level of concern. Two people broke their backs, one lost an eye, one lucky soul almost died enroute to the hospital after the "stadium wall moved." These aren't funny incidents, and they could have been prevented. These facts are not meant to shock you. You and your friends may have enjoyed last year's concert without even being aware that others had been hurt. Still, several members of our community were seriously hurt, and we feel that need not have happened. It's more fun to have fun without any pain.

Many of last years injuries were related to the over-use and mis-use of both alcohol and other drugs—either alone or in combination. Much of the morning-after pain could have been prevented with simply a little pre-party thought. It is not that we are advocating the elimination of common "party substances," but rather we feel strongly about their responsible use at this year's event.

No one but Five College students and alumni will be permitted into the stadium. No friends or family or other connections will be permitted. And for two dollars we get to wear a hospital (!) wristband which permits us three beers. In addition, no other food or beverages will be allowed into the stadium. All of these added detractions were brought to you by last year's events. Ready for similar changes in next year's spring productions? If not, let's move to maintain a responsible "spring fling."

Think about your choices during the day. Party, dance, and rock n' roll. Boogie the day away. But not up the hill to the Health Center. Let's keep our minds and bodies in one piece this year and dance to the music of the fiddler.

Drink less, play more

Last year, the weekend before the 'Spring Concert,' the headlines in the Collegian read "Concert '80, UMass anticipates 'Big Event'" (3/9/80). This event has traditionally been considered a highlight of the school year—the welcoming of spring—a relaxing and enjoyable day for all. It's spring, it's warm, and the end of another school year is close at hand.

The Tuesday following the concert, the Collegian reported 'Concert Casualties" (3/13/80). These mishaps include "a large number of arrests and injuries," as well as acts of violence and vandalism, all of which are quite preventable. Overuse of alcohol and/or drugs, (as well as the dangerous combination of the two) is a major contributing factor in these accidents, violence, vandalism and arrests.

This year, we urge you to welcome spring in a different manner at our "Spring Community Day." Enjoy the day, enjoy the concert—it is presented for each and eveyone of us. But do so in a responsible manner, taking care of yourself and others as well—so that there will be other spring celebrations such as this and the headlines on Monday read "Spring Community Day—smooth, safe and successful."

Malicious acts

As a member of the Anti-Racism Training Practicum in the Northeast/Sylvan Area, I feel compelled to respond to Martha Gumbiner's letter (Collegian, 5/11) concerning destructive acts.

As part of my training I have a bulletin board on my floor to increase awareness and provide information concerning the situations in Atlanta, Ireland, El Salvador, etc. This material is for everyone yet it is constantly being defaced. Particularly information on El Salvador is ripped down almost as fast as I can put it up. I welcome criticism but is seems that there are those who are afraid to face me, probably because they cannot justify their actions.

In a school where there are 25,000 people, there will always be those who will try to suppress others' opinions.

For those of you who committ these malicious acts, our freedom of speech is a guaranteed constitutional right. If you do not wish to respect this civil right, I'm sure you can find employment in some other country where they will welcome your assistance in oppressing people.

A word of warning

Now, at this time of year brings new apartment hunters, I am writing to tell these seekers how Amherst landlords are taking advantage of students.

I have lived in the Townehouse Apartment complex for the past year and a half. As many know, this complex has the largest waiting list in the Amherst area. Supply is limited and demand is great. Being a loyal capitalistic supporter, as Townehouse is, they have increased their rent as many other landlords have each year. However, in the past year and a half, they have raised their rent as high as 95 dollars per month for a two bedroom, unfurnished apartment (not including utilities.).

This does not say much for what they think of their tenants, mainly students. For most of us the solution would be to get another roommate to share this burden of expense.

This can lead to old tenement-style living. We must not confuse dorm living with apartment living. Soon there won't be any difference. I wish the students would unite and organize, to show these landlords that we have rights too!

A larger issue

As concerned individuals, we are compelled to speak out regarding an incident which occurred yesterday in the Student Concourse and Campus Center. We were on our way to the Hatch when we witnessed a group of women removing an advertisement insert from every Collegian. Naturally concerned that seven individuals should take it upon themselves to decide what 24,000 people should read, we inquired as to how they justified their action. "We consider these advertisements offensive and examples of violence against women," they said.

Looking quickly at the insert, we found that on that point we could not disagree. It was in fact sexist, even pornographic. However, we felt that this was transcended by a larger issue—whether individuals should be denied the right to choose for themselves the materials they wish to read. In that light, we condemn their action as censorship, undoubtedly for a good cause, but nonetheless still censorship. What we question is the right of any individual or group to make this decision on behalf of the rest of the community, for what these tactics compare to are Nazi book burnings of the 1930's, the forced removal of Old Testaments from book stores by the "Moral Majority," and the black-listing of Hollywood actors amid the hysteria of the Cold War.

We must assume this group seriously doubts not only the right but the ability of students to evaluate and make critical decisions about their reading matter. To this end, it must be regarded as an insult to the intelligence of every student that reads the Collegian. A human being is not simply a passive entity, lacking the ability to decide what is right or wrong for him or herself. We are all capable of reason and are endowed with minds to make these decisions independently. The denial of this fundamental right of every human being cannot be tolerated, people have to be kept aware that if the forces of censorship are allowed to win, we all stand to lose.

Book published after 20 years

A Confederacy of Dunces (Grove Press)
By John Kennedy Toole

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

There seemed to be a great furor in the literary community recently when John Kennedy Toole's A Confederacy of Dunces won the highly coveted Pulitzer Prize for Literature. Like Janet Cooke's highly publicized incident with The Washington Post Toole's selection was also marked with some controversy. For, although just recently published, Toole's book was written almost 20 years ago; eight years before the author himself was to commit suicide due to despair caused by his inability to get his book published.

It seems that this novel has taken the country by storm. It's funny, tragic, moody, mysterious, perverse, yet in it's own way, oddly logical. It is the book that many of the current bestsellers strive to be, yet it was written while John Kennedy was still in The White House and gasoline was 25 cents a gallon. To say that it must have been ahead of it's time is a gross understatement.

Both the plot and title of the book center the world's population and its feeble-minded attempts to interfere with the pure and noble intentions of one of the most memorable characters in the history of American Literature — Ignatius J. Reilly.

Obese, lazy, grotesque, partially mad, and easily given to obsessive rages, Ignatius Reilly is turned out of his house at the age of 30 by his mother who demands that he go out and find a job. This he does with an alarming ability to wreak havoc, destruction and chaos wherever fortune takes him.

Through Reilly's bloodshot eyes, we are given an intense and compelling vision of the nation's crescent city: New Orleans.

This star of the Mississippi, and its colorful inhabitants, prove an excellent backdrop for our hero's wanderings and ravings. Whether he gets a job as a clerk at a broken-down pants factory — where he stores all of the company's records in the circular file, or else as a hot dog vendor where he is forced to cruise the city's French Quarter dressed as a fugitive from a bad Errol Flynn movie, Reilly's encounters are often hillarious to the point of hysteria to everyone but himself. Regardless of where he goes, Ignatius feels right at home, but in reality is as out of place as Woody Allen would be at a Nazi Rally, Donny and Marie at a heavy metal concert and Jill St. John in a serious dramatic role.

Perhaps, here is where the bizarre emotional power of the book lies. Toole has created the almost perfectly self-possessed character in all of fiction. Ignatius is often so oblivious to everything around him that he is always shocked when his misguided schemes collapse into failure. Reilly is the ultimate obsessive character. Whether he

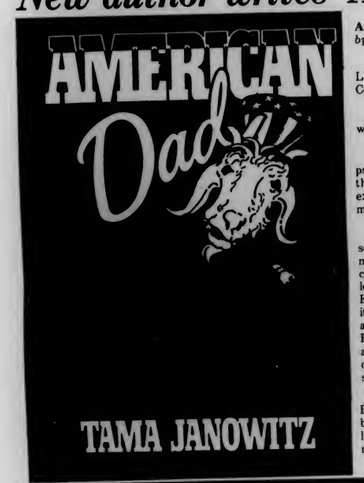
New author writes 'American Dad'



American Dad (Putnam's Sons)
by Tama Janowitz

LYNN M. RZESZUT
Collegian Staff

American Dad, Tama Janowitz's first novel is a circus with Shakespearian clowns.

Told from the viewpoint of Earl Przesniak, the son of a psychiatrist father and poet mother, American Dad follows the progression of a boy's prolonged adolescence. The explanation we are offered for this deviation from 'normal' maturity seems to spring from his parents' divorce.

Earl tells us about this experience through vignettes of separate vacations and homes in a voice that is often too mature for a boy on the verge of teens. He explains the city/country conflict and the difference in morality which led to the eventual breakup. Although we are told that Earl's parents speak to him as an adult from an early age, it seems incongruous to hear a prepubescent describe another child as "a blond six-year-old with a husky Lauren Bacall voice," or carrying on a conversation with his father about the progress of certain patients under his father's care, especially when he responds to a story about a naked self-proclaimed Messiah, with "Is he?"

Eventually we move with Earl, his mother and brother, Bobo, to a sleazy Boston apartment where Earl's mother becomes obviously unbalanced. Earl tells us it's not easy living with a genius, and if we are to believe Earl, then we must believe that he easily makes the adjustment. Living

Mean Cat' carries the comic craze

Mean Cat
by Steve Lafler

LYNN M. RZESZUT
Collegian Staff

Amherst's favorite native son is back, and better than ever, with Mean Cat, his new comic book. Complete with a new cast of characters and new story lines, Mean Cat is also decidedly more political than Steve's earlier work. Gerald and Benb have been replaced by Ernie Austere, a glum character who finds happiness in baked goods with raisins, and Mean Cat, a female cat who takes great pride in terrorizing pedestrians. Ernie and Mean Cat meet only after Ernie sees the Dimension L light and becomes Crazy Eddie, a much more likeable guy.

Steve takes on all kinds of conventions in his impressive art style. Tupperware parties and television watching are all shown for what they are, a la Lafler. Guido Kratchmer and the Naked Avenger of Scat fame are also seen.

It seems that Oregon must be good for Lafler's art, for the drawings and graphics are far superior to the old Aluminum Foil. The new book, which contains order blanks for new Lafler tee-shirts are currently on sale in the University Store.

Personally, I miss Benb! Gook luck in finals.

Conway, who taught at the University of Toronto before becoming the president of Smith College in 1975, is a historian of feminism and the American family, having authored over 20 articles on the subjects.

Archibald Cox, who headed the first Watergate Special Prosecution until dismissed by President Richard M. Nixon in 1973, will receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Since his graduation from Harvard Law School in 1937, Cox has served in federal government under Presidents Truman, Kennedy and Johnson, and is currently a leading authority on constitutional and labor law.

William Dunn of Lenox will be awarded an honorary Doctor of Public Service degree.

Dunn, a 1950 UMass graduate, is vice-president and publisher of U.S. News and World Report, and has also been an executive with Fawcett Publications and McCalls magazine.

John Strong of Amherst will receive an honorary Doctor of Science degree.

Strong's work over the past fifty years in experimental astrophysics and optics includes the development of aluminized mirrors for optical telescopes, infrared observations, and balloon-born telescope flights.

decorates the offices of "Levy Pants Inc." with medieval crucifixes made from cardboard or passes out on a Grayhound bus due to his combined fears of height and speed, Ignatius goes about his day to day affairs with an eerie logic that confounds everyone but himself.

It would be grossly innacurate of me to say that this book is merely another social commentary, for it doesn't attempt to preach about anything in particular, or even accuse anyone or anything of misdeeds. What it does however, is place an intangible character in an unrelenting world and let things take their natural course. It's truly a pity that Toole isn't alive today to write more about our times and surroundings, for with his death the world suffered the loss of a great novelist with an all too rare gift of laughter. Few writers around today have Toole's ear for dialogue, his precise feel for characters, and his ability to expose a tiny sense of sadness through a heavy veneer of laughter.

It is truly ironic that 12 years after his suicide, Toole is now posthumously awarded the 'Pulitzer Prize," his book is scheduled to become a major motion picture, and his estate is destined to make millions. Such an irony would easily fit into Ignatius Reilly's world, his creators world, and perhaps is a feature of our own as well.

off Dad's alimony and Mom's occassional sold poem, Bobo becomes a mere shadow in a story which revolves around Earl's and Mom's rooms where they isolate themselves from the world. There the live off various low forms of sustenance and morbid books involving natural disaster and stranger-than-truth psychic occurrence.

We believe that Earl would be pleased to have Bobo support him the rest of his days, but Dad, always a mental presence, becomes physical. He demands an end to the payment of alimony and in the scuffle, Mom is killed.

Up to this point, the story, though often far-fetched, carries itself off rather well. Earl shines as Holden Caulfield, caught in the confusion of love and disappointment which so often follows divorce. The problem is that now Earl must move out into the world, and from here on, the credibility slips with each page.

The depth of feeling which prompted an identification with Earl now seems abandoned, leaving a simple narrative. The end, which should have prompted questions, instead feels like a cheat. I have no doubt, however, that the depth and innuendo which permeate the earlier half of the book point to the fact that Ms. Janowitz is an extremely talented young writer.

"BICK"! HOW COULD THEY SPELL YOUR NAME "BICK"?
OH, DON'T WORRY ABOUT IT, JOANIE..
DON'T WORRY ABOUT IT? YOU DON'T CARE THAT YOUR NAME'S MIS-SPELLED ON YOUR OWN WEDDING INVITATION?!
I'M IN THE NEWSPAPER BUSINESS. I'M USED TO TYPOS.
WELL, I'M NOT! AND I DON'T WANT ALL MY FRIENDS CALLING YOU "BICK" AT THE WEDDING.
IF THERE IS A WEDDING. LOOKS LIKE THEY ALSO LEFT OFF THE DATE.
I CAN'T STAND IT..
NOW, THAT'S A PROBLEM. WE COULD HAVE RELATIVES DROPPING IN ON US ALL SUMMER.

BEAN

by Kevin X. McNamara

Dum-dee-dum. Here, Rodney, have a flower!
What for?
Because it's Spring!
What's wrong with it? Is there a bee in it? Im alergic to it right? Is it poison ivy?
I know! There's DDT poisoning on it right? Im going to take one sniff of this flower and drop dead right! Right Bean!?

'Community Day' features speakers

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., will be the featured speaker at Sunday's Community Day in Alumni Stadium.

Markey will speak on several aspects of the future of public higher education including federal funding for financial aid programs and the implications of President Reagan's budget for colleges and universities.

Markey's appearance is part of the week-long events on the future of public higher education.

He is scheduled to speak at 12:30 p.m. shortly after a performance by the band NRBQ.

But Linn said others were "furious," and some professors sent notes to Linn and Evaluation Coordinator Candy Carlon expressing "a certain hostility," and "a lot of resentment."

"We assumed there would be some resentment," said Ellen Putnam, a writer for On the Other Hand. "It's only to be expected from a lot of professors."

The magazine, funded by the Registered Student Organizations Trust Fund, will be prepared over the summer, and will probably be released around the middel of November, in time for advising week.

"We have no idea how big the book will be," Linn said, "but I hope we can make it at least double the size of last year's."

Last year's magazine covered only about 500 of the University's roughly 4,000 courses.

Over a million forms will be printed, and the mailing alone will cost about $3,000. With investment that heavy, said Linn, "we're in trouble if we don't get much response. It's critical, then, that everyone respond."

Part-Time Position Available:
ASSISTANT CRAFT SHOP COORDINATOR

Hampden Student Center, Southwest. Part-time position available starting September 1981. The Craft Shop is a multi-craft facility serving approximately 5500 students based in a residential college setting. Major craft areas include Jewelry, Stained Glass, Ceramics, and Silkscreening among others.

Example of duties: assist students in introduction to craft areas; work with the coordinator in the general operation and maintanance of the Craft Shop (1,500 sq. ft.). To include adequate inventory and security and to assist in the supervision of personnel.

Qualifications: experience in general crafts, administration and finance and the ability to work with/supervise students.

for the past two years, and it is hoped his positive and cool outlook will rub off on a young group of talented Massachusetts hurlers.

Lefthanders Steve Cramer (5-3) and Tony Presnal (4-3) will be taking the mound for the Minutemen tomorrow. The Big Green and coach George Landers have had a subpar, 6-22 campaign to date. They lost to Northeastern University, 5-4, in Boston.

BEHIND THE PLATE: Coach Bergquist had to go back ten years in his memory to find a freshman who has hit as well as Keith Lovellette this season. Not since Charley Manley, a centerfielder who hit around .350 in 1971, has a first man been in the upper .300 echelon. At .364, Lovellette, a lefty, is simply ripping the ball...Sophomore Dean Bennett has been virtually unstoppable on the base paths, achieving success in 14 of 15 stolen base attempts. McReddie still needs one home run to tie Bob Hanson's single season record of eight set in 1968.

Maroons on top in IM semis

Maniacs win berth in women's final

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

As is often the case in playoff games of any size and dimension, the simifinal matchup of the intramural softball league's men's division between the Maroons and Romp was not decided until the last possible minute, in this game the last half of the final inning.

Maroon cleanup batter Russ Reardon knocked in shortstop John Zaffira for what proved to be the winning run in the bottom of the fifth in the Maroons 6-5 victory last night at Boyden playing fields.

The Maroons started early in this contest, tallying three first inning runs with two coming across when a deep fly to left-center field by Reardon was dropped by a Romp defender with two men on base. Maroon pitcher John Waite held Romp scoreless until the top of the third, when Romp third baseman Joe Tamsey blasted a double off the dirt banks in left field to score two runs.

Each team added a run in the fourth inning and the Maroons still led 5-4 going into the final stanza. Romp decided to make its move and tied the game at five apiece when Brad punched a single to left scoring catcher Jeff Deshou from second.

The tie was short-lived, however, as Zaffira doubled down the left field line and Reardon iced the Maroon win one pitch later. Maroon outfielders Jim Hynes and Ton Ciarcello played well defensively, each tracking down several deep Romp drives and Ciarcello gunning down a runner at third base in the third inning.

The Ballbusters also made their way to the men's final with a 10-9 squeaker over Phlegm. The 'Busters rallied for three runs in the top of the fifth inning to break a 7-7 deadlock and shut out Phlegm in the last half to go on to the semifinal win.

In women's semifinal action, the Boomerangs used a six run first inning to spark them to a 9-4 win over the Zooies. Donna Moilanen was 3 for 3 in the game. The Boomers will face the Meglamaniacs in the finals. The 'Maniacs upset the Whimps 7-6 with three hits from Marija Keturakis.

The World Games Gang is the champion of the co-rec division. They outlasted the Leaches 5-4 in extra innings to take the crown. Chris Seeley had four hits and drove in four runs for the Gang.

All finals will be played Monday 4:30 p.m. at Boyden.

Gorillas face Green

Final step before playoffs

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team hosts Dartmouth College tomorrow afternoon at 2 in its final regular season contest. Dartmouth, 6-4, was defeated by the Gorillas in a pre-season scrimmage this year.

The Gorillas are led by probably the best attack squad ever, in senior tri-captain Chris Corin, senior Skip Vosburgh and junior Jim Weller. "Individually they're just okay but together they're awesome," defenseman Ray Cozzi said.

Together, the trio has amassed 233 points including 129 goals. Vosburgh is coming off an unbelievable first quarter at the University of New Hampshire where he put in four goals, two in the span of one minute.

The Big Green comes armed with goalie Jim Ulcickas who has 12 and 21 saves his last two games. Freshman Jenkins Marshall was the leading scorer in a 12-6 win over Harvard last Wednesday with four goals and two assists.

A win tomorrow would improve the Gorilla's record to 13-1, a fact that would hold some punch when the NCAA Lacrosse Selection Committee determines the seeds for the post-season playoff tournament. If UMass is seeded fourth, they will play at home in the first round of the tourney which will be played Wednesday. The committee makes its decision Sunday.

AROUND THE CREASE — For the first time in two years, the DC ladies included bananas in the box lunches for the Gorillas on Wednesday's road trip to UNH, how appropriate... Also on the bus — one lacrosse squad, four coaches, a trainer, two managers and a reporter held their breath as the bus went past the spot in beautiful downtown Lawrence, Mass, where last year a tire blew out and the team was stranded for nearly two hours... The Gorillas voted face-off master Tom Walters as their outstanding achiever for this season. At UNH, Walters won the first five face-offs setting up the first five goals... The team is anxiously awaiting the return of All-American midfielder Peter Schmitz, a senior tri-captain who has been out since the UNH home game three weeks abo. Schmitz is recovering from a knee injury and is expected to return for Wednesday's playoff game... Vosburgh is now second in career points with 188, behind Jeff Spooner who has 275 (no, it's not a misprint).

Junior Steve Martino will share the defensive midfield duties with seniors Doug Brown and Brian Kaley in tomorrow's 2 p.m. lacrosse game at Boyden.

AT THE PLATE—Minuteman third baseman senior Barry Bennett gets ready to rip one in a game earlier this season. UMass hosts Dartmouth today at 1 p.m.

Mittmen host Dartmouth

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts baseball team plays its final games of the season today, a doubleheader (1 p.m. start) against Dartmouth College at Earl Lorden Field, it will not only be the last opportunity to catch the 1981 Minutemen in action, but also to see six of the best senior ballplayers in New England this season.

UMass head coach Dick Bergquist is not merely losing five starting players and a pitching ace when Jim Aulenback, Barry Bennett, Vin Bonnano, John Kraham, Mark Litano and Chuck Thompson graduate, he'll also be losing a group which has slugged 18 of the team's 35 home runs this season to date.

Aulenback, who caught for most of the Minutemen's season, is the one senior who has sparked notable interest among big league scouts. His numbers so far this season, a .336 batting average, with five homers and 27 runs batted in, are as solid as his catching abilities. The Maynard, Mass. native has smacked 44 hits (high on the team) including five doubles and two triples. Aulenback also totalled 22 assists with his combined duties of backstop and as leftfielder earlier this season.

It's too bad the season is not ten or twelve games longer for Barry Bennett, who has just started to come into his own as a hitter. After a shaky start at the plate the Framingham native has raised his batting average from .196 to .287 over the last 18 games. He has tapped some of his slugging potential as well by smacking four homers, including a roundtripper against Amherst College Monday, and five doubles.

Bennett, simply stated, is the best defensive third baseman in New England this year, committing only 11 errors at the hot corner in 36 games, while amassing a very steady 106 assists; tops on the team.

Bonanno, with numbers .311 average, 38 hits and four doubles, has been moved from shortstop to designated hitter back to shortstop, but has always responded at the plate, where the righthander hits to the right side as well as anyone. The North Reading native has been more than adequate as a shortstop; making 84 assists, with 15 errors, and is second on the team in bases on balls with 17.

Bergquist will also lose two thirds of his starting outfield in Litano and Kraham. Litano, a Pittsfield native, will not duplicate his 1980 stats of .321 batting average and 14 stolen bases, but the rest of his numbers are just as good or better. The slap-hitting speedster has 12 doubles (one behind the team record of 13) and 22 runs batted in this season and has made 74 putouts in centerfield. His defensive talents are often overlooked, but Litano caught many balls this season that other outfielders wouldn't have run down. His 140 plate appearances is tops on the team.

Kraham said he is a bit disappointed with his .281 batting average. But he handled the swing role of catcher/leftfielder very well in the first two thirds of the season. With his homer Monday, the Chatham, N.Y. native's sixth of the season, Kraham is right behind Warren McReddie's team high of seven. His 34 hits include eight doubles and a triple.

Despite having his earned run average fluffed up a bit against Amherst College, Thompson finishes as the ace of the staff with an 8-2 record. In 90.1 innings, he struck out 44 and walked 43 this season, while compiling a 4.88 earned run average. But more importantly, Mr. Thompson has been the leadership and class of the Minuteman staff

Runners in NE tourney

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

After a year's absence, the University of Massachusetts men's track team will compete in the 94th edition of the New England Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association Outdoor Championships, at the University of Rhode Island this weekend.

Since Massachusetts dropped out of the ECAC last year, the trackmen cannot compete in the New Englands or the IC4A Championships, one Massachusetts' premier meets.

Last year, Boston University finished first with 132 points and Northeastern University was second with 101.

"Last year was sort of funny," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "Providence, Boston College, and UConn (University of Connecticut) all had their Big East meet on the same weekend."

Representing the maroon and white in the sprints will be Bill Devarney, Rick Cady and Brian Osborne.

In the longer track events will be miler Paul Beaulieu, Frank Prial in the 10,000 and steeplechasers Chris Omeltchenko, Tony Baugh and Rodney LaFlamme.

John Wright, still undefeated in New England, will have his work really cut out for him, facing his rival Bob Holden on his home turf. Wright had lost to Holden by inches, while the UMass thinclad bested the Ram hurdler at UMass two weeks ago, 14.0 to 14.2 seconds. Holden and Wright are currently the best hurdlers in New England.

In the longer hurdle event, the 400 meter hurdles, Clay Carlisle and Steve Ventre will be running for UMass.

Greg Mader, who had also qualified for the 400 hurdles, will eschew the event and opt for the decathlon. Joining Mader, will be Dale Whiting and Skip Walsh.

The Minutemen will be represented in the field events by Mark Grasso and Stephen Hyder.

"We can count on a similar performance as indoors," said O'Brien, UMass placed 8th in the team scoring in indoor track and was the top non-scholarship granting team.

Celtics take NBA title

HOUSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics, with Larry Bird finally breaking out of his scoring slump, won their 14th National Basketball Association championship by defeating the Houston Rockets 102-91 last night.

Bird, Boston's brilliant second-year forward who averaged just 13 points in the first five games of the series, scored 27 as the Celtics won the best-ofseven playoff finals four games to two.

Boston made 13 of 18 field goal attempts in the second quarter and matched that torrid shooting in the third period, outscoring Houston 57-43 in the two middle periods. And when Robert Parish scored the opening basket of the fourth quarter, Boston had its biggest lead of the game at 84-67.

The Rockets, the Cinderella team of the NBA playoffs, refused to buckle under to the storied Celtics. They held Boston scoreless for nearly five minutes and reeled off 12 points to pull to within 84-79 with 5:32 to play.

Parish ended the drought by hitting a turnaround jumper, but two free throws by Bill Willoughby and a driving basket by Tom Henderson pulled Houston to within three points at 86-83 with 4:26 left.

At that crucial juncture, Bird asserted himself with a baseline jumper followed by an 18- footer to build Boston's lead back up to seven points.

Houston was twice able to reduce the margin to three points again, but a three-point basket by Bird from the left corner gave Boston a 95-89 advantage with 1:36 left and ended the Rockets' hopes.

Four free throws by Cedric Maxwell and three by Chris Ford in the final 1:19 assured the victory.

Maxwell wound up with 19 points for the Celtics and Parish scored 18. Robert Reid led the Rockets with 27 points and Moses Malone finished with 23 — but they managed just five points apiece in the second half.

Calvin Murphy, the Rockets' explosive reserve guard, did not play because of a shoulder separation suffered in Game 5.

Ranked fourth in playoffs but . . .

Gorillas sweat out home-field advantage

By DONNA SULLIVAN

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team got a fourth place ranking in the NCAA post-season tournament, but what would normally go along with the seed, a home-field advantage, is in limbo according to Mass head coach Dick Garber.

The committee, which made its decision yesterday, said in a press release that because Alumni Stadium was not available, and Boyden Field was not acceptable because of crowd control regulations, Wednesday's game is scheduled to be played at the University of Virginia, who, seeded fifth, is UMass' opponent, Garber said.

If the game was to be held at home, it would be the first lacrosse playoff ever in New England.

"The fact that we might not be able to play at Boyden really shocked me," Garber said, "None of us knew that Boyden Field was not satisfactory.

"I've been told for several weeks that the stadium probably would not be available because of the cleanup after the concert and setting up for graduaton," he said.

"That really didn't bother me because we'd rather play at Boyden, only now we've heard that Boyden won't be acceptable.

"We're in limbo until Monday afternoon. If we talk to Richard Hunter (NCAA official), the only thing he can tell us is that they'll give us some time to get the stadium. We deserve the time to explore the possibilities," he said.

One of the possibilities is getting Alumni Stadium. Physical plant and facilities officials, who are scheduled to begin construction of graduation platforms tomorrow, could not be reached by Garber nor the Collegian.

"We're also exploring the possibility of getting other fields around the greater area to keep the game in New England," he said.

What has been foremost in the minds of players and fans since defeating both Syracuse and Cornell, has been the possibility of a fourth-place seed and the home field advantage that would go along with it. Today the Gorillas will find out if they will get the advantage, or have to travel to Virginia.

Laid-back concert boasts no problems, mellow crowd

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Compiled with reports from Ron Miller and Gayle Young.

There were "no problems" with a mainly low-key crowd of about 6,500 in Alumni Stadium for yesterday's Community Day concert in marked contrast to Spring events of the past two years which attracted more than 30,000.

University police reported no arrests at the Stadium and Health and safety officials treated five people for minor injuries and had only one emergency call for a man who suffered a dislocated finger.

Union Program Council Talent Coordinator Frank Gironda said the total cost for the concert was $115,000 instead of last year's $220,000. He said $45,000 was spent on talent and security and equipment costs were $70,000.

Gironda said the UPC hoped to raise $49,000 through beer and food sales and $66,000 selling 6,000 alumni tickets. Only about 380 alumni tickets were sold.

UPC officials said although they had expected 20,000 to 22,000 people to attend the show they were pleased there were no major problems with the crowd or the production.

"We done good," said UPC member Peggy McLaughlin. Spring Concerts for the past two years, which featured such bands as the Grateful Dead and the Allman Brothers, were marked by widespread drug and alcohol use, injuries, arrests and vandalism.

Although plastic containers were allowed at the Concerts in 1979 and 1980, UPC security members searched patrons as they entered for alcohol, and limited beer sales to people over 20 with a system of plastic bracelets.

This year's performers included NRBQ, B.B. King, the John Hall Band and Bonnie Raitt.

The concert highlighted a week-long series of events focusing on the future of public higher education in Massachusetts. U.S. Rep. Edward Markey, D—Mass. cancelled his scheduled speech on federal funding for higher education because he was detained by business in Washington, said UPC officials.

The size and tone of this year's event were decreased in response to problems with past concert, said UPC talent coordinator Frank Gironda.

Community Day '81 at Alumni Stadium. See related story page 3.

Earlier this month, Hadley selectmen expressed reservations about granting the entertainment, food and beer licenses to UPC because of the last two Spring Concerts. UPC must obtain the permits because the Stadium is in Hadley.

They voted 2-1 with one abstention to grant the permits but warned Gironda and other UPC officials that this year's concert would be the last if there were major problems.

Crowd reaction to the concert was mixed but many said they enjoyed themselves.

"It's a letdown from previous years. It didn't draw as many people but is a great show," said Bob Allen, 21, of Wilmington, who lives in John Quincy Adams dormitory.

"The security is a bit of a pain but it is realistic," said Marie Smith, 22, of Boston who lives off-campus.

Five held for rape; arraignment today

By CARLA LESH and M.W. MULCAHY
Collegian Staff

Five men and one juvenile are scheduled to be arraigned at Hampshire County District Court today on charges of rape and disorderly persons after being arrested ealy Saturday morning.

The men were arrested after University of Massachusetts police interrupted an incident where a woman was reportedly sexually assaulted and beaten in the Campus Center Hotel, UMass police said yesterday.

Arthur D. Pearce, 17, of Hyde Park; Paul J. Fidler, Jr., 18, of Hyde Park; Joel J. Fagerberg, 18, of Roxbury; Robert J. Smith, 18, of Hyde Park; and Paul F. Hackley, 17 of Hyde Park were arrested and taken to the Amherst jail then transferred to Hampshire County House of Corrections, with bail set at $1000, police said. A 16-year-old male was taken to the Northampton Juvenile Detention Center, police said. Police said none of the men were UMass students.

Police were alerted to the incident at 2:51 a.m. Saturday by a Campus Center security guard who was responding to a reported disturbance and called UMass police, who entered the room and arrested the men, police said.

This is the third reported gang-rape in this area during this semester.

New meeting called to plan SATF budget

There will be a special meeting today for all Undergraduate Student Senators to discuss next year's Student Activities Trust Fund budget, Student Senate Speaker, Ed Lee said last night.

The meeting, to take place at Mahar Auditorium at 7 p.m. will discuss next semester's budget and possible future changes in the budget's format, said Lee. "This may be the last chance to pass the budget."

Next semester's budget is over four months late due to the recent change in SGA co-presidents and political problems inside the senate, he said.

"If we don't pass it this time we face the possibility that we could lose control of the trust fund," Lee said. He said the local campus administration would like to control RSO group's funding.

The Student Activities Trust Fund budget, set at about $1.4 million for next semester, funds all Recognized Student Organizations including the Legal Services Office, the Office of Third World Affairs, the Economic Development Office and others.

The budget is smaller than last year's, funding the current semester, due to expected decreases in enrollment of 500 undergraduates, he said.

After receiving the Chancellor's signature, the budget is sent to the Board of Regents for approval.

Israeli-Syrian crisis heightens

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria moved stockpiles of Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles into east Lebanon yesterday and Israeli jets screamed over Beirut after a second day of Christian-Syrian artillery duels here and in the eastern town of Zahle. U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib appeared to buy more time for diplomatic efforts to solve the Israeli-Syrian missile crisis.

The Cabinet of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who has threatened to take military action against the Syrian missiles if they are not removed voluntarily, agreed unanimously to give U.S. diplomatic efforts more time, Begin said.

Habib met with royalty in the Saudi capital of Riyadh, and King Khaled sent a letter via special emissary to Syrian President Hafez Assad in Damascus, according to Saudi state radio. The outcome of Habib's talks were not reported.

Associated Press reporter Alex Efty reported from the Syrian-controlled Lebanese town of Chtaura in the Bekaa Valley that he saw several flatbed transport trucks, each carrying two or three of the 18- foot SAM-6 missiles, move in from the Syrian border on the main Beirut-Damascus highway and on side roads.

He said other reporters saw more missile-carrying trucks in other areas of the Bekaa.

Efty said the Syrians stockpiled the missiles near the 12 visible half-track launchers at the three missile sites Syria set up in Bekaa on April 29, a day after Israeli jets shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships attacking Israel's Christian allies in the town of Zahle, 30 miles east of Beirut.

On NBC's "Meet the Press," Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said "the time is narrowing" for finding a solution to the crisis and the presence of a special U.S. peace negotiator was the only thing preventing an outbreak of war.

Appeals made for hunger striker

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Catholic priest brother of Irish hunger striker Raymond McCreesh, reported fading in the 57th day of his fast, sent a telegram yesterday to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher begging her to save his life by making some concessions.

Police reported scattered violence in three Northern Ireland cities amid simmering tension generated by the hunger strike and the British government's repeated refusal to treat Irish Republican Army inmates as political prisoners rather than common criminals.

McCreesh, 24, was given the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church Saturday night and "is almost blind, losing his hearing and lapsing in and out of unconsciousness," said a spokesman for the IRA's political front, Sinn Fein.

He said hunger striker Patrick O'Hara, also 24 and in the 57th day of a fast, was suffering severe pain, his eyesight was fading and he was deaf in one ear.

The telegram to Mrs. Thatcher from McCreesh's brother, the Rev. Brian McCreesh, a parish priest at Coalisland, 30 miles west of here, said:

"All he, (Raymond McCreesh), has left is his pride as an Irishman and his loyalty to his fellow prisoners, living and dead. I beg you to respect his dignity and save him."

In London, a spokesman for Mrs. Thatcher's office at 10 Downing Street said: "We have no comment. A reply will be sent."

Black enrollment in college doubles over the last decade

WASHINGTON — Twice as many blacks are attending college today as did a decade ago, the Census Bureau reported yesterday.

The new study of school enrollment disclosed that more than a million black students were enrolled at U.S. colleges and universities as of last October.

That's a sharp increase from the 522,000 black college students reported in 1970.

The increases in black enrollment were particularly heavy early in the 1970's, according to the study. Since 1976, the proportion of college students who are black has at least been equal to the proportion of blacks in the college-age population.

Overall, the nation's student population reflected changes in society during the decade, with enrollments declining as the baby boom generation finished school and delayed having children of their own.

Elementary school enrollment in 1980 totaled 27.4 million children, about one-fifth less than were in classrooms 10 years earlier.

"This decline of about 6.5 million students enrolled in elementary schools during the decade is entirely the result of the decline in elementary school-age population," the bureau reported.

While the report noted that the drop in births began in the 1960's, it said that had eased in the last three years and the decline in elementary enrollment may end in the next few years.

Enrollment in private schools remained relatively constant at 11 percent during the decade, but was below the 15 percent of all students recorded in 1965.

As of last October, national high school enrollment stood at 14.6 million, down 560,000 from 1979 and more than a million fewer than in 1975.

There were about 10 million persons aged 14 to 34 enrolled in colleges in 1980, the report states, a figure that has remained relatively constant since 1976. In addition, there were 1.2 million persons aged 35 and older attending college.

Man accused of shooting pope labeled a 'professional killer'

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II rose from his hospital bed and celebrated Mass yesterday for the first time since he was wounded, and doctors said barring setbacks he will fully recover from the bullet wounds of a would-be assassin four days ago.

Dr. Emilio Tresalt, chief of the medical staff at the pope's hospital, said in reply to questions the pope will fully recover unless there are setbacks. He said the pope will soon be moved out of the intensive care ward — perhaps on his 61st birthday today — and should be able to leave the hospital "in about a month."

The pope sat in a chair for about a half hour, a medical bulletin said, after saying in a tape-recorded Mass that he forgives "that brother of ours who shot me."

The papal message, in a soft but unfaltering voice, was played to a throng in St. Peter's Square. It brought relief and tears to listeners, who were hearing the pope for the first time since he was wounded Wednesday.

Meanwhile, Rome's police headquarters said two — not three — bullets are believed to have been fired by the accused Turkish gunman, wounding the pope and two American pilgrims who were in St. Peter's Square. No major leads were reported in the investigation of whether the shooting was a conspiracy. Some newspapers, quoting unnamed sources, hinted at a second gunman, but police publicly denied this.

"With deep emotion, I thank you for your prayers and I bless you all," the pope said in a message which was recorded at Rome's Gemelli Policlinico Hospital and played over a loudspeaker a short time later for the crowd in St. Peter's Square.

"I am particularly close to the two persons wounded together with me," he said. "I pray for that brother of ours who shot me, and whom I have sincerely pardoned."

As his soft, slightly slurred but steady voice boomed over the square, a crowd of 15,000 broke into cheers. Some wept. Many knelt and prayed.

"United with Christ, priest and victim, I offer my sufferings for the church and the world," he said. The words, in Italian, were carried on Vatican Radio and were broadcast in his native Poland.

Nation's electric power system unprotected against sabotage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's electric power system is vulnerable to major interruptions from sabotage or terrorism, and the federal government is doing little about it, the congressional auditing agency says.

The power system has never suffered a national disruption or a long-term regional disruption, the General Accounting Office noted, but is "highly vulnerable because its components are widely dispersed, operated in a low manpower environment, have minimal security and are highly interdependent."

A GAO report released last week said the agency's investigators studied an unidentified region with 120 separate utilities.

"An attack on just eight substations could result in widespread power outages, with cascading blackouts throughout the electrical grid. In addition, major metropolitan areas in the region could be without power for several days and be subject to rotating blackouts for over a year," the report said.

"Damage to four substations could actually place one city on interruptible power for up to a year," it warned. "One substation's key components could be damaged using a rifle and leave an important defense-related facility without power."

The GAO said an extended power disruption in the unidentified region would hurt major military facilities and the ship, aircraft, electrical equipment, transportation, chemical, primary metal and wood product industries.

The Emergency Electric Power Administration in the Energy Department has only two staff members, working less than full-time, working on emergency planning, the report said.

In December 1979, the EEPA administrator said the two-person planning program was "barely alive," the GAO added.

Community Day '81

Mellow Bonnie still Raitts highly

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

The show was laid-back this year and so was Bonnie Raitt. She lacked the energy of her previous two performances in the valley (Smith College in February and last year's spring concert), and it took her till the end of the show to really get going. She didn't play badly mind you, but it wasn't an enthusiastic Bonnie Raitt.

Like her Smith appearance in February, Raitt was preceeded by The John Hall Band, who played about 40 minutes before Bonnie joined them on stage.

Hall and company played a varied but basically unimpressive set, including Hall's pop success "Dance With Me," which he recorded when he was with his former band Orleans a few summers back. Keyboardist Bob Lienbach was the saving grace of the day providing some hot piano and organ leads, as well as a few licks on the trombone.

Bonnie came on about 3:45 and opened with the No Nukes anthem, "Power". She kept the concert surprisingly free of politics, but she did throw in a dig or two for her favorite cause, No Nukes.

When I spoke with Bonnie after the show she explained that she's spent most of the spring doing No Nukes concerts for Musicians For Safe Energy (MUSE). She had just completed a week of benefit concerts in Oklahoma with John Hall.

Maybe it was the docile crowd, but it took until the end of the show before they really opened up and rocked.

The band seemed to gain energy as the show went on, and, "Run Away" got the crowd sparked. It was followed by "I Thank You," which featured the first sustained jam of the day. Bonnie said she was a little nervous following B.B. King, which might explain why she or Hall failed to produce a strong lead until near the end of the show.

It was worth the wait, however, with Hall proving he can do more than basic pop, and Bonnie provided powerful vocals as always.

The end of the show featured three encores. For the last one she came back and said, "We got time for one more, then you guys have to go home and study," but she left the crowd with a positive impression to go home with, providing the strongest material of the day.

Bonnie Raitt and John Hall relaxing between songs at yesterday's Community Day, held at Alumni Stadium.

Bonnie said her next album should be out by September and will feature more rock 'n roll and country. She said, "I've done enough old rhythm and blues tunes for a while." The new album will be a harder rock album with more "powerful music."

Raitt said the reason she didn't have her band with her was because she had already rehearsed with John Hall, and this was an isolated date.

She said she came back because, "if somebody asks me to play, I'll play," but she wondered jokingly if we weren't getting sick of her.

It wasn't the top show I've seen Bonnie do, but I'll never be sick of her. It was a wonderfully sunny day to view music, and as far as I'm concerned, Bonnie Raitt is welcome in the valley any time.

B.B. King at Community Day '81.

B.B. still reigns as King of blues

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

The second act that came on during yesterday's concert was legendary blues guitarist B.B. King and his band. Although only on for little more than an hour, King brought the concert's audience to its feet with his rousing renditions of "Caldonia" and "Ain't Nobody Home."

King who was slotted between NRBQ and The John Hall Band excited the enthusiastic crowd of 6,000 with some excellent jamming (especially in the brass section) and one of the most realistic musical styles heard in the valley in quite some time. Although the stadium leaves much to be desired in the way of accoustic quality—the tight control placed upon the audience by the hard working and efficient security personnel left many students with a feeling of confinement and restriction—King's bass did wonders to loosen up the apprehensive UMass community.

Easily the most inspired piece in King's set was his rendition of his old standby hit Caldonia. The interplay between his vocals and the trumpet section shook the stadium's backfield with the type of steady blues sound that was last heard in UMass in April wahen Ray Charles and his Orchestra shut down the Fine Arts Center's capacity crowd.

The only regret that I did have about King's performance at the concert was that he left so soon after the end of his set. As I watched his chartered bus and three-car entourage sneak away under the watchful eyes of the concert's green-shirted security personnel, I felt saddened over the lost opportunity of seeing King perform on stage in a jam session with the high spirited NRBQ and the classy, Bonnie Raitt. Such a team up would have brought this years relatively tranquil "Community Day" almost up to the classic levels of "The Spring Concerts" of the past.

Legendary blues guitarist B.B. King entertains the Community Day crowd yesterday. King brought the crowd to its feet with his steady blues sound and enthusiastic jamming. Also performing yesterday were NRBQ, The John Hall Band and Bonnie Raitt.

NRBQ: Breakfast with champions

By JOHN BROBST
Collegian Staff

NRBQ's sleep was rudely interrupted by yesterday's Spring Con—uh—Community Day. Still in their pajamas and bathrobes, they killed two birds with one stone by having their breakfast of Dunkin Donuts and Michelob in front of a crowd of enthused early-risers.

As tenor sax player Keith Spring said, "If you get us up at an absurd hour, we're going to be absurd." So they opened their set with "Wake Up," complete with yawning, stretching, eye rubbing and head scratching. "Going to Alaska" featured a Terry Adams trumpet solo while standing on top of his piano. Al Anderson was pointed out as the subject of "It Was An Accident." "Shake, Rattle and Roll" was the high point of their encore, with Adams' banging the piano with his seat.

The show wasn't all antics, however. The 'BQ's are all masters of their instruments; but they are at their best when working as a team. The solos are concise and to the point, which keeps the music interesting. Sunday's performance of "Me and the Boys," "Things We Like," "That's Neat, That's Nice," and "It Comes to Me Naturally" were all examples of how good the 'BQ's can be.

NRBQ has been very busy these days. They are working on a new album; The Whole Wheat Horns are making a solo record; and they plan on recording with their manager, professional wrestling genius Captain Lou Albano. The 'BQ's have been interested in the only true sport for most of their lives. Trombone player Donn Adams was excited to hear that "Mil Mascaras is coming to the Northeast. He's the best wrestler there is." Big Al Anderson once stepped into the squared circle with Killer Khan. Asked if pro-wrestling is real, Terry Adams replied "of course it is!"

The semi-legendary M.C. Kostek once said "One of the good things about life in the Pioneer Valley is that you can see NRBQ." Sunday's performance proved Mr. Kostek right once again.

Electric failure mars project

What do you do when you're planning dinner for 40 and the electricity is turned off?

Improvise.

Complicate the matter by grading the cooks on their performance, and you have all the ingredients to what happened at Skinner Hall Friday night for the final project in Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration (HRTA) Food Production class.

The electricity was turned off in the building for the weekend at 5:06 PM, by Physical Plant workers who were working on a cable in the building. Physical Plant notified the main office in Skinner ahead of time, but the office neglected to inform the scheduled class, said Less Hellman, teacher's assistant for HRTA 156.

Once the sun set, the building became totally dark, as there were not even emergency lights working in the building.

As a result dinner was cooked and served by candlelight and a Coleman camping latern which added a romantic ambience to the home economics class room.

However back the in the kitchen, frozen foods were beginning to thaw, and discussions were taking place on how to salvage the remaining food.

"We've had hundreds of dollars of food losses: meats, fish cheeses, ice cream, fruits and vegetables," Hellman said.

Concert quiet with no arrests

By CARLA LESH
Collegian Staff

University officials were pleased with the well-controlled concert crowd at the Community Day concert yesterday.

University of Massachusetts police reported no arrests in connection with the concert.

"I have never seen a concert this quiet. It was a well-controlled crowd and a tribute to the people who put on the concert," said Lieutenant Michael Grabeic of the UMass police department.

"It seemed to go very well. There were a few problems, quite a contrast with previous years," said Dennis L. Madson, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs.

"It was a good day, the numbers were not high but those that came had a good time," Madson said.

A spokesman for the University Health Services said there were very few injury and accident incidents brought in yesterday.

"It was very quiet relative to last year," the spokesman said.

The number of cases reported were slightly higher than a usual spring weekend but not a significant increase, the health services spokesman said.

This year's Community Day concert was a sharp contrast to the Grateful Dead and Allman Brothers Band concerts, which were marked by many drug and alcohol related arrests.

The violence, personal injuries, and litter marked by these concerts caused Hadley selectmen to show caution in allowing this year's concert.

Both Amherst police and UMass police said this weekend's concert was reasonably uneventful, with no serious accidents, major larcenies, or assaults that could be directly connected with the concert. At press time, only one injury had been reported: a dislocated finger.

UNESCO urged to free media

TALLOIRES, France AP — Leaders of news organizations from 20 countries called on UNESCO yesterday to abandon attempts to regulate news and formulate rules for the media.

In a declaration issued after two days of meetings in this French Alps resort, representatives at the Voices of Freedom conference pledged cooperation in all "genuine" efforts to expand the free flow of information worldwide.

They discussed, but took no action, on proposals to oppose UNESCO's actions by seeking the withdrawal of their governments' financial aid—and if necessary their representatives—from the Paris-based world body.

Murray Gart, editor of the Washington Star, was among those who contended the weekend conference, sponsored by the U.S-based World Press Freedom Committee, should end with an action program as well as a declaration of principles. But European organizations said before they could support such a program they would have to consult their members and governments.

UNESCO, the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, has become the leading forum of world communication issues, and many communist and Third World countries have seized on it to promote arrangements that would attempt to legitimize government control over the flow of information.

Western news organizations and some journalists from developing countries warned the efforts constitute a danger to freedom of the press.

But UNESCO Director General Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal, in a speech to the conference Saturday, said his role and that of his organization have been distored.

In their declaration, the journalists affirmed that "press freedom is a basic human right, and we pledge ourselves to concerted action to uphold this right."

U.S., Iran discuss claims

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — The first formal, face-to-face meeting between American and Iranian officials since the U.S. hostages were freed is scheduled today, when the two sides begin talks on setting up a tribunal to resolve more than 2,000 financial claims for broken contracts and debts not paid.

At stake is some $3 to $4 billion in claims.

The Algerian-mediated settlement of the hostage crisis stated that the tribunal was to make "final and binding" decisions on claims by individuals and companies against the two governments. No claims may be brought by the 52 former hostages, freed Jan. 20 after 440 days in capitivity in Iran, under the pact.

Iran has already canceled one meeting scheduled May 5, but Algerian officials have told the State Department that three Iranian tribunal members will be present today to discuss the location, format and timetable of the tribunal with three American colleagues — George H. Aldrich, a former ambassador who represented the United States at the Law of the Sea conference; Richard M. Mosk, a Los Angeles lawyer and Howard M. Holtzman, a lawyer from New York.

Third bomb found in NY airport

NEW YORK — Police found a third bomb yesterday and spent five hours searching for a fourth in the Pan American World Airways terminal at Kennedy International Airport, one day after an explosion killed an airport employee.

A telephone caller who identified himself as a spokesman of the Puerto Rican Armed Resistance Movement claimed responsibility yesterday afternoon for all three bombs, police said. He provided "rather factual" details of the bombs' construction and locations, said Lt. Richard Richards.

The group champions the cause of Puerto Rican independence.

There was no blast yesterday, but the terminal was closed when a cleaning man found an explosive device in a women's rest room. Departures resumed five hours later.

The Commuter Collective Announces

The Commuter Scholarship Award

In an effort to enable students to continue their studies at the University of Massachusetts, the Commuter Collective (Area Government for students who live off-campus) has developed this scholarship award. It is our hope that two students who may not otherwise be able to continue in school because of financial reasons will reap some small benefit from our grant.

Two students will each receive $300 at the beginning of the Fall semester. The awards will not in any way effect the amount of Financial Aid they are or will receive now or in the future.

The Commuter Collective Area Government is committed to an Anti-Sexist/Anti-Racist philosophy of education.

Good Luck
The Commuter Collective

Taxing the marijuana industry could generate revenue for state

By KEVIN MCGUIRE
Collegian Staff

An estimated $135 million in revenue could be generated in Massachusetts if the state's illegal multi-million dollar marijuana industry is taxed, said the Massachusetts coordinator for the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

By licensing production, and taxing sales commensurate with alcohol and tobacco rates—about half the retail price—Massachusetts stands to gain new tax revenue plus save the $15 million it spends for the arrest and prosecution of pot offenders annually, coordinator Richard M. Evans said.

Evans, an Amherst attorney, is the author of the Cannabis Revenue and Education Act, House of Representatives bill 1737. Although the bill was termed "inappropriate at this time" by the Commonwealth's Taxation Committee co-Chairman Rep. Gerald M. Cohen, D-Andover, Evans believes the bill is a necessary prototype for legislation sure to come within the next decade.

"Our purpose is to do some comprehensive groundwork and to have some appropriate legislation for when public opinion shifts. It is within our power to create a new industry as we want it," Evans said.

The Cannabis Revenue and Education Act called for one-half of the collected revenues (after the additional bureaucratic overhead had been paid) to be spent for education and research on cannabis. Targeted discouragement campaigns would be directed toward young people while the other half of the money would go the state's general fund, he said.

Traditional advertising techniques would not be allowed; "no huckstering," said Evans. What is known as tombstone advertising, where a simple statement that a particular product is available at a particular price at a certain location, is all that would be permitted.

Cannabis would be packaged like pipe tobacco—graded according to potency—and sold by licensed pharmacists and tobacconists. No one under eighteen would be allowed to purchase or consume marijuana, and driving under the influence would be treated as a drunken driving violation.

"We've got to make the distinction between use and abuse. When your use of cannabis results in actual harm to others, then your use of cannabis is justifiably controlled by the state," Evans said.

Evans acknowledges the political volatility of his bill, and noted that Taxation Committee Co-chairman Sen. John W. Olver, D-Amherst, stepped out of the room when the bill was brought up for consideration. But Evans believes cannabis regulation is inevitable.

Senator Olver could not be reached for comment.

When asked if his advocacy for NORML had affected his law practice in Amherst, Evans said: "Well, I haven't lost any clients."

Looking back

By Carla Lesh

The first issue of the first campus newspaper, Aggie Life appeared October 1, 1890 at the Massachusetts Agricultural College.

The eight-page paper was published every two weeks. The first issue was devoted primarily to greeting the freshman class. The class of 1894 was the largest in the college's 28 year history. All the incoming freshmen were male. There were no women at the college until a few years later.

"Only once in the history of the college has so large a class entered, but we expect, in a few years, to see three and five times that number enter," an article read.

The editors gave this flattering opinion of the new students: "The class, taken as a whole, is a mild inoffensive collection of youths of medium size and not altogether bad looking; of all ages from those easily able to support a full beard, to those who ought not to be out of knee pants."

Apparently the class of '94 had a celebrity or two in the crowd as the story went on, "The class was certainly very fortunate in securing one of the relatives of the distinguished John L. Sullivan as captain, who will doubtless impart much valuable information in a pugilistic line."

The article ended with a plug for the new newspaper. "We are glad that you have selected this institution as a worthy place to fit for life's battle, and our advice is, first, to keep on the right side of the faculty and secondly, subscribe and write for Aggie Life, and renown will be yours."

One of the many advertisements in the paper offered "Hacks to and from all trains, omnibuses, Hacks, double and single terms furnished at short notice, careful drivers and fair prices" from the Amherst House Livery, Feed and Sale Stable.

Study investigates soil problems

By STEPHEN DAIGLE
Collegian Correspondent

Want to hear a dirty story—Well, this one's worth $250,000.

A project, primarily funded by a $250,000 grant from the National Science Foundation, along with some help from the University of Massachusetts Agricultural Experimental Station, is being conducted by two University of Massachusetts professors, four graduate students and a technician on some soil in the northwest corner of campus off Commonwealth Avenue.

Through soil-physics experiments, the researchers are studying local problems such as salt dispersion from roads, and long range tracking of the waterflow from sewerage systems to water tables.

Experiments with this soil yields data helping to build and verify a mathematical model and computer simulation technique developed by Professor Daniel Hillel of the UMass Plant and Soil Science Department, Professor Burger of UMass Environmental Engineering and the four graduate students.

The field itself has experiments which measure the conductivity of soil water, groundwater level, run-off versus rainfall, as well as infiltration, evaporation and soil variation.

Water velocity—the speed and direction of water—is measured in different parts of the soil using injected tracer solutions which are monitored at various time intervals, Hillel said.

In recent years, mathematical models and simulation techniques have been developed using high speed computers to test general theories about natural systems in nature, he said.

By doing so insights into the workings of the complex natural system and criteria for predicting it's future behavior under varying conditions are developed Hillel said.

This research is especially important for the management of soil in regions where even a "slight modification of the water and solute balance, and of energy relations, can sometimes spell the difference between sustainable land use and disastrous abuse," Hillel said. In particular, water pollution is an ever present hazard, he said.

The mathematical model of the field is used to predict quantitative relationships, while the experiments and measurements are used to check these predictions. If the results fit, we have a working model. If not, we revise our model and try again, Hillel said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Letters

A request for clarification

An Open Letter to Dean Allen:

On several occasions we requested a meeting with you to discuss the following issues of crucial interest to Teaching Assistants and the University community as a whole. We wanted to meet with you to clarify a situation characterized by rumors, conflicting information and anxiety.

Our representatives in Humanities and Fine Arts have been informed by their department chairs and graduate program advisors of the following proposed cuts in Teaching Assistantships in their departments:

88 percent decrease in Art History, from 8 TA's to 1.

64 percent decrease in French and Italian, from 14 TA's to 5.

50 percent decrease in Comp. Lit, from 8 TA's to 4.

And the list goes on.

Needless to say, our colleagues in the Humanities and Fine Arts are in a panic, worried about the future of their jobs and their programs.

We were somewhat calmed by Provost Baritz who informed us that this proposed level of funding is based on a tentative budget allocation he made equivalent to 1/3 of last year's budget. He assured us that the final budget would certainly be larger. However, neither he nor you have indicated at any time what the allocation of that budget really is.

Our concern has increased due to the news regarding TA's in the Rhetoric Program. We have heard from our representatives teaching in Rhetoric that appoximately 63 out of the currently funded 90 Rhetoric TA's will be eliminated. Furthermore, what positions remain will be restricted to graduate students and faculty in the Humanities and Fine Arts. Social Science and other graduate students will no longer be able to teach in the Rhetoric Program. Finally, we have heard Faculty of the Humanities and Fine Arts will have to teach in the Rhetoric Program so as to get Teaching Assistants for graduate students in their departments.

We wanted to meet with you to foster an accurate flow of information within the University and to express our concern of hundreds of graduate students about their jobs, their futures and the quality of education at UMass. Our inability to meet with you has aggravated a volatile situation.

We look forward to a more positive interaction in the future.

A request for tolerance

After delivering pizzas for two and a half years, I'm "retiring" at the end of this semester.

A few observations:

Most of the people I've dealt with have been very friendly and cooperative.

The few that haven't have made my life miserable at times. I've been robbed, assaulted, complained to, jeered at and abused. Prank phone calls have been a constant thorn in my side. Soaked from rain and stuck in snow, I've managed to get the pizzas to their destinations within a reasonable time and still fairly warm literally thousands of times.

Occasionally we get swamped with orders and take a little longer than usual to deliver. That can't be helped. Especially by saying "It's about time" or "I'm not paying for it if it's cold." The pizzas do have to be made, baked, organized into runs, and delivered one at a time by a driver. Somebody has to be the last stop. Contrary to popular belief, the driver is not personally responsible if occasionally someone has to wait over an hour after ordering to actually be eating their pizza. We drivers are a fairly efficient lot, doing the best we can with the task at hand...just trying to make an honest day's wage.

Again, I'd like to thank the hundreds of customers that have been polite and friendly. I couldn't have lasted his long if it weren't for you.

As for the others, try and be tolerant and maybe even tip the driver. Believe me, he or she deserves it.

Reagan's energy

Robert Shanley

The Reagan administration's first 100 days have come and gone without a searching examination of its proposed energy policies. A preliminary analysis of the administration's policy statements and budget requests indicates that there are serious short-term and long-term problems in the President's energy perspective, particularly in its central emphasis on the production and supply of energy, and in its "hard path" perspective.

The Reagan administration has sought to realize the President's campaign goals of turning the energy companies "loose," accelerating the decontrol of oil prices, speeding up the leasing of public lands for oil and natural gas exploration, removing governmental constraints on business imposed by the Departments of Energy and Interior, and by other federal agencies, with the goal of hastening the exploitation of new domestic reserves, thereby reducing the need for imported oil. However, a recent study prepared for the U.S. Geological Survey and DOE takes a more pessimistic view of the future U.S. exploration of its oil and gas reserves than the Reagan administration estimates. The Rand Corporation has concluded that the future of American petroleum exploration is not promising, largely "because of the increasing exhaustion of geological possibilities." Even if a major find of oil were to be discovered in some of the more promising areas in Alaska, it still might take almost a decade for the oil to reach American homes. Of course, there is the possibility that no major find will be tapped during Reagan's presidency.

Any significant discovery of domestic reserves of petroleum and natural gas would still not remove the concern that the public interest and long-term American energy needs cannot be reconciled with the renewed power and status of giant energy companies and their trade associations in the implementation of energy policy. Campaign statements by Reagan and the appointment of DOE Secretary Edwards have raised doubts concerning the efficacy and the commitment of the federal government, particularly DOE, in monitoring the energy industry, in prosecuting multi-million dollar overcharge cases against large oil companies, and in gathering vital energy information from industry sources. The commitment of the Federal Trade Commission and the Justice Department is questioned in monitoring large oil companies in their acqisition of non-energy companies—mining companies for example—as well as firms producing competing sources of energy. There is some concern that efforts to achieve a more balanced energy program will be eroded and that energy policy may once again be dominated by a corporate elite.

Another major criticism of Reagan's "supply side" energy policy orientation lies in its inadequate appreciation of the uses of energy, particularly in recognizing the achievements and potential of energy efficiency and energy conservation. The Reagan administration relies mainly on higher prices as a vehicle for stimulating energy efficiency and energy conservation. Reagan and his energy policy advisers are faulted for their unwillingness to publicly support energy conservation as a major policy option in its own right to be pursued by both private and public sectors. The President could use his popularity and the resources of his office to promote this policy option and to exhort the public to realize the benefits of productive conservation.

While cuts in the administration's energy budget are not as severe as in other policy areas, no president since Franklin D. Roosevelt has sought budgetary changes as pervasive and as controversial as those which Reagan has advocated in the first hundred days of his presidency.

Administration energy policy priorities reflected in budget cuts and budget requests from 1981 through 1986 indicate reductions in all energy options. Conservation and solar energy are among the biggest losers, along with mass transit and railroads. The President and his energy advisers want to shave near-term development, demonstration and commercialization solar funding, and concentrate on longer-range solar research and development projects that are still too risky for private investment. The Reagan solar energy budget request reduced Carter administration requests by 68 percent, arguing that solar companies were now in a better position to fund their own research because of higher prices for oil and natural gas. A recision of $121 million in funds for HUD's Solar and Energy Conservation Bank was also submitted by the administration. Reagan administration critics have also been dismayed about the severe budget cuts in conservation programs, including state and local grant monies to aid the poor and elderly.

Some of the most politically controversial budgetary cuts have been in mass transit and in railroad passenger and freight federal subsidies. Reagan budget projections call for a complete phasing out of mass transit operating subsidies by 1985 and for a significant reduction in the federal government's contribution to AMTRAK's operating costs by 1985. The elimination of federal subsidies to Conrail after 1982 and a drastic cut in the Local Rail Service assistance program of the Federal Railroad Administration are also planned.

Probably the most controversial aspect of the Reagan administration energy budget lies in its fiscal commitment to nuclear power. This commitment is to be realized in a stronger nuclear research program, in the development of the Clinch River Breeder Reactor Project, and in the expansion of DOE's nuclear weapons program. The nuclear weapons program would get the largest share of DOE funding, with domestic energy programs, the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, and general science research and administration program, in descending order of fiscal support. The bulk of the increase of civilian nuclear energy funds would be allocated to the Breeder Reactor program, with much smaller increases in the DOE budget for research and development for the Three Mile Island cleanup and aid for commercial nuclear waste programs.

The Breeder Reactor, a hard-path technology with military as well as environmental risks, would require significant governmental subsidies and governmental regulation, a policy approach which does not square with Reagan's attitutes toward governmental regulation. It is estimated that this technology could not be made operational in much less than fifteen years and it is not certain when and if the LMFBR will be economically viable. Can we be certain that this technology can compete economically with other alternatives in ten to fifteen years and that private utilities will be willing and able to invest in this capital intensive alternative?

It is possible to develop advanced burner reactors which, although less fuel-efficient than breeders in their use of uranium, could nonetheless be more fuel efficient than today's reactors. This approach, excluding the recycling of plutonium, could be economically viable for at least 100 years (Marc Ross, Robert Williams, Our Energy: Regaining Control, 1981).

The Reagan administration, for a variety of reasons, including its "supply side perspective," has revived a dangerous energy policy option. The President also pledged to streamline the nuclear reactor licensing process, and his aides are considering the possibility of speeding up the decontrol of natural gas prices by administrative rather than legislative means. These issues and the President's budgetary priorities on conservation and the Breeder Reactor technology present significant challenges to environmentalists and soft-energy path advocates.

Sound Advice

Jesse Winchester's new album offers revamped romanticism

Talk Memphis(Bearsville Records)
Jesse Winchester

Jesse Winchester gives us nothing new. He's from an old and respected lineage from Memphis that was instrumental (not musically, although his grandfather did the eulogy at W.C. Handy's funeral) and somewhat monumental in America's early history (his great-great-great-great-great grandfather was responsible for getting Davy Crockett involved in politics).

In 1967, Jesse got into a bit of politics himself, the politics of avoiding politics, by escaping with his vocal cords to Canada to avoid the draft. Well-preserved and free from battle neurosis, Winchester re-entered the U.S. with Carter's pardon and the nostalgia for his hometown moved him so much that he did a musical tribute to it, inappropriately calling the album Talk Memphis. The cut "Talk Memphis" occupies the honored space of last cut/second side.

On the first side however, Winchester is too preoccupied sending love notes to his wife ("Leslie"), ressurecting Elvis Presley ("Hoot and Holler") and trying hard to mimic negro vocals ("Say What"), all with the pop mellowness of Dr. Hook's "Sharing the Night Together" re-vamped on at least five cuts.

The second side doesn't prove much better. It deals mostly with Jesse's romantic encounters, ("Let Go") where Winchester again takes liberties dropping consonants: "Oh lawd help me let go, I can't keep 'er I know." We have a repeat performance in the cuts "Sure Enough," and "I Love You No End," a song about a firelight romance with Captain and Tennille synthesizers providing love twinkles. And it's slow...

Winchester, although backed up by a strong band of black women, can't match them with negroid authenticity, though he makes every effort with characteristic vocal slides, tremolos and the deletion of consonants. Mock black loose-speeched vocals are incorporated into each song. But Winchester is not to blame. He's been up North for so long he has to learn to talk Memphis all over again.

Permanent Wave: Styled for the mellow-rock lover

Permanent Wave (Flying Fish Records)
Dillard Hartford Dillard

I'm not sure if the title of this new album is a reference to the artists' blow-dried hair styles, or a take off on a type of music that is apparently an unhealthy symptom of our society, but I do know that Dillard Hartford Dillards should prove to be a moderate success amongst the mellow-rock audiences of small town America.

With this album, the group tries to bring their listeners back to a cleaner, simpler and happier time when music supposedly sounded nice and one could distinguish melodies, harmonies and even lyrics that didn't offend large portions of the general population.

Hardly a suitable atmosphere for the morbid devotees of Jello Biafra.

Rodney and Doug Dillard and John Hartford are talented, and from what I understand, established musicians who have strict control over everything that they do on this album. True, they aren't exactly blessed with the same genius that drove Tchaikovsky to madness a hundred years ago, but at least they know enough to stay safely within their Blue Grass-Pop Rock range: a simple quality that seems to evade many big musicians today. For instance, it doesn't take a cast of thousands, and millions of dollars worth of sci-fi equipment to put these people on a stage. Nor does it take dozens of stereo components to get the proper sound out of their records.

The songs on this album fall into three basic catagories: decent country ballads like Doug's "Something's Wrong" and Rodney's "Blue Morning," Rock and Roll classics like Buddy Holly's "That'll be the Day" and Dan Reno's "Country Boy Rock and Roll" and comedy-novelty numbers like Stevie Wonder's "Boogie On, Reggae Woman" and the Coaster's "Yakkity-Yak." At one point, they even croak out "No Beer In Heaven" which should appeal to a large part of the UMass population.

This is exactly the type of music that would sound great on the radio of my old '72 Plymouth Fury, because it's tough, honest and free of bullshit. At a time when current albums are beginning to sound more and more like the sound track of "Star Wars" as recorded by the inmates of Creedmore, simple and decent albums like this one are always pleasant to come by.

At any rate, if you don't like this type of music, you might like the cover which features a bunch of cars lined up at a Drive-In Theatre with Dillard, Hartford and Dillard looking on from a distant billboard. From the looks on their faces they seem to be enjoying the movie, and anyone who enjoyed Walter Hill's recent western The Long Riders can't be all that bad.

Marshall Tucker Band: Devoted?

Marshall Tucker Band
Dedicated (Warner Bros.)

It is unlikely that the latest album by the Marshall Tucker Band will recruit any new fans. Dedicated, their eleventh release since 1972, consistently fails to take charge of the listener and is generally unimpressive.

Mixing cliche lyrics with overly structured bass plucking by newest member Franklin Wilkie, and obtrusive drumming c.o. Paul Riddle, proves to be a deficient recipe.

Relying too heavily on the powerful vocals of Doug Gray to pull it through, Dedicated delivers a series of ten lifeless songs.

Side one opens with "Rumors Are Raging," a trite piece about gossip with a drawn-out refrain. Some country harmony is offered in "Tonight's The Night" featuring a colorless flute solo by Jerry Eubanks. Preceding the flip is "Something's Missing in My Life," an almost jazzy tune using grammar school flute scales.

Professionally executed, "This Time I Believe" leads off side two. But following is the appropriately title "Tell The Blues To Take The Night Off" where guitarist Toy Caldwell picks licks lacking tricks.

Closing Dedicated is "Ride in Peace" a eulogy "in loving memory" to founding member Tommy Caldwell (vocals, bass) who died in a 1980 auto accident.

Even guest appearances by Charlie Daniels on fiddle and Norton Buffalo on harmonica aren't enough to lend Dedicated the much-needed energy. Nowhere does the Marshall Tucker Band nor guests put any genuine enthusiasm into their tunes.

Without question Dedicated shows no promise of going gold as did their first six albums, or even platinum as did their last two. This, their third try on the Warner Bros. label, is unexciting.

My advice? If you're new in the southern rock scene, best look to other artists. If you're an unwavering Marshall Tucker fan, then complete your collection.

—Judd Warner

Car accidents on rise, alcohol abuse linked

By ELIZABETH HERMANCE
Collegian Staff

A broken leg was the only injury Susan, a University of Massachusetts student, sustained after she was hit by a car on North Pleasant St. earlier in the year while on her way to class.

Others have not been so lucky. "There have been six motor vehicle accidents involving fatalities this fiscal year, which began July 1. In all, seven persons have died as a result of motor vehicle accidents," said Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia.

Moreover, according to figures compiled by the UMass Office of Public Safety, the number of motor vehicle accidents has been on the rise in Amherst since 1974.

"There were 106 major accidents (involving more than $200 damage and requiring a formal report) for 1980, said Lawrence G. Holmes, assistant director of public safety at UMass.

The increase in accidents has been attributed to several factors. The major cause for accidents, particularly the more serious ones, seems to be associated with alcohol consumption, Maia said.

Results from a recent survey show it is apparent that many people in the area drive while under the influence. Of 100 people randomly polled from UMass and the town of Amherst, 72 said they have consumed alcohol and then driven both consecutively and simultaneously.

Location has also been a contributing factor in the number of accidents. Bradley Ringquist, a 23 year old UMass student, recently died in a collision at the intersection of Southeast and Main streets in Amherst. According to town planner James P. Cope, this can be singled out as one of the worst intersections in the town.

"The location suffers from several problems: a parking lot which opens into the intersection in an awkward way, blind driveways, vegetation that obscures vision, lighting which could be improved and the angles of the intersecting streets," Cope said.

The site is scheduled for reconstruction, but it is expensive, Cope said. "Federal funding is needed for this project. Therefore the state Department of Public Works, which administers federal highway funds, must get approval from the Federal Highway Administration (Boston Office) before construction can begin."

The Planning Office has been working on this particular location for several years, but because Federal money is involved, the project has become time consuming, Cope said.

"Despite projected general budget cuts of approximately $219,000 for the coming fiscal year, the project would not be affected because funds for the construction were appropriated in last years budget," he said.

Reckless driving cited

Reckless driving was also cited as adding to the number of rising accidents.

"Excessive speed is one major factor contributing to accidents, and 20 miles per hour can be considered excessive depending on the situation," Holmes said.

Many pedestrians at UMass can verify the fact that not all the people driving around campus are always as careful as they should be.

"Near the crosswalks between the Southwest dormitories and Hampshire House, the drivers seem to have no respect for anybody crossing the road. Some stop, but most just ignore those attempting to cross the street and drive right on through at a rapid speed," said Mike Estrada, a UMass senior.

"Coming down from the Morrill Science center to the Campus Center cars are always speeding down the street. I stand at the crosswalk and wait as 10-20 cars just bomb by without even caring how many people gather to cross," said Kathy Whitman, also a UMass student.

Sargent Frank Mazzei of the UMass Police Dept. said laws regarding crosswalks are very difficult to enforce and it's up to the officer on the scene.

"In Massachusetts there is a $100 fine if cars approaching the crosswalks don't stop if a pedestrian is within five feet of the center line of the street," he said.

"The department of Public Safety has had no substantial increase in staff over the past several years, and although we've asked for additional staff, with budget cuts this is doubtful," Holmes said.

"Demand has grown in other areas of our department, among these are the service categories, transportation of sick and the injured and investigation of suspicious individuals. So staffwise there are less persons checking violations of driving, with the increase of other criminal elements.

In attempts for safer conditions here at Amherst, Holmes stressed, that "We want to make the public aware the safety is a community problem. It is a process of helping the public help themselves through prevention."

Penalties for offenses vary

Persons convicted of drunk driving face license suspensions and are required to take part in a $200 eight-week alcohol education session through the District court system. This is followed by a year of probation, during which the operator may lose his license if caught driving under the influence.

Penalties for other offenses vary. "Persons involved in motor vehicle accidents where damage exceeds $200, face citations depending on the situation. The more serious charges, driving to endanger and vehicular homicide, end in court, where a trial process is required," UMass Officer Chris LaFlamme said.

For drivers charged with vehicular homicide, sentences differ according to the judge handling the case, and depending on the severity of the situation, Northampton court prosecutor Phillip Benjamin said.

"Penalties can end with long prison sentences," he added.

For individuals involved in alcohol-related accidents who feel they need help with problem drinking, UMass Health Services offers an alcohol education program.

"We provide a screening and referral system for the UMass population, where we try to assess what is causing as individuals' drinking problem," said Dyann Madson, UMass health educator.

Four dead towns leave their ghosts

BELCHERTOWN (AP) — It has been called one of the great structures of the world, rising 295 feet above the Swift River Valley, blocking a manmade pool of 412 billion gallons of water stretching more than 18 miles to the north.

But to the surviving residents of the long-dead towns of Dana, Enfield, Greenwich and Prescott, the Winsor Dam has been much more than an architectural symbol.

Construction on the dam in 1926, the first step in the massive Quabbin Reservoir project, signaled the beginning of the end to things that can only be remembered and not seen.

Survivors estimate that only 300 of the 2,500 people relocated after the towns were "discontinued" are alive today.

Eleanor E. Schmidt of Belchertown is 67 years old. She was 23 when she left "The Valley" in 1937, realizing the inevitability of Quabbin Reservoir. At the time she left her hometown of Prescott, Mrs. Schmidt viewed the coming of the reservoir "as an adventure."

"As things progressed, I would have gotten out of there anyway," she said.

For those who left The Valley in their youth, Mrs. Schmidt said, the impact of Quabbin strikes suddenly.

"It doesn't seem to be part of life until you're in your 40s," she said. "Then it hits you. You've got nothing to go back to. If you're a country person, you've got dirt and seeds in your blood."

Mrs. Schmidt said some of the older residents of The Valley were bitter about the state taking their land so that residents of eastern Massachusetts would have water.

"Bitterness? For some, yes," she said. "I have none. They, (the Metropolitan District Commission, which now maintains the reservoir) have been most gracious to me."

Mrs. Schmidt's father died in 1937 of acute appendicitis. "He didn't care to live. He said he'd never sell." Her mother moved to Amherst.

Several times a year Mrs. Schmidt ventures onto Prescott peninsula, now MDC land, to visit her home. The roads are all that remain. Once fertile farmland was replaced by saplings, the apple trees by pines.

A few of Mrs. Schmidt's neighbors, third-generation residents of Prescott, "can't go back. It tears them to pieces," she said.

In a halting voice, tears welling in her eyes, Mrs. Schmidt said visiting the peninsula gives her a sense of peace and security.

"I feel better...I know why," she said, and then paused. "Everything comes back...happiness...from your childhood, reminds you of your parents: the love, the hard work.

"To me it is the best vitamin pill made. It gives me peace to go in, to renew the freedom I enjoyed as a kid there," she said. "It's a different feeling, like you have a security blanket. I can go back and never want to go home."

The reservoir has pulled Warren H. Doubleday two ways. Now 71 years old, Doubleday was born and raised in Dana. He worked as an engineer on the Quabbin project for 3¼ years.

In his heart, Doubleday said, he longs to be able to take his children and grandchildren back to the family homestead. But in his mind, he said, "I always looked at it from an engineering standpoint, there was no question it was a good place to put a reservoir."

Doubleday now lives in North New Salem. The site of his family home in Dana is now under 10 feet of water.

"Of course, as younger people we felt differently about it," he said. "We grew up with it and expected it. At the time I didn't feel as bad about it as I do now."

Doubleday graduated from Worcester Polytechnic Institute in 1931 and worked at odd jobs until he was offered a civil engineering job on the project in 1933.

"Of course, that was the middle of the Depression," he said. Although his parents were staunchly opposed to the project, they did not try to stop Doubleday from taking the job.

"They didn't question the ethics of it," he said. "It was a job. Everyone was delighted to have a job. And I was darned glad to have it."

Doubleday said he goes back to his old haunts so many times during the year he has "become hardened to it. I don't suffer any great amount going in there anymore."

Council to see White's plan; prospects slight for quick deal

BOSTON (AP) — The City Council takes a look today at Mayor Kevin H. White's latest borrowing plan for replenishing Boston's shrunken treasury. But prospects are slight that White and the Council will be able to strike a deal quickly.

The council, which has been demanding that White surrender some of his budgetary power before it approves his bond proposal, believes the city's financial situation has lost its urgency. That viewpoint was reinforced last week when city officials filed a court affidavit saying they may have enough money to pay bills through the end of the fiscal year June 30.

White reportedly wants authority to borrow up to $90 million to keep schools open and begin paying court-mandated refunds of excessive property taxes collected from businesses.

'The Gipper' comes home to Notre Dame

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — President Reagan, whose portrayal of a Notre Dame football player made him a movie star 40 years ago, paid a nostalgic return visit to the campus yesterday and told graduating seniors his own story about the film most of them saw their first week on campus.

Reagan, who played the tragic supporting role of the "Gipper" in the movie "Knute Rockne — All American," came to Notre Dame under extraordinarily tight security for his first trip outside the Washington area since he was wounded in an assassination attempt on March 30.

When the president arrived at Michiana Airport here, he appeared to be wearing a bulletproof vest. A crowd of several hundred spectators was kept more than 100 feet away and behind two fences.

At Notre Dame, Reagan met actor Pat O'Brien, who played Knute Rockne in the movie and whom the president credited with helping him get the part of the Gipper. O'Brien kissed the president on the cheek and when a reporter called, "Back together again?" Reagan winked.

The movie in which Reagan and O'Brien starred is so popular here that it is shown to new students as part of university orientation week. After their sentimental reunion, Reagan helped the elderly actor off a stand on which he had been posing for pictures.

The Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, the university's president, opened the program by telling Reagan and the audience: "We welcome the president of the United States back to health. We welcome the president of the United States back to the body of his people, the Americans. And lastly, here at Notre Dame, we welcome the Gipper at long last back to get his degree."

The president received a warm reception from the crowd of more than 10,000 people, including about 2,000 students receiving degrees. Reagan was awarded an honorary doctor of law degree, as were O'Brien, United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, FBI Director William Webster, former Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie and retired Bank of America Chairman Alden Clausen.

The president's trip was quick, taking only a little more than six hours from mid-day departure to his return to Andrews Air Force Base near Washington before dark.

The president's degree citation said in part: "His vision now, as then, (when he was governor of California) has a simplicity about it ... He asks direct questions: Can we have better government but less government? ... He invites us to share the greater role in creating the future out of the best of the past."

House panel chairman deems Reagan's proposals workable

WASHINGTON (AP) — While other Democrats are branding President Reagan's latest Social Security plan "inhumane, unfair" and "a rotten thing to do," the chairman of the House panel charged with fashioning the legislation says he can work with the administration proposals.

"We're going to try to find some common ground," Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, chairman of the House Social Security subcommittee, said in an interview. "The worst thing we could do would be not to do something."

He said the major difference between the legislation his subcommittee has been working on and the Reagan proposals is that "he has deeper cuts and more abruptly."

But other Democrats were considerably more critical:

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., called the Reagan plan "despicable" and "a rotten thing to do." He suggested that few members in Congress would be "stonehearted enough to vote for it."

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd said Reagan's call for a 10 percent cut in Social Security benefits by 1986 is "inhumane, unfair" and that Congress will not accept it.

Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner of Social Security, said the proposed changes would save the program twice as much as it needs to operate in the black and would cut benefits by an average 22.3 percent over the next 75 years.

Pickle said he saw Reagan's approach as "a sincere effort to make recommendations." He pointed to the following areas of common ground between the administration plan and the legislation he is guiding through his subcommittee:

—Both would penalize early retirement, "with his providing an immediate, abrupt penalty and mine a lesser penalty."

—Both would remove the earnings limitation for Social Security recipients, Reagan's at 65 and Pickle's at 68.

—Both would eventually eliminate the minimum benefit and student benefits — abruptly under the Reagan plan and over a long period under the Pickle legislation.

Meanwhile, the House and Senate were set to give final approval this week to the compromise 1982 budget, which sets suggested spending limits for the 12 months beginning next Oct. 1.

Ruggers post shutout down Amherst, 25-0

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

Talk about your second half teams; these guys played like they had Vaseline on their hands in the first half. But as soon as the University of Massachusetts ruggers got back on the field after half-time, they were a powerhouse, leaving Amherst to hit the showers after the game, wondering what the heck they were doing playing rugby.

The University of Massachusetts rugby team had a tough first half, working, but not seeming to get anywhere. Amherst College started out slow, but came back later in the half to become a tough competitor. The UMass men did not expect this, since they could repeatedly be heard to say, "this should be an easy kill!"

But an easy kill it was, as the UMass ruggers went on to trounce on the Amherst men and rack the score up to a final, 25-0.

The first half started with the Minutemen easily gaining ground into the Amherst end-zone. They stayed that way for most of the half, with Amherst hanging tough -and keeping the Minutemen from scoring for a try.

UMass was dominating the scrums and mauls, and Dave Packard and Tim Durepo were passing well for that extra yardage.

Amherst had plenty of opportunities for being first on the scoreboard. The UMass men were recieving a lot of offsides calls and the Amherst ruggers were getting kicks on the penalty calls. But they just could not seem to get the ball between the posts, and they were repeatedly called "no good."

UMass was playing tough in the scrum, but they kept losing the ball; so many times UMass came close to a try in the first half, but that ball just seemed to slip right out of their hands at the last minute.

The men were becoming frustrated, and this is where they started to play sloppy ball, repeatedly giving Amherst the advantage.

The first half ended mercifully with Bruce Simmons punting on a penalty and scoring the first points of the game, giving UMass the lead, 3-0.

Ten minutes into the opening of the second half, the men found themselves in a scrum situation in their own end-zone. George Economo recieved the ball out of the scrum and passed it off to Durepo, who showed his lightening speed, and ran three-quarters length of the field for the first try of the game. The Minutemen were now up, 7-0.

But the score was not to remain at one number for too long in the half; the men were on a roll.

Economo was not going to settle for just an assist: he wanted a try of his own.

Off a pass from scrum-half, Greg Tawa, Economo, singlehandedly, ran for the second try of the half, within minutes of the first.

The score was now up to 11-0, for UMass.

Within minutes the Minutemen were on the scoring line again. Economo, who was playing with the glazed look of, 'Iwanna win', made a break down field, but dropped the ball in the end-zone. Fullback, Joe Lambert, picked up the ball and scored for another four points, with the lead now at 15-0.

Collegian photo by Terri Bellafiore

UMass' Bruce Simmons carries the ball against Amherst College this weekend. The ruggers were the early victors 25-0.

Amherst was still hanging tough, but UMass was not through yet.

The thunder clouds were rolling in and so were the tries for the Minutemen.

Try number four came to wing forward Paul Morrison on a pass from back Robby Rhodes. The kick after the try was made good by second row Jay Dacey bringing the score to 21-0.

In the last minutes of the game, the fifth and final try of the game was scored by kicker simmons, and ended an awesome second half by the Minutemen with an equally awesome score of 25-0.

UMass romps past Big Green

Gorillas win now at 13-1

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

It looked like a roving tribe of Austrailian aborigines had descended on Boyden Field Saturday afternoon, covered from head to toe with mud and intermittently sprinting across the ends of field and letting loose boisterous yells and chants which were foreign to the ear.

However, if you had wished to take the time to hose the mud from their bodies, you would have recognized these unknowns as being members of a tribe of a more domestic variety. For, in reality, this enthusiastic group of mud-worshipping bellyfloppers were none other than a substantial portion of the Boyden faithful who had withstood a steady downpour of second-half rain to root the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team to an 18-8 demolition of Dartmouth College Saturday.

The soggy (weather-wise but certainly not play-wise) victory was the final regular season game for head coach Dick Garber's Gorillas whose 13-1 record is one of the best in Massachusetts lacrosse history.

UMass attackman Chris Corin, part of an attack squad that is one of the highest scoring ever, goes for the net in a lacrosse game earlier this season.

The Gorillas were seeded fourth in the post-season lacrosse tournaments but whether or not they play at home is up in the air. See story on page 1.

For much of the first half, it appeared as though the sunny skies and warm temperatures would belie the dire predictions of dousing thunderstorms. It also looked like the Gorillas had a scrappy opponent in the Dartmouth Big Green, as the Ivy Leaguers from Hanover N.H. displayed a decent defense backed by some strong checking.

To stop the potent Gorilla attack, however, it takes more than a good "D". Gorilla tri-captain Chris Corin (4 goals, 5 assists) popped in back-to-back goals, both off passes from Manhasset Connection partner Lee Vosburgh, in a one minute time lapse to break Massachusetts; scoring ice. On the first senior Ray Cozzi, who had an outstanding game at defense, made an alert scoop in front of the Gorilla cage and passed off to midfielder Mike Lavin, who relayed to Vosburgh. The senior attackman, who had two goals and three assists on the day, then found Corin alone in front.

As has been the case all season, the Gorilla attack was complemented by an especially effective defense. Massachusetts' "D" held the Green attackers without a shot on net for the first seven minutes of the first period and the first five of the second quarter.

Of course, one reason for Dartmouth's inability to get a shot off was that the Gorilla attacker and midfielder were controlling the ball for long stretches, but, when the Big Green did get into Massachusetts' territory, they were quickly rebuffed by the Gorilla "D".

Along with the torrential, early second period downpour came a flood of Gorilla scores. Junior attackman Jim Weller, who had tied the Gorilla single-season scoring record on a first period goal, batted in a Corin pass in the opening minute, but the goal was disallowed. The Ontario native, who finished with six goals and two assists, would not be denied. He slammed in the record-setter in mid-period to jack the Gorilla lead to 7-3. Middie Ernie Shapiro tallied his second goal of the period with six seconds left in the half to increase the lead to 10-4.

Although the deluge continued in earnest in the second half, not too many fans departed. Several hundred fled to the relatively dry confines of Tobin Hall. The Gorilla-philes who stayed on The Hill probably enjoyed themselves more. Everyone was thoroughly soaked, prompting one unidentified Bud-drinker to comment, "This is just like a wet T-shirt contest."

The organizers of the UMass Mud-slide/Belly-flop contest were saluted by the Gorilla team members after coach Garber called a time-out with thirty second left in the game, then were joined in the revelry by team members at game's end.

Although more serious matters await the Gorillas Wednesday, this was a fitting way to conclude the regular season at Boyden.

Mittmen end season with sweep

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Two full game performances by University of Massachusetts pitchers Steve Cramer and Dan Cook brightened the future of the UMass pitching staff in an upbeat finale to the Minutemen's season on Earl Lorden Field Friday, where the batters swept a doubleheader from Dartmouth College, 4-3 and 5-4.

Cramer's gutsy stint in the opener, in which the junior toughened up with the tying runs in scoring position in the last two innings coupled with Cook's often masterful seven inning relief job in the nightcap provided for the fourth straight win for the Minutemen. With victories in nine of their last 11 games, coach Dick Bergquist's 1961 squad finishes with a respectable 22-17 record.

Each of the two hurlers, Cramer, a lefthander, and Cook, a righty, had very self-fulfilling moments in the course of their duties. Cramer's first shining came in the top of the sixth inning. With UMass ahead, 3-2, Dartmouth put runners on second and third with none out before Mr. Cramer found a little something extra. He promptly struck out the next three batters, his first three strikeouts of the game, to end the threat.

After Jeff Johnson led off the bottom of the seventh with a pinch-hit homer to bring Dartmouth within one again, 4-3, Pete Lavery singled and moved into scoring position on a sacrifice bunt. Again Cramer (6-3) refused to yield to the threat by wiffing Roberto Ballaguer and forcing a ground ball, game ending double play, with the help of a Dean Bennett pivot.

Dan Cook didn't blow his chance to show Coach Bergquist a little something. After relieving a shellshocked (four earned runs, no cuts) Tony Presnal in the first inning, Cookie put together a six-hitter that left the Green cold and scoreless. The sophomore finished with a classic touch by striking out the last two batters in the top of the seventh with the tying run on first base.

"I had the control today," said Cook, who struck out 11 batters in a junior varsity contest earlier this month and was anxious to again prove his varsity merit. "The slider was working well and I was able to keep the ball down," which accounts for his success in the outing in which he struck out six and walked just two men.

The Dartmouth Green were not exactly storming into Lorden Field with a record of 7-22, but they showed enough to scare the Minutemen. Over the course of the two games, they forced UMass to come from behind twice and often came a hit away from breaking either contest wide open.

With two out in the first inning of the first game Ballaguen reached on an infield hit and scored on a double to centerfield by Green designated hitter Rob Carroll. Tim Whall's triple to right scored Carroll, giving the visitors a 2-0 lead.

In the bottom of the inning Dean Bennett singled to right and moved to third and a single by brother Barry. Deano scored on a ground out by Mark Litano and Barry later tied the game when he came home on a wild pitch by Dartmouth lefthander Him Croteau (3-7).

In the fifth inning, behind a string of ten retired men by Cramer, the Minutemen tallied again. Dean Bennett reached on a fielder's choice, stole second and third and scored on a passed ball to make the score 3-2.

Keith Lovellette failed to get two hits on the day to bring his season total to the 45 he desired, but his one hit, a swatted homer on a haging curveball by Croteau in the sixth, gave UMass the insurance run they later needed.

UMass third baseman Jack Perry again got the job done after a series of misfortune hit regular hot-corner-man Barry Bennett. Perry had to replace Bennett in both games after Barry was ejected (see related story below) from each contest. His sacrifice fly in the fifth inning of the nightcap was the winning run batted in.

Presnal spotted the Green four runs with two singles, two walks and another single in the first inning and the Minutemen hitters were having trouble getting their timing off Blake Wiggins, Dartmouth's starting righthanders.

But in the fifth an Aulenback single followed by a two-run home run by Warren McReddie (see related story) made the score 4-2). Vin Bonanno tripled to center followed by another roundtripper by John Kraham that tied the game at four. Kelly McDonald walked, moved to third on a hit and run single Dean Bennett, and scored on Perry's sacrifice fly to center.

Cook, who finishes the season at 2-2, allowed only two singles in the sixth and seventh innings.

Mittmen notebook

Congratulations are in order for UMass first baseman Warren McReddie. His eighth homer of the year in the second game of the doubleheader Friday tied Bob Hansen's 13-year old, single season record for roundtrippers hit by an individual player.

Every homer the junior has struck in 1981 was powerfully stung, but Friday's was the first one at Lorden that he deposited over the oppostite field wall, near the 375 mark in left center.

"It was due to come, nothing better could have happened," McReddie said. "I was one for 17 or something near the end and I just wanted to put my batting average above .300. It (the homer) was really satisfying.

Barry Bennett, the senior UMass third baseman, was having a hell of a day at the plate in his last appearances as a Minuteman. In his first two at bats in the first game he singled and scored and layed down a bunt single that moved brother Dean into scoring position.

But two incidents with umpire Bill Laroue ended in game ejections for Bennett, who frustratingly finished his UMass baseball career in the stands behind home plate.

Gorillas will play at Virginia

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Because of a severe press of time and the fact that they have already made the announcement, the acting head of the NCAA Lacrosse Selection Committee has refused to listen to an appeal by the University of Massachusetts pertaining to the location of tomorrow's first round playoff game.

The Gorillas left at 6:30 this morning for the University of Virginia to play a game that should be played here. The NCAA committee ranked UMass fourth of eight teams in the tourney, with the top four teams playing at home — except UMass.

On Sunday, the committee gave UMass until 4 p.m. to find an alternative site after deeming Boyden Field unacceptable because of insufficient seating and crowd control mechanisms, said David Bischoff, dean of the UMass School of Physical Education.

"The problem was that the NCAA knew a long time ago that we indicated Boyden (as the site for the playoffs if they were to be held here). If it was unacceptable, they should have told us earlier," he said.

After spending Sunday in unsuccessful efforts to get in touch with the proper officials to secure either Alumni Stadium or an alternative site (Springfield College), UMass head coach Dick Garber hoped to get an extension until yesterday morning.

"The problem was that it being Sunday, we couldn't get hold of any of the appropriate people. We thought extending the deadline to 10:30 this morning was a reasonable request," Garber said.

Student senate meeting tonight

The Undergraduate Student Senate postponed last night's special meeting to tonight at 7 P.M. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Student Senate Speaker Ed Lee called the meeting possibly the senate's last chance to pass the $1.4 million Student Government Association budget.

Lee said the printing of the budget document had been delayed but also said a controversy inside the senate over the funding for the Committee For the Collegiate Education of Black Students and the Bilingual Collegiate Program is taking place. Lee said the senate was divided over funding the two programs. The Senate claims it can not fund the two groups and is seeking to have the administration provide the money, Lee said.

CARP suspended from CC concourse

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Collegiate Association for Research and Principles (CARP) was suspended last night from the University of Massachusetts Campus Center concourse for selling literature, in violation of the Campus Center vending policy.

The Campus Center Board of Governors, which took the action against the group, which is affiliated with the Unification Church, revoked CARP's license until the end of the semester after three signed affadavits by University students were submitted to them, stating that CARP was selling literature illegally on May 16, 1981.

BOG Vice Chairperson Peter Lucas said CARP had violated their class three vending license at various times in the past several months, which prohibits vendors from selling any kind of information. Lucas said the group was listed as a "community service" organization.

"The suspension stemmed from the fact that CARP, in the past year, has been selling literature at their concourse table which they called donations," he said.

"This class three vending policy," Lucas said, "goes for every group in the concourse. We're not isolating them as a group. They've violated it several times in the past, and action had to be taken."

Although Lucas said CARP would not be allowed to set up another table in the concourse for the rest of the academic year, he anticipated they would have a license beginning next fall.

"They can apply for another license next semester, and they will probably be accepted. This was just a reprimand

Bill Munro, a University of Massachusetts parking service attendant, replaces a parking meter coin box in the Southwest horseshoe yesterday. Jim Lee, the University's parking coordinator, said the boxes were removed for the weekend as a precaution, since some meters were taken during the weekend of Spring Concert in 1979. He added the University doesn't want people taking trophies home to their rooms. Only meters in Southwest were removed since they are closest to Alumni Stadium, Lee said. Munro added that police would not ticket the cars at the meters for 24 hours as a matter of courtesy.

Four charged in CC Hotel rape

NORTHAMPTON — Four men and two juveniles were all charged with aggravated rape, kidnapping, indecent assault and battery, assault and battery, being disorderly persons and other charges, yesterday at Hampshire County District Court.

The men were charged in connection with a reported sexual assault and beating of a 19-year-old woman on the fifth floor of the Campus Center Hotel early Saturday. All pleaded not guilty to the charges.

Robert J. Smith, 18, of Hyde Park, was charged with assault with intent to murder and threatening to commit murder, in addition to the other charges, and is being held at the Hampshire County House of Corrections in lieu of $10,000 cash bail.

Arthur G. Pearce, 17, of Hyde Park, was also charged with giving a false name to avoid prosecution, and is being held at the Hampshire County House of Corrections in lieu of $10,000 bail.

Joel J. Fagerberg, 18, of Roxbury, was also charged with assault and battery of a police officer and is being held at the Hampshire County House of Corrections in lieu of $5,000 bail.

Paul F. Hackley, 17, of Hyde Park, was also charged with giving a false name to avoid prosecution and is being held at the Hampshire County House of Corrections in lieu of $5,000 bail.

The two 16-year-old juveniles were charged with juvenile delinquency, in addition to the other charges, and are being held at the Department of Youth Services in Springfield.

The victim reportedly received abrasions and contusions during the assault and was taken to the University Health Services, treated for the injuries, and released, said Barry Averill, Executive Director of Health Services.

Teri Anderson, of the Everywoman's Center, said she has been counseling the victim and she is "an emotionally strong person, doing very well."

Myra Hindus, of the Everywoman's Center, said they have received at least three or four calls from women reporting they have been raped this semester that were never reported to the police.

"Right now," said Hindus, "we have a climate where rape is on the rise."

Budget suggestion too low to maintain services

The state House Ways and Means Committee yesterday suggested $87.6 million be allocated to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst for the 1982 fiscal year.

The committee's recommendation came as part of their total budget recommendation for the year. The new figure is $1.4 million higher than the budget previously recommended by Gov. Edward King. (See story page 2)

Ken Moore, chair of the UMass Undergraduate Student Senate Public Policy Committee, said last night that his group, along with the UMass administration and the Alumni Association, will be sending out letters "in the next 24 to 48 hours," urging parents and alumni to lobby legislators for an additional $2.1 million.

Moore said a total budget of $89.7 million is needed if UMass is to continue to offer the same level of service it now offers.

"If we can achieve that figure, we'll be all right...we'll be able to keep service as it is now," Moore said.

Moore also said that Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, will propose the $2.1 million increase when the budget package goes to the floor of the House. Lobbying pressure from parents and alumni is needed if Collins' amendment is to pass, Moore said.

House committee proposes budget for next fiscal year

BOSTON — The House Ways and Means Committee yesterday proposed a $6.48 billion state budget for the next fiscal year, including $201.6 million in direct new local aid and controversial measures intended to help communities cope with Proposition 2½.

The bill proposes no new state taxes and is more than $80 million above Gov. Edward J. King's $6.39 billion spending plan filed in January.

Both the House and Senate committees write their own versions of the budget. Floor action in the House will begin next Tuesday, and attention later will focus on the Senate.

Senate Ways and Means Chairman Chester G. Atkins said at a recent news conference that King's proposed budget was about $160 million in the red. But Atkins' House counterpart, Rep. Michael C. Creedon, painted a brighter picture Monday and said King may have underestimated state revenue by nearly 2 percent.

This was translated into an automatic $60 million to $70 million increase in local aid, Creedon said. Additional aid would come from cuts elsewhere in King's recommendations.

Besides the $201.6 million increase in direct aid, which can be applied against local tax rates, the communities would realize another $30.5 million in benefits under the House plan through:

—a state takeover of county courthouses.

—state payment of residential placement in the Chapter 766 special education program.

—state payment of a 3 percent cost-of-living increase for retired municipal workers.

—state reimbursements for prisoners held in county jails.

The committee also proposed to save communities $37 million — if all took advantage of the change — with a law allowing public school systems to drop kindergarten. The class now is required under a law passed a decade ago.

Communities would be allowed to charge more — to those able to pay — for school lunches, for a potential saving of $11 million statewide. Proposed changes in the special education and transitional bilingual education laws could save the cities and towns $35 million to $43 million, Creedon said.

O'Neill criticizes cuts in student financial aid funding

NEWTON, Mass. — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. criticized Reagan administration plans yesterday to cut back student loans and warned against "crippling higher education" while fighting inflation.

O'Neill commented in a commencement address at Boston College, the school from which he graduated 45 years ago.

He noted that the nation faces hard choices as it reduces federal spending to cut the federal deficit and lower inflation.

"One choice that we must avoid is that of crippling higher education and denying our youth equal access to educational opportunity," he said.

O'Neill said that more than 1.5 million students may lose their eligibility to receive college loans and grants next year.

The reductions in aid, he said, fall hardest on private, competitive universities, such as Boston College.

US envoy seeks to avert clash between Syria and Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon — U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib, seeking to avert a Syrian-Israeli clash over Syria's missiles in Lebanon, flew to Damascus yesterday. But even before he arrived, Syria indicated there was little hope his 11-day-old mission would succeed.

"Syria is only listening to the American envoy (Habib) to get acquainted with the real aims of the mission, and is not ready to accept what the mediator considers a suitable solution," said the official Syrian newspaper Al-Baath.

Syrian President Hafez Assad vowed to "resist any Israeli aggression against Lebanon or against Syrian forces in Lebanon" to remove the Sovietmade anti-aircraft missiles, the official news agency SANA reported.

Supreme Court gives criminal suspects two important tools

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court gave criminal suspects two important new tools yesterday for preventing their own words from being used against them.

The court ruled that murder defendants must be warned about their rights to remain silent and to have a lawyer's help prior to psychiatric testing if the test results are used after conviction to help choose life or death as punishment.

And in a separate decision, the justices said police cannot use information gained by initiating new conversations with a criminal suspect who previously refused to talk without his lawyer present.

Efforts to end United Mine Workers soft coal strike falter

WASHINGTON — Efforts to end the 7½-week-old United Mine Workers strike against the soft coal industry faltered again yesterday over the issue of job security and the union broke off bargaining for an indefinite period.

An hour after negotiations resumed following a weekend break, chief industry representative Bobby R. Brown told reporters the two sides were leaving the table with no date in sight for their return.

Union President Sam Church confirmed he had asked for the recess.

Workshop receives support

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The Student Auto Workshop, threatened with a possible shut-down because of its inability meet the financial demands of the University of Massachusetts Parking Office, yesterday began a petition drive to gain student support for their ailing coop.

The Workshop, faced with next year's rent fee and past deficit payments totalling $6,800, started the drive to hopefully pressure the Parking Office for a rent exemption for the location they presently occupy in the Campus Center garage, a Workshop spokesman said.

At press time, an estimated 1,100 students had signed the petition located in front of the Hatch Cafeteria in the Student Union Building.

Gerald Aldrich, a member of the coop, said although the Workshop would be willing to cut back on the space they use next fall, therefore lowering the current $2,400 rent fee to $1,800, past deficit payments cannot be met and a rent exemption is the only eventual solution to their financial problems.

The student petition, together with the help of the Campus Center Board of Governors, would hopefully provide assistance in reaching a solution, Aldrich said.

"The BOG have become our advocates. This summer they will hopefully meet with the administration and follow proper political channels to alleviate the problem," he said.

Currently, Aldrich said, efforts to keept costs under control at the coop have resulted in a reduction of employee payroll hours as well as a decrease in the amount of purchases for new tools.

Aldrich also said that since 1977, when there was a transfer of control of the parking garage from the Campus Center administration to the UMass Parking Office, the Auto Workshop has been the only student coop charged any kind of fee by the university.

James Lee, director of the UMass Parking Office, said that according to the Campus Parking Garage policy, instituted by former Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery five years ago, no rent exemption can be granted to anyone.

"The policy sets the same basis for everyone. They (the Auto Workshop) must accept it. At this time, a rent exemption is no way manageable at all," he said.

Aside from the financial requirements of the coop, Lee said, the Workshop, in recent years, has been cited for various fire and safety violations that could jeapordize their "tenure" in the parking garage.

Aldrich denied, however, any "formal complaints" had been issued by the Parking Office in the past year.

With a possible shut-down of the coop next fall, Aldrich said students would suffer the most.

"It's a truly valuable asset to this university. It's an education. And if we go under, those 600 to 650 students we service every semester are out of luck," he said.

Veteran's services may end with budget cuts

By SUSAN RING
Collegian Staff

Certification and monitoring of enrollment may be the only services guaranteed to be available to veterans at the University of Massachusetts next semester.

The UMass Veteran's Assistance and Counseling Service (VACS) is currently funded by the federal Veterans Cost of Instruction Payments (VCIP) program. The Gramm-Latta budget recently passed by the House of Representatives includes an $8.8 billion cut in education funds. There is reportedly no money slotted for the VCIP program.

"Congress has passed Reagan's budget lock, stock and barrel, and the VCIP program is out the window," says UMass Director of Veteran Affairs Leo Riley.

The state provides money for little more than the certification clerk's salary. VACS will no longer exist in its present form if the University does not pick up the tab for costs currently covered by VCIP. Recruitment, outreach, counseling and remedial programs lie in the balance, Riley said.

"We've known for years that it (VACS) wasn't a permanent fixture. What gets lost are these services," said Riley.

VACS has served as a watchdog on the Veterans Administration, making sure that people receive the benefits that they are eligible for. Single veterans receive $342 per month through the G.I. Bill to pay for tuition and living expenses. VACS has been there when a vet's check has been lost in the mail or otherwise detained, working in conjunction with the Amherst Veterans Agent. They also offer counseling services.

"We (VACS) can make the difference in whether or not a veteran decides to make the transition of becoming a student," said Riley.

Dr. Deirdre A. Ling, dean of Academic Support Services, will be meeting with Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Loren Baritz Thursday and with Riley next Tuesday to discuss the future of VACS.

Rape myth poses danger to potential victims

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

Three gang rapes reported in Amherst this spring have brought attention to the myths associated with the crime of rape, which University of Massachusetts and national experts say pose a danger to potential victims.

Many of the misconceptions about rape result from the myth that rape is an act of sexual frustration. Most authorities now agree that rape is primarily an act of aggression against women motivated by the need to abuse, humiliate and degrade them.

The law has extended its definition of rape to include sexual acts such as sodomy, fellatio, cunnilingus, or penetration with an object, not necessarily heterosexual, commited against the will of the victim.

Many believe that men are victims of provocative or seductive women. However, known rape vietims range in age from two months to 97 years, according to an article from Rape, a publication of the President's Task Force on Women's safety.

"Victim-precipitated rape is the equivalent of victim-precipitated robbery: bank tellers shouldn't have so much money just over the window; it only teases people to rob it," said Coleman McCarthy writing in the Washington Post.

Many women do not report rape because they are embarrassed, afraid, or blame themselves. Myra Hindus, coordinator of the Everywoman's Center Task Force on Violence Against Women, said the current FBI statistic that only one out of ten rapes is reported is a conservative estimate. Less than half of reported rapes in cities and suburbs result in arrests, according to an FBI report. Hindus attributes the lack of reporting to the police, and in part, to the society's blaming of the vietim. A woman can not always get away from a rapist if she really wants to, as some suggest. The Problem of Rape on Campus, a pamphlet published by The Project on the Status and Education of Women of the Association of American Colleges, states in 87 percent of rape cases the assailant either carried a weapon or threatened the vietim with death if she resisted him.

Some believe a woman uses the charge of rape to get back at a man she is angry with, but only 2 percent of all reported rapes are proved false, states Men Against Rape, by Carolyn K. Wickenkamp and Diane K. Rausch.

In an article published in Playboy, attorney Susan B. Jordan said that once the false assumptions about rape are eliminated from the courtroom process, juries can determine whether a victim's story is true, as they do in any burglary or robbery case.

If a woman is raped while under the influence of drugs it is not her fault, legal authorities contend. "The right not to be raped does not change because you have been drinking alcohol or using drugs. Likewise, use of alcohol or drugs by the rapist is not an excuse for his behavior," states Rape and Sexual Assault, a pamphlet published by the University of Massachusetts.

Hindus said that in approximately 60 percent of rapes the vietim knows her assailant.

It is highly recommended for a vietim of sexual assault to go to the hospital as soon as possible, whether or not she has visible injuries.

According to Rape and Sexual Assault, and Rape there are four important objectives in medical care after sexual assault: testing for injuries, (internal and external) pregnancy prevention, and venereal disease, and to obtain legally correct evidence should the vietim decide to prosecute.

Traditional fellowship breakfast ends semester

By Ken Bazinet
Collegian Staff

The Interracial Apperception and Ideology class at the University of Massachusetts closed the semester Friday with its eleventh traditional fellowship breakfast which included poetry recitals and musical selections performed by members of the class.

Reverend Peter Schneider gave the keynote address which he labeled "Exodus Relived" which touched on stories of Moses and the Old Testament. He also spoke on the "prisoner's base" theory which, he said, meant that men are contained by "ego identity and self understanding which causes us to forget who we offend." He said people should strive to break from this pattern.

Dr. Stephan Oates of the UMass History Department praised Dr. O.C. Bobby Daniels, the class' instructor, and presented everyone in attendance with copies of a pamphlet he published on the work of the late Dr. Martin Luther King.

Certificates were also presented to all members of the class by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson and Dean of Students William Field.

Poetry was written and recited by Susan Tracy, Carlos Anderson, Crystal Ivy and Betty Dale-Jones. The musical group "Voices of Hope" performed the selections.

Ruby Burgess, and organizer of the breakfast, said the event was a success, and that she felt it promoted "close human relations in opposition to racism."

Libyan film not intelligent

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

Omar Muhktar-Lion of the Desert is my favorite Libyan film. It is also my second most favorite film produced by Moustapha Akkad (Halloween is the first). It is about my fourth favorite film about the desert. as Anthony Quinn films go, it rates about a seven, and as war films go, it's in the low twenties.

Although extremely reverential in tone, this film purports to depict the Italian Army's violent territorial campaigns in Northern Africa during Mussolini's fascist reign of terror. When it does stick to facts, and in this case facts mean battle scenes, the film is fascinating. When it tries to focus on personal subplots or attempts to represent unrecorded private conversations, it falls flater than a crushed sand flea.

In the title role, Anthony Quinn gives us another one of his Arab routines that he perfected in Lawrence of Arabia but wasted in Caravans and Muhammad Messenger of God. As Muhktar, Quinn comes off as a saintly, desert scholar warrior; who was a military tactitian, proves himself as more than a match for Italy's General Graziani.

As played by Britain's Oliver Reed, Graziani comes off as a black suited despot who likes to laugh while watching his men being slaughtered by the opposition. Although only playing characteratures of real men, both Quinn and Reed are a joy to watch in their posturing and hamming, for only they could get away with such melodramatic stunts.

Unfortunatly, the rest of the acting just doesn't keep up. Rod Steiger is an actor who is either very good or very bad and in this case, his Mussolini ranks down there with his worst. Greek actress, Irene Papas spends most of her time on screen crying, possibly due to a bad deal in her contract, Sir John Gielgud appears to be smirking from underneath his Ayatollah costume and steel wool beard and the rest of the cast, comprised of European actors with interesting names, seems to be marking time until they get a part in a film located in a more reasonable climate. The only supporting actor who escapes with his dignity intact is an Italian playing an Italian; Raf Vallone as a decent Italian officer who attempts to bring sanity to an impossible situation. He is the one cool breeze in the festering desert.

Consistently, the rest of the film is as uneven as the acting of the stars. The location footage does not come off as effective as it should due to the amateurish cinematography. There is no sin in all of filmmaking as foul as that of the elegantly mounted scene improperly recorded and filmed.

Perhaps the sound is so poor because the script is so inane. Although it represents a real chapter in history, the script is so overrun with cliches that important points and statements pop out far too infrequently. Luckily though, a climactic confrontation between Quinn and Reed is done rather well.

It is a pity, though, that a film that had the chance to acquaint American audiences with a slice of Mid-Eastern culture and history was not brought to the screen in a more intelligent manner. But maybe a film paid for by Libya's Colonel Haddafi just had to be a waste product.

Collegian offers new outlet for selling used text books

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian classifieds will offer a new listing for Fall 1981. The concept was developed by two marketing major students Mark Lyon and Andrew Jacobson. In their report, they discovered a majority of the students on the campus buy and sell used text books. But the students have no major outlet besides the conventional word of mouth and mimeograph advertisements. It was determined that there is a limited market reach for the students using these outlets.

For the first five days that the Collegian publishes starting Sept. 8, the classified department will accept ads for used text books. On the seventh day of publication, the Collegian will print a separate classified section for used text books. There will also be separate headings for each department. All that is needed from the student is the course number, title of text, author and phone number. A fee will be charged which will be determined this August. The business manager and advertising manager have determined that the fee will be set between 40 and 50 cents per line.

Religion: An unanswered question

By JOHANNA HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Religion — a sensitive, controversial subject that is forever being questioned all over the world, is also being questioned at the University of Massachusetts.

Religion here is alive and thriving in many forms. The beliefs among UMass students are different, but feelings in regards to the subject itself are often the same.

When people on campus were asked how they felt about religion in their own lives and how religion is viewed at UMass they frequently would talk about it, but wanted to remain anonymous.

One woman said, "I'm always interested in talking about religion, but I haven't quite defined my own feelings yet. I don't think I want to see my ideas in print with my name on them, because I'm always changing. There's no way you could get everything I feel down on paper, either. It's a very complicated subject."

A junior from Southwest agreed. "I can imagine people coming up to me to attack my religious opinions," he said.

People questioned said they felt that the majority of UMass students definitely have some sort of faith.

"I think people here are pretty religious. I mean, I don't go to church, but I believe in God and stuff. I think a lot of people are like that," said Paul, a student from Central.

A member of the clergy said he felt there has always been a strong religious feeling on campus.

"It's basic to everyone; Jews, Protestants, Catholics or whatever. Religion is an identification of human feelings," he said.

Students are genuinely interested in religion, and are receptive, open and concerned about how the gospel can be applied to their lives, he said.

One woman from Hillel said she thought UMass would be very atheistic when she first came, and was pleasantly surprised to find that it is not.

"Religion plays a large part in people's lives. Some aren't versed in religion. Some care, some don't. It's there, but it's not a strong motivating force," she said.

In light of political situations and ideals around the world today, a religious belief can be of help, she said.

"People have to realize that the two are related, but very different. You don't have to go with either religion or politics. I can decide on issues separate from my religious beliefs," she said.

Religion is a way of life

"Religion is a way of life, and if you find something that works, it's terrific," said a junior named Vanessa. "I believe in God and Jesus, and that we are here to help each other through life. I guess there's a lot more to it, but I just try to live each day the best I can," she said.

Religion makes rules to order life, but when people make the rules the religion, it's wrong, said Reverend Montgomery, the Episcopalian minister for UMass. "I'm Christian first, Episcopalian second. If someone's hungry, I'm not going to let him starve because he's not of my faith," he said.

"I believe there is something out there somewhere, but I don't call it God, really. People make God to be too much like a person, and I won't pray to a person," said Sharon, a freshman from Southwest.

Religion on campus is evidently alive, if not easily defined, but how will people feel in the future?

"The eighties promise to be a return to conservative ideas, a time of neo-conservatism," said a clergy member from the Newman Center.

"People are definitely returning to religion," said Montgomery. He feels a great deal of the religious feeling is cultural right now. He said, people are following the beliefs of their parents to a great extent, and although they don't go to services now, many will when they get older and start to settle down.

The clergy member agreed that most people accept religion after they go through questioning their beliefs. "There's nothing wrong with the 'great debate.' Only good can come from knowing about other things. If you understand what the church is trying to say, it's great to debate and discuss different points," he said.

Some people believe they have the one and only answer and don't listen to other points of views, the clergy member said. "That's dangerous. There is a decided difference between a debate and a one-sided issue. The second leads to a lot of name calling," he said. "Ecumenically, the name calling has stopped. I think that is a very important change for the better," he said.

"UMass isn't 'real life'," said Debbie, a Jewish student. "On campus people can be as liberal as they want, but as they get older, they won't stay the same. History shows that people settle down more after college. Also, there are going to be changes, especially with the Moral Majority. I'm scared for Jews."

Time to make decisions

"I hope people keep questioning," she said. "I'm glad that more and more a return to religion isn't because that's what your parents did. Now is the time to decide on our beliefs, and make decisions. If you have to keep questioning as you get older, that's not always good either," Debbie said.

Students should decide for themselves, look around at what everyone is saying and ask a lot of questions, said Anne, a senior. "Ask them seriously too. Don't let anyone talk you into anything. Decide for yourself," she said.

"That's one of the problems with cults and others who think they have found the 'right way,' and who haven't really examined the beliefs. Religion is a personal thing. Listen to others, but decide for yourself," she said.

There is not much more one can say about religion on campus without asking all of the students to write their own chapters. No one who claimed to be an absolute aetheist could be reached for comment; everyone seemed to feel that there is some superhuman power, be it God, or "The Force."

Nearly everyone expressed some fear over cults. The general attitude was that anyone looking into different religions, trying to understand what is right for him or her, should be careful and remember that if something is being promoted as the "only way," it usually isn't. Religion was generally regarded as a freedom, not a guilt.

Reverend Montgomery said for him, religion requires that "you find who you are, and be who you are." He said that takes a lot of time and consideration, and recommended listening to others, but deciding for yourself. If you choose a traditional religion, or something else you have found that works best for you, it will be part of your lifestyle, a part of you, so don't rush into anything, he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Guest Column A modest proposal

For Procuring As Many Nuclear Reactors As Needed To Stop The Children Of Poor People Anywhere In The World From Becoming A Burden To Their Parents Or Country—And Other Noble Deeds.

It is a melancholy object to those who walk the streets of Bombay, Calcutta, or any other terribly overpopulated city throughout the world; when they see the streets, alleys, and ditches overrun with starving children with their stomachs expanded four times the normal size from malnutrition.

My intention is far from being confined to providing only for starving children, for being a true humanitarian I also feel compelled to seek out ways to contribute to medical research and continental mobilization. I'd like to introduce to poor people a scheme that will liberate them from poverty with yearly annuities, and show real fishermen a challenge never before possible. All of this and much more can be accomplished by the strategic placement of surprisingly few nuclear power plants.

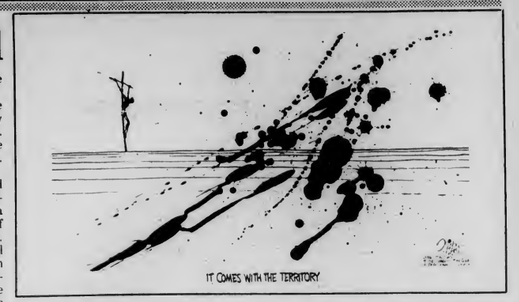
These power plants, though not very efficient energy sources, certainly are superior overpopulation deterants. Severely overpopulated cities with a nuclear reactor placed in just the right spot could, with some patience and a little luck, experience the blessed meltdown.

I see no better way of reducing the population by forty-five thousand lucky souls, so swiftly and with such little effort. The only drawback I forsee here is the supression of some land for a long time. But all good things have a price.

I have been informed by a very good friend of mine, Dr. Pierce, that with the advent of modern medicine there has been a significant drop in the availability of stillborn babies and miscarried fetuses. This has been an aggravation to medical students, for they now must double-up in their dissecting labs sharing one fetus between two and sometimes even three students. Dr. Pierce tells me that today's medical students really like to get to the heart of things and sharing fetuses frequently causes conflicts.

The solution to this problem, as you might already have guessed, is, of course, nuclear power plants. "Atomic Energy Commission studies conducted in 1975, show that since 1947 only two million power plant personnel have been exposed to whole body penetrations of radiation."

By building more power plants we could increase that number enough to produce sufficient unnatural cell mutations, congential malformations, and miscarried fetuses to supply all the medical schools, and quite probably dental schools as well, with plenty of specimens to go around.



Also along this line, the cell mutations, with just a little good fortune, would induce enough concerous tumours to prod the federal government into appropriating money to give to the American Cancer Society, which I hear is short on funds. The cancer society, then adequately funded, could continue on its quest for the mighty cure.

Also in need of a cure is the plight of the great fishermen. Fishing, at one time a flourishing sport, has been declining in popularity since the invention of the electric fishing pole and the indifference of today's apathetic society to the continuous overstocking of our country's rivers and streams. Being an avid fisherman, myself, I find one the most exciting attributes of nuclear power plants to be the great amount of heat they produce. This heat always raises the temperature of the water around the plant, thereby killing most of the fish and other living organisms in these waters. This decline of the fish population will surely exasperate fully the young fishermen with the electric fishing poles so that they will rapidly become bored and then leave the riverbanks to oldtimers like myself who are looking for a real challenge.

There also exists the challenge of finding safe disposal of radio-active material. Though we want to reduce population, we don't want to eliminate everyone. So I will give a hint to those of you that don't have too much money: invest what you can in nuclear waster disposal companies and you will become rich. As yet nothing has been found that can withstand continuous contact with radioactive particles for long periods of time, and fortunately for you it is doubtful anything ever will.

The last thing I wanted to talk about is mobilization. The United States, which prides itself on being the most mobile country in the world, will at long last get a chance to really show off. We don't yet have a drastic overpopulation problem so we probably will not like losing 45 thousand citizens at a time to meltdowns. Of course we will have our share of nuclear incidents, and when we do have these small problems we will have to do some quick stepping. People in the problem area will have to hop over to a new area. Of course the details of where they will move to, and how they will get there, can always be worked out when the time comes. Maybe to be consistent with the American Way of being free to do anything you want to, there should be a new freedom. This could be called freedom of evacuation. This way, after a nuclear accident, citizens would be free to run in any direction as fast as they want to.

I profess from the sincerity of my heart, that I have not the least personal interest in endeavoring; to promote the construction of these plants, having no other motive than the public good of my country, and the world; by reducing overpopulation, promoting medical research, mobilizing our country and even giving some pleasure to fishermen. I have money enough not to bother investing in nuclear waste disposal companies, and I am getting on in age so that I will soon have to stop fishing.

Letters

Green for life

I am writing to request that you join with others in an act of solidarity with people who suffer under the tyranny of violent repression in El Salvador, and with those who live under the tyranny of fear in Atlanta.

As you may know, graduating students on many campuses are joining in a symbolic action. When so many feel so powerless to alter ill-conceived public policy and senseless violence, seemingly small acts of joint action take on great significance. I suggest as an action for graduating seniors and faculty that an arm band be worn at commencement ceremonies as a way of corporately mourning the more than 12,000 dead in El Salvador, and the 27 officially listed young blacks in Atlanta. Simply put, it is the least we can do.

Futher, we can write to impress upon Congress, the President, and our local communities (through letters to the editor) that: 1) U.S. policies which provide military and economic support for the government of El Salvador must stop because it fuels the bloodshed, 2) a negotiated, not military, solution is required which includes the legitimate representatives of the Salvadoran people.

Guest policy questioned

Maybe you could clear up a little confusion for me. About six weeks ago I invited a friend from home to spend the weekend here at UMass. We set the date for this past weekend because there would be plenty to do. He took time off work and made all the other necessary plans. Then, this Thursday night, I was told that no one was allowed to have guests here this weekend. I was upset, but I called my friend and told him he wouldn't be able to come to UMass. Due to security precautions he would be asked to leave University grounds if he showed up. In addition, all the locks on my dorm were changed except for the one on the main door which, if entered through, provoked a key and ID check. On Sunday, I was unable to visit a friend's room without calling up and having her come down 19 floors to get me. All these things were an inconvenience to say the least, but I realized their purpose and understood.

Today, however, I picked up last Friday's Collegian and saw a little article on the Black Affairs page which said that Third World Southwest students were allowed five guests each this weekend for the Malcolm X picnic. My dorm held a big outdoor barbecue but I wasn't allowed one guest. My question is this. Why? I am against discrimination of all kinds, and this is obvious, blatant discrimination.

Arts programming

An open letter to the University community:

The major objective of the Fine Arts Center Concerts is to serve our community. To do so most effectively, we need suggestions from various constituencies which make up our audience.

We are now attempting to assess the programming preferences, needs and concerns of the student body, faculty, staff and local community. Though there are many circumstances and constraints which impinge on the actual selection of programs and artists — factors like artists' fees and availability, budget constraints, balance and variety — we expect that the information we obtain from you will suggest alternative and fresh directions for future planning and programming.

We at the Fine Arts Center welcome your suggestions at any time, but because we will begin planning for the 1982-83 season by early summer, we request that you forward suggestions for that season to the Fine Arts Center Concert Office in writing by May 30.

Director of Programming

Tax dollars wasted

A vote on appropriations for the MX missile system will be coming up very soon in the House of Representatives. The fiscal year 1982 Department of Defense Authorization Bill, HR 2970, requests $2.9 billion for this outrageous scheme by the air force to shuffle hydrogen bombs along 7,800 miles of roadway in Utah and Nevada.

The MX system can only escalate the arms race. It threatens first-strike capability by the U.S. at the Soviet Union and challenges them to build one too. It will also destroy vast amounts of wilderness land, harm wildlife, deplete scarce water resources, conflict with current land use, and disrupt the economy of the region which depends on the grazing of thousands of animals.

Some $2 billion has already been wasted on the MX. The requested $2.9 billion for further research and development equals slightly more than a year's funding for post-secondary education grants to low-income students or total funds for child nutrition programs.

Opposition to the MX is wide-based and growing. The Mormon Church and the Catholic Church in Utah have both come out against the proposed system. Stansfield Turner, Melvin Laird, and even President Reagan question the basing mode. Let's stop the MX now before more of our tax dollars are wasted.

Write to Rep. Silvio O. Conte at his Washington office and tell him how you feel about paying for the MX missile. Rep. Simons and Dellums will both be introducing amendments which would reduce or cut out this $2.9 appropriation. Ask Conte to support one of these amendments.

Cash stolen from Munchies Store

University of Massachusetts police received a report of a theft of $1,700 cash from the Munchies store in the Hampden Dining Commons at 11 a.m. Sunday, police reported. Entrance was apparently gained to the file cabinet where the cash was stored by prying open a rear door, police said.

In another report received at 1:30 p.m. Sunday, a 1979 Ford Fiesta was reported stolen from lot 50, police said. The car is valued at $5,800, police said.

In another incident, a bicycle was reported stolen from Butterfield residence hall in the Central Residential Area at 8:07 a.m. Saturday, police said. The bicycle is valued at $400, they said.

In another incident, a bicycle valued at $350 was reported stolen from a bicycle rack in front of McNamara residence hall in the Sylvan Residential Area, police said.

correction

A car driven by George W. Leidig, 23, of Cheshire, Connecticut, was struck by a car driven by Ruth M. Carpenter, 79, of Amherst, at the intersection of Triangle and East Pleasant Streets last Thursday.

Last Friday's issue of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian incorrectly reported that Leidig's vehicle had struck Carpenter's.

NCAA says 'no way' to Boyden play

Bischoff said he got in touch with Richard Hunter, a member of the selection committee, Monday morning, and that Hunter said the decision had been made but that Dick Watts was the one person who could turn the decision around.

Garber called Watts, who is the head of the selection committee, with the news that he had secured the stadium at Springfield College Monday morning.

"Watts said that somebody had to be the bad guy and that it would be him. He wouldn't permit an appeal," Bischoff said.

"After we had determined that we could use the SC stadium, I got hold of Watts at 11:15 this (Monday) morning but he said it was too late for them to change their decision," Garber said.

"The tournament committee's decision to designate our site (Boyden) unacceptable on Sunday was not right. If they told us at mid-week we could have done something," Garber said.

The playoff game is an NCAA sanctioned event and therefore there is a $3.50 charge for students. The committee was afraid people would watch the game from the hill, behind the gate without paying, Bischoff said. The NCAA charges the fee because it picks up all expenses for team travel in the tournament.

We felt they (selection committee) didn't know enough about Boyden, and that it would be a financial success as well as an artistic success," Bischoff said.

"We've been told all along that Alumni Stadium would not be available. The physical plant usually gets 15 days to set up for graduation. They simply said there was no way they could wait until Thursday," he said.

Because Alumni Stadium was not available, and because the selection committee would not allow an extension until yesterday morning, the Gorillas are on the astroturf at the University of Virginia instead of playing the first round of the playoff tournament in front of their own New England fans as should have been the case.

Maroons take IM title in OT

Boomerangs win women's softball crown

By STEPHEN FREKER AND DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The championship finals of the intramural softball league were held last night and one-run, closely-fought decisions were on order for all four divisions.

The Maroons, who are now used to this style of play after last Thursday's 6-5 last-inning seat-squirming semifinal win over Romp, put together another display of last-second madness when they came up with three runs in the top of the extra sixth inning to defeat the Ballbusters 10-9 and capture the men's division crown.

Maroon third baseman Russ Reardon and shortstop John Zaffira have put together a pretty effective winning combination. Reardon comes up with the game-winning hit and Zaffira scores the winning run. It happened Thursday night when Reardon singled in Zaffira from third in the last inning, and it was the case last night as well when Reardon poked a hit out to center, scoring Zaffira from second with the deciding run.

It was a good thing that the Maroons had built up the three run cushion in their side of the inning because the Ballbusters were not ready to hand them the crown that easily.

The top third of the Ballbuster batting order, Rich Keefe, Russ Channen and first baseman Alan Oskowsy all reached base with one out in the sixth inning. Ballbuster cleanup batter John Barry cut the Maroons' lead to two, 10-8, when he lifted a sacrifice fly to center, scoring Keefe. Pitcher Chris Roberts belted a hit to left for another Ballbuster RBI. Max Gulman then walked to load the bases again, but Maroons pitcher John Waite was able to get the next batter to bounce to third and end the inning and clinch the championship for the Maroons.

Zaffira scored three of the Maroon runs in the championship game and Keefe came across three times for the runnerup Ballbusters.

In the women's championship game, another close contest, the Boomerangs held off a late Meglomaniac charge to hold on for the 5-4 win and the women's title.

The Boomerangs started off quickly when a Daedra Dudman shot to left field went for a triple and scored the first two runs in the first inning. The new champions added two more in the third inning and tallied the deciding run in the bottom of the fourth after the Meglomaniacs had rallied for four runs and a 4-4 tie in the top of the inning.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Macaques, the defending grad-fac champions, made it two in a row last night when they edged Sports Studies Plus 4-2.

Sports Studies had taken an early 1-0 lead when a Scott Smith sacrifice fly scored pitcher Glenn Wong in the first after Wong had tripled.

The Macaques tied it up in the bottom of the second inning when pitcher Jim Betti hit a sacrifice fly to left field, scoring Rob Lutz.

The two-year champions increased their lead to three when they tallied three runs in the last of the third inning. Bob LeBlanc, John Ringle and John Craig each had a hit and scored a run in the Macaques big inning.

Sports Studies was not able to capitalize in the later innings. The grad-fac runnersup stranded baserunners on second and third in the fourth inning and could only manage to get one run in their half of the fifth when Smith drove in his second run of the game with another sacrifice fly.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The World Games Gang scored all of their runs in the first five innings and held on to defeat the Road Apples 4-3 in the championship game of the co-rec division.

Robin McElfresh scored two runs and had three hits for the World Games Gang.

The Road Apples rallied in the ninth inning (co-rec softball games are ten innings long) and came up with all of their three runs.

For the Road Apples, Cindy Lampke, Julie Joyce and Leona LeBlanc all reached base and scored during this late-inning rally.

The World Games Gang was able to shut out the Apples in the top of the tenth and claim the co-rec crown.

CELTS ARE #1 — An estimated 40,000 fans showed up at City Hall Plaza in Boston yesterday to celebrate the Celtics' 14th NBA championship.

Fans celebrate Celtics' victory

BOSTON — Whooping, changing and wearing a sea of Celtic green, thousands of raucous fans jammed Boston's City Hall Plaza Monday to cheer the National Basketball Association champion Boston Celtics and hear words of inspiration from hero Larry Bird.

"After all the hollering and screaming I look out on the crowd and I see one thing that typifies our season," said the 6- foot-9 forward, a star of the Celtics victory over the Houston Rockets in the championship series.

Then, inspired by a crudely drawn sign held in front of the chanting audience, Bird used a vulgarity in reference to Houston center Moses Malone. During the playoffs, Malone angered the Celtics by dismissing them as an inferior team that he could beat with a "pickup" squad.

Spokesmen for Mayor Kevin H. White, quoting Police Supt. Robert Bradley, estimated the plaza crowd at 50,000 to 60,000 and the crowd along a parade route for the Celtics at more than 1 million. However, given the fairly thin crowds along portions of the parade route, the 1 million figure appeared to be high .

"The Celtics have given Boston a tremendous uplift. There really is a Celtics pride. It is passed down from one generation of players to the next in the same way that pride in our city is passed along from parent to child," White said in a statement released by his office.

The crowd was liberally sprinkled with Celtics green and vendors did a brisk business in Celtics pennants, souvenirs and bumper stickers. It was Boston's first champion sports team since the 1976 Celtics.

John Luikert, an insurance claims analyst, said he thought the rally was a welcome relief to weeks of news about Boston's financial troubles. The city's schools have been on the verge of closing for nearly a month and city officials say Boston could be out of money in two months.

"It's good for the city," Luikert said. "It's refreshing to the Celtics; at least something in this city is run properly."

Monday's celebration began with a parade through downtown and a reception at City Hall, which has recently been the scene of a bitter battle between Mayor Kevin White and the Boston City Council over the city's financial woes.

Bird, chosen by his teammates to speak to the crowd from a balcony overlooking the plaza, offered some observations on the city's plight to the crowd.

Runners place 6th in NEs

By KENNETH ROLT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's track team made their return to the New England championships a fine one, placing sixth with a total of 43 points, at the University of Rhode Island last weekend.

Paul Beaulieu, coming off a week-long illness, placed fourth in the 1500 meter run in 3:52.2. The Granby native had qualified for Sunday's final by running a swift 3:48.7 in the preliminaries. That mark is the second fastest metric mile ever run by anyone wearing a UMass uniform, and is roughly comparable to a 4:06.7 mile. Beaulieu had run a 4:04.8 mile indoors.

In the 110 meter high hurdles, John Wright suffered his first N.E. defeat this year, losing to URI rival Bob Holden. The Ram hurdler edged Wright by a tenth of a second, 14.2 to 14.3.

Frank Prial placed second in the 10,000 meter run, which was held on Saturday. Prial raced two Boston College runners through a large part of the event, with the Eagles' Fernando Braz winning in 30:59, to Prial's 31:01.

Bill Devarney and Chris Omeltchenko joined the UMass runnerup ranks, with Devarney placing second in the 100 meter dash in 10.7 seconds, and Omeltchenko finishing second in the 3000 meter steeplechase with a time of 9:11.

Mark Grasso was the only UMass scorer in the field events, placing fifth in the triple jump with a 44'8½" effort.

Freshman Brian Osborne had a consistent weekend, running 49.6 and 49.3 400 meter dashes in the heats, and 49.4 for fifth place in the final. Osborne also added a 48.9 leg on the 1600 meter relay.

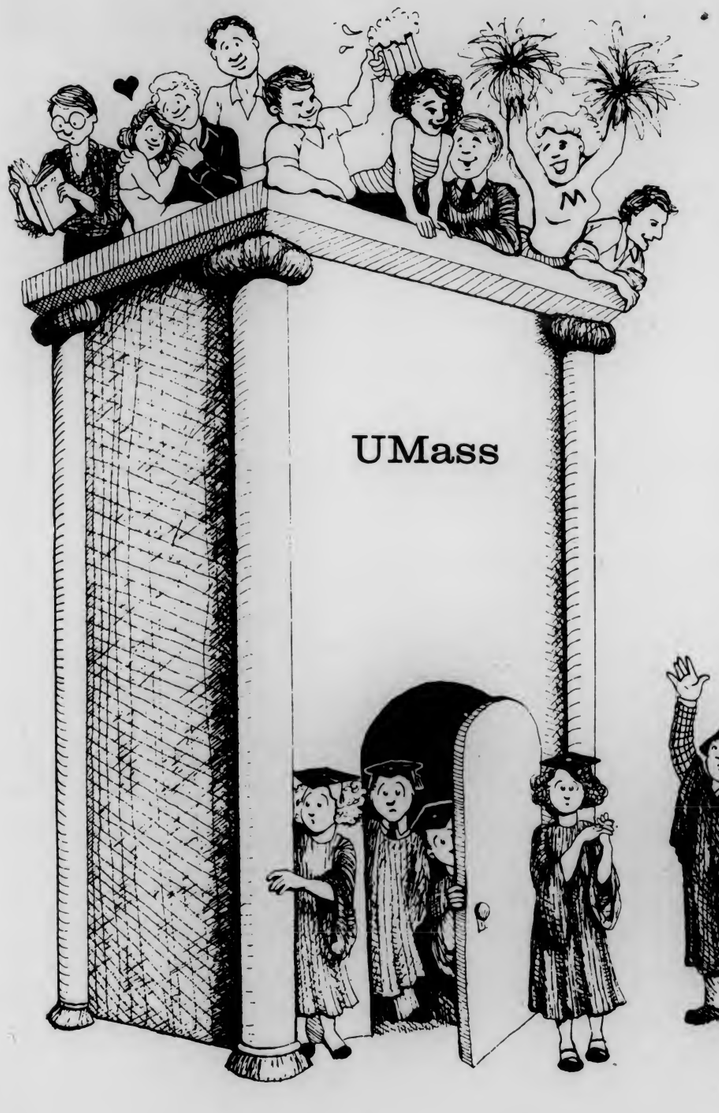
Wright, Devarney, Clay Carlisle, and co-captain Rick Trunfio teamed up for a fifth place in the 400 meter relay, with a 43.3 performance.

Stephen Hyder had his best shot put series ever, with three tosses over 50 feet and Greg Mader had a personal best in the decathlon, 6030 points. Co-captain Bob Pearson posted his seasonal best of 49.6 for the 400 meter event. Rick Cady ran a 49.7 in the open one lap, and 49.2 on the relay.

Five members of the men's team will compete in the ICAA championships next weekend: Bill Devarney in the 100 meter dash, John Wright in the 110 high hurdles, Frank Prial in the 10,000 meter run, Paul Beaulieu in the 1500 and Chris Omeltchenko in the 3000 meter steeplechase.

Graduation and Honors

The Class of 1981:



Expectations were high in 1977

In the summer of 1977 only 5 percent of the incoming freshman surveyed said they thought they would need extra time to complete their degrees, yet only about 2,807 of those 4,100 are on the preliminary graduation list for May 1981. Representatives in the Registrars office say this is typical of the UMass student, who is either taking time off, is taking more time, has transfered or dropped out. UMass, in fact, is close to the national average of 60 percent retention of matriculating students.

About half of the entering freshman thought they would have a B average or better. On the whole, according to this report by the American Council on Education, freshman that year were less optimistic about what might occur during their college years than their counterparts nationally.

The students who will don caps and gowns at the end of this month were also more liberal than the national average, although half of them labled themselves as "middle of the road." More than 65 percent agreed that couples should live together before they get married, marijuana should be legalized, national health care should be instituted, abortion should remain legal and wealthy people should pay a larger share of taxes. Another 68 percent also said that sex between individuals who like each other is acceptable, even though they've known each other a short time; women were less inclined to support this statement than men.

About 60 percent of the students who came to the University named it as their first choice, and 80 percent said they are attending college to learn more about things that interest them. The study noted that the students entering in 1977 shifted from the 1972 description of "liberal" to more moderate; their priorities shifted as well, from the philisophical and idealistic concerns of the "do your own thing" generation, to the economic and professional goals of the post-Watergate "me generation."

The data are not in on whether UMass lived up to their expectations. Certainly they grew in intellect. Hopefully they will stand in the stadium more mature, more wordly and better for having lived and learned about life during their college years.

ACADEMIC HONORS AND DISTINCTION 1980-1981

". . .We have found that superior academic performance is the product of many factors, such as the talent and motivation students have received through their parents. Academically, it comes from a shared effort on the part of the student and an outstanding faculty. Providing that opportunity for personal achievement is the University's central mission. . ."

— Chancellor Koffler

HONOR SOCIETIES

Because there are nearly 30 active Honor Societies at the University, only those which are not restricted to majors, schools, or colleges, are listed.

Phi Beta Kappa

Founded at the College of William and Mary at Williamsburg, Virginia, December 5, 1776. It is the oldest honor society in the country.
Publications: The Key Reporter, The American Scholar
Purpose: To honor undergraduate students of academic achievement in the liberal arts. The united chapters have established broad criteria both for defining a liberal education and for judging academic excellence thereon.
Eligibility: Candidates are nominated by the chapter's committee on members on the basis of their academic records as shown by their transcripts, and are elected by vote of the chapter membership. Academic excellence is expressed in the cumulative grade point average. This must be sufficient to place the candidate in the top 10 per cent of liberal arts graduating students. To be considered for nomination, students must achieve a grade point average which is .3 over 3.5 in addition students must complete a minimum of 12 credits in each of the 3 faculties of Arts and Sciences, and a total of 90 libera arts credits. Juniors with a minimum grade point average of 3.8 may be considered.
Major Activities: Lectures by a visiting scholar in residence and a monthly lecture series.

MORTAR BOARD MEMBERS 1981

(Student Leadership and Service - Men and Women)
Admitted to ACHS 1937

Founded by The Ohio State University, Swarthmore College, University of Michigan, and Cornell University, February 16,1918.
Number of Active Chapters: 182
Total Membership: 87,000
Publication: Motar Board Forum

Purpose: To facilitate cooperation among Senior Honors Societies, to contribute to the self-awareness of our members, to promote equal opportunities among all peoples. to emphasize the advancement of the status of women, to support the ideals of the university, to advance a spirit of scholarship, to recognize and encourage leadership, to provide service and to establish the opportunity for a meaningful exchange of ideas as individuals and as a group.

Eligibility: Membership is based on service, scholarship, and leadership. members must be at least in their junior year or in the equivalent status. No chapter may elect fewer than five or more than 35 members. All members must be elected with a minimum B average and must meet predetermined local minimum scholastic requirements.

The Collegian wishes the Class of 1981 the best of luck.

Why are all the Professors in ON THE OTHER HAND so good? And why aren't all of them in the book?

*Until now only about 45% of your professors have released their evaluations to the Course and Teacher Evaluation Project.

*But students choosing course should be able to count on ON THE OTHER HAND for a complete guide to courses and instructors.

So now, we - the students - will do it ourselves!

*We've appreciated the cooperation of the faculty members who did release but we cannot go on publishing an incomplete evaluation guide so we are asking you to do your part.

All Undergraduates will be getting an evaluation packet from the CATE Project. Please fill out the evaluation for ALL your professors and return them to us immediately.

The CATE Project is sponsored by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate, 420 Student Union, 545-0341.

Good Luck to Class of 1981 Thanks for your patronage

"...The Dean's List recognizes genuine academic distinction, and is an honor reserved for only those students who attain a minimum grade point average of 3.5 for the semester. Only about 15% of our students meet this standard..."

Graduation is a mixed blessing. It's the culmination of four wonderful years, but it is also the time to say goodbye (I hope to see you again) to all the beautiful, special people along the way. It's sad to think I'll never see most of you again, so instead I cling to the pieces of you I carry with me. Some of you I've just met and some go back many years. Each of you has added to my life and made it a very happy one. I especially want to give my love to those friends at the Collegian and at Legal services with whom I've shared so much. New faces will appear and new friendships will form but I'll never forget you all and I'll never forget UMass. A part of my heart will always be here in the Valley. I wish all of you luck, health, love, peace and happiness.- - Amira

Patty Stirling - You were the first person I ever met at UMass and we've travelled through a great deal together, sharing many wonderful times. Though nearly 3,000 miles will separate us, it can't possibly erase the memories and the friendship between us. I hope L.A. is good to you because i love you very much! Amira

Senate Passes $1.5 M. Budget

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate discussed last night and voted early this morning to accept the fiscal year 1982 budget act, allocating almost $1.5 million.

The Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students (CCEBS) and the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), initially scheduled for no funding, both received an SATF budget.

CCEBS will receive a $4,000 budget, down from $17,750 this year, and BCP will receive a $7,500 budget, down from $10,556 this year. The decision to fund the two programs followed a budget committee report that the university administration has agreed to fund CCEBS with $15,500 in addition to the annual university allocation.

The Recognized Student Organization (RSO) office is budgeted for $305,140, an approximate $28,000 increase from last year. Barrington Henry, co-chairman of the undergraduate student senate budget committee, said the budget is lower than that requested by Dennis Madson, Vice Chancellor of student affairs, who requested $390,674 for the RSO office.

Ed Lee, senate speaker, defended the decision to forego Madson's recommendation, saying the vice chancellor is in violation of trustee policy by not consulting student leaders in determining the RSO budget.

Members from Area Governments present at the meeting protested their proposed allocation, encompassing residential area governments, greek areas, and the commuter collective. Henry said the $140,238 budgeted, down from $155,000 this year, "reflects the lower projected student enrollment."

In response to comments on the number of students to be affected by the cut, Segun Eubanks, co-chairman of the budget committee, said he realized area governments serve more people than "special interest groups," but "we had to make the cuts somewhere."

Bruce Levy, former Southwest Assembly president said, "to cut back amounts to students for basic services...I think it is a crime."

Asked if an organization of such importance as area government does not deserve level funding, Lee said, "Evidently that is what it says in the budget."

Community Day seen as financial loss

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

Although the financial balance sheet is still out on Sunday's Community Day concert, the Union Program Council (UPC) and University of Massachusetts officials said they probably lost money on the event but do not yet know how much.

"Clearly they didn't bring in the expected revenue because they didn't sell enough tickets to five-college students," said Dennis Madson, vice chancellor of student affairs.

"It appears that we lost some money, but we don't know how much yet," said Frank Gironda, talent coordinator for the concert.

Gironda previously said the UPC hoped to raise $66,000 selling 6,000 alumni tickets. Only about 380 alumni tickets were sold.

Madson said as a result, more money than expected will have to be taken from the SATF to make the budget.

Gironda said, "There's no way we know what figure we're talking about yet."

"We're under in terms of our expenses," Gironda said, adding that they did not make as much as they thought they would.

Gironda attributed the loss of income to several factors including a lack of Five-College students at the concert. Two of the four colleges UPC planned to use as a market were out of school and two others were starting finals, he said.

About 6,500 students and alumni attended the concert which featured Bonnie Raitt, B.B. King, the John Hall Band, and NRBQ.

Mayor White visits, speaks on battle with City Council

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

The major stumbling block in negotiations over a financial bail-out plan for Boston is a political power struggle between Mayor Kevin White and the City Council, White said during an unannounced visit to campus yesterday.

"The mayor of Boston's position is a very strong position. The councils by law are weak. In 13 years, all the council could do is chafe. By a court decision, the city had to go through their pass and it's a very narrow pass. The city had to borrow $90 million for the first time in its history. They hold the key to the pass," White said.

White came to campus yesterday to speak to an urban history class and lunch with campus administrators in the Campus Center.

His daughter Beth attends the University.

White said it was the only time a mayor has had to go through the city on such matters. The council is reacting to this by saying, "let's take some of his power away," White said.

White said he would "fight to the death" with the City Council over Boston's finances. "That's my nature but I hate to wreck a town over it," he said.

Knapp criticizes '82 budget for UM tri-campus system

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp yesterday released a statement criticizing the House Ways and Means Committee 1982 budget recommendations for the University's tri-campus system.

On Monday, the committee released its recommendations suggesting that $128,442,296 be allocated to the UMass Amherst, Boston and Worcester campuses. $87.6 million is earmarked for the Amherst campus.

According to Knapp's letter, the House's recommendation represents an increase of about 1 percent over last year's budget. An additional $5.4 million is needed "to maintain our current programs," Knapp stated.

The suggested budget provides an $806,605 increase for UMass-Amherst and a $154,540 increase for the Boston campus. But, according to Knapp, the UMass-Worcester medical school will suffer "drastic cutbacks" under the recommended budget. That campus may receive a $136,000 cut from last year and, according to Knapp, an additional $1 million is needed to maintain the family practice residency program at that school.

"This situation will jeopardize the Medical Center's ability to continue a nationally-recognized program in family medicine as well as cripple the on-going developement of many teaching and service programs which have had measurable positive effects on the well-being of citizens in central and western Massachusetts," Knapp said in his statement.

Knapp also said that recent tuition increases, which will generate an additional $5 million in revenue should come back to the University.

"We believe that this 'new tax' should be returned to them (the students) in the form of the University budget so that we can continue to provide the educational, research and public service programs that they and the citizens of Massachusetts have come to expect and which they deserve," he said.

Knapp also asked all members of the university commnity to help in attempting to secure additional funding. Ken Moore, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Public Policy Committee, said the UMass-Amherst Student Government Association, the Alumni Association and the administration were planning to send letters to parents and alumni asking them to lobby legislators for the additional funding.

House panel cuts King's prison plan

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The King administration's prison expansion plans have been dealt a blow by the House Ways and Means Committee, which dropped $1.5 million for a new prison in Bourne from it's fiscal 1982 state budget recommendations.

The administration wants to convert unused buildings at the phased down Otis Air Force Base into a medium-security prison with a 160-man capacity — part of an effort to alleviate prison overcrowding.

The state owns the land, which it leases to the federal government. Money sought in Gov. Edward J. King's budget proposals for the fiscal year beginning July 1 would be used to renovate the buildings and install security fences.

The proposal generated a storm of protest in the community. House Ways and Means Chairman Michael C. Creedon didn't allude to this when asked about the Otis prison at a news conference called to release his version of the budget Monday.

He said Otis was "not a suitable site," and the buildings are in "decrepit condition."

King has focused much attention on crime, proposing measures to incarcerate more of those convicted and keep inmates in prison longer.

At the same time, according to administration figures, the state's prison system already is 18 percent over maximum capacity and 28 percent over the desireable capacity. The Correction Department believes prisons full to the brim are dangerous, and they should be kept 90 percent full.

At present, according to an aide to Human Services Secretary Charles F. Mahoney, prisoners are "double bunked" at the Concord prison and some inmates have their beds in laundry facilities elsewhere.

"The contradiction of people wanting increased incarceration but not wanting prisons anywhere near their community is becoming increasingly frustrating," said John Gillespie, spokesman for the secretariat.

Rome—This is the first picture of Pope John Paul II after last Wednesday's shooting. John Paul was listed in vastly improved condition yesterday, sipping tea for breakfast, doing light physical exercises and resuming Vatican business for the first time since a terrorist shot and wounded him. Meanwhile, the 23-year-old suspect was trying to confuse his interrogators by bragging that he made plans to kill Queen Elizabeth II and other world dignitaries.

Judiciary committee approves balancing of budget

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate Judiciary Committee, giving a big boost to a goal long held by conservatives, voted 11-5 yesterday to approve a proposed constitutional amendment for a balanced federal budget.

The only exception would be in time of war or when a threefifths majority in both houses of Congress vote for deficit spending.

"The people of the country want it," said Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., who started suggesting such an amendment when Dwight D. Eisenhower was president.

"I believe we have a fine chance to get it through the Congress this year."

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said, "This is not only economically sound, but also constitutionally sound."

Asked about Reagan administration opposition to the amendment, Hatch said he believes the president will change his mind once Congress shows its determination to approve the amendment.

Budet director David Stockman has said the administration would prefer to balance the budget through alreadyexisting congressional avenues than be locked in by the Constitution.

Thurmond and others blame excessive federal spending and deficits for the country's rate of inflation. They say Congress will discipline itself and match federal spending with the rate of federal taxes only if balanced budgets are required by the Constitution.

Opponents say there is no proof a balanced budget would cure inflation and argue that abruptly imposed limits on federal spending in fact would do the economy more harm than good.

If approved by Congress, the proposed amendment would take effect two years after being ratified by three-fourths of the 50 states.

State college union satisfied with pay agreement

BOSTON — Blue-collar workers at Massachusetts state colleges, satisfied with a promise that they will get retroactive pay, say they will probably abandon their threat to strike, a spokesman said yesterday.

John Harvey, a union spokesman, said state Comptroller Robert Sheehan promised the workers yesterday that they will get 60 percent of their retroactive pay this week. The rest of the money will be given to them by June 3.

U.S. diplomat continues talks between Syria and Israel

JERUSALEM — U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib met with the leaders of Syria and Israel, but his effort to avert a showdown over Syria's missiles in Lebanon was clouded by signs of Israeli impatience and Syrian charges he was covering for an impending Israeli attack.

Habib flew to Israel from Damascus, where he spent 2½ hours with Syrian President Hafez Assad, telling reporter's afterward, "All I can say is that the diplomatic efforts will continue."

School lunch programs face closing if federal support cut

WASHINGTON — An Agriculture Department official conceded yesterday that proposed federal cuts in school nutrition programs could force some districts to close their lunchrooms and stop providing free meals for poor children.

G. William Hoagland, administrator of the department's food and nutrition service, told a House committee "there is a risk" of some schools dropping their school lunch programs if federal support is reduced.

Co-ed bathroom conversion to be completed by next semester

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

Conversion of coeducational bathrooms into single sex bathrooms will be completed by the beginning of school next semester said Marjorie Lenn, the director of residential life at the University of Massachusetts.

"Every dorm has now given me a summary of what bathrooms will be male and female," said Lenn.

The conversion of the bathrooms has been a controversial issue because many students advocate coeducational bathrooms as a part of coeducational life. A petition was signed by 1800 students in February asking campus administrators to keep some dormitory bathrooms coed.

Lenn said she got a copy of the petition, but the students' requests were not met. In February she sent a memo to dormitory staff members stating that the change was brought on by increasing concern among parents and students disturbed by coed bathrooms. The conversion is an attempt to comply with the Massachusetts State Plumbing Code which requires seperate toilet facilities for men and women according to Lenn.

"I think some students were under the impression that by making bathrooms single sex, someone wanted to make the dorms single sex. That was not the case. You can have coed dorms without the coed bathrooms," Lenn said.

She also said it wasn't fair that "students who didn't want coed bathrooms should live in single sex dorms."

Lenn said she did not anticipate any problems in enforcing the single sex bathrooms next fall.

"I hope not. First year students will be coming with the assumption that they are not coed...I hope the upper-class students will be sensitive to the needs of new students," she said.

Students can find out their bathroom designation by asking the professional staff members in their dormitory, she said.

Student discusses politics at the Students for a Military and Nuclear Superiority table in the Campus Center Concourse yesterday.

New campus group sparks controversy

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The fires of controversy burned brightly on the floor of the Campus Center as the Students for Military and Nuclear Superiority made their first appearance.

The group formed to inform students at the University of Massachusetts of their view that the Soviet Union poses a threat to the United States. That is an oppinion that has long been absent at the University, said Michael Brady, chairman of the board for SMNS.

"The United States must stop the spread of the left wing view throughout the western hemisphere using economic and military aid," Brady said.

The group supported the suspension of civil and human rights if such suspension was necessary to stop the spread of international communism, Brady said.

Robert LaRosa, secretary for SMNS, said the United States should have supported the Shah of Iran more visibly during the Iranian Revolution and have never let the situation "get out of hand."

Opinions of the crowd varied.

Elly Newcomb of Amherst said the group's slogan of "peace through superior" fire power was ridiculous.

"You can never sell peace through wars and weapons," Newcomb said.

Others did not share her view. "If you have superiority over another country there will be nothing they can do to you. It is a definite possibility." Kevin Boggs of Sunderland said.

Sophomore Shelly Duarte, a sophomore from Emerson, said the group was not making sense.

"The United States should look into its own problems before it takes on those of the rest of the world." Duarte said.

SMNS fully supports President Reagan's economic policies, and sees them as a way of turning the economy around, LaRosa said.

"Reagan will put the United States back into the number one position in the world. He will be very good for the country," LaRosa said.

The group thinks the day was a success and that many people spoke out today who would not have expressed their views before without a group like ours, LaRosa said.

T.A.s fear lay-offs due to budget cutbacks

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Teaching Assistants for the University of Massachusetts rhetoric department expressed concern yesterday over a possible lay-off of an estimated 75 percent of T.A.s within the department, due to the proposed state-wide budget cuts at all state universities and colleges.

Evline Woestelandt, a T.A. in the UMass French department, claimed that a memo sent to all departments in the Humanities and Fine Arts by the dean of the English department, reportedly will cause the cut backs effective this fall.

The 25 percent of the retained rhetoric teaching positions, Woestelandt said, would be filled only by faculty and T.A.s in the English department. She said faculty who do not carry full-course loads next semester will likely take over many of the vacant spots.

English department Dean, Jeramiah Allen, although not denying there would be some kind of set-back to the program, disagreed with the T.A.s assessment of the projected lay-offs.

"We're in a difficult fiscal situation, but their projections are entirely erroneous. All I sent was a preliminary notice making the department chairs aware of our budget situation, and what appointments they could make," he said.

Woestelandt, anticipating the lay-offs, said the Rhetoric program and teaching assistants will obviously be affected negatively.

"Many individual T.A.s will be in difficult positions over the summer on whether to come back. As far as the rhetoric program goes, some courses will not be able to be offered next semester," she said.

Currently, there are an estimated 95-96 Teaching Assistants in the Rhetoric program.

Student on roof observes life and death

By DEBBIE SPARKS
Collegian Staff

For those who live on Main Street in Amherst, Larry Conn, 23, a senior at University of Massachusetts, is a familiar sight to passerbyers. If the sun is out, and the temperature is right, Conn who lives above Landry's Market and next to Dorsey Memorials is out on his roof accompanied by a glass of beer and entertained by what the neighbors have fondly referred to as "good tunes."

Sitting in an overstuffed afghan covered chair with a pile of books at his side he faces the sun and the front lawn of Dorsey Memorials which is covered with a slew of tombstones to please even the pickiest customers.

Conn said his apartment roof is the ideal place to reside.

"There's music," (which is piped out from his livingroom window), "and there's lots of sun. I enjoy pretending to read Shakespeare and if I ever want anything all I have to do is walk downstairs to Landry's," he said.

Besides being able to keep an active watch on what is happening at his end of Main Street, Conn is often an observer of the many customers who shop next door for tombstones.

"Every Saturday and Sunday between 12 p.m. and 3 p.m. are the peak hours. At least a dozen parties show up," he said.

"There are two types of customers. There are those who deliberate for hours, then there are those people who look real quick, pick one out, and that's it," he said.

To illustrate his story, Conn stands on the edge of his roof to show which tombstones are the biggest sellers and those which are dragging in sales.

"That's my favorite one," Conn said as he points to one of the tombstones in the back row of the yard covered with approximately 50 markers. "And the one which seems to be the biggest seller is the plain one with the flowers around the edge. It has a little trim to give it some character but it is still understated," he said.

A MATTER OF LIFE AND DEATH—Larry Conn, a senior at UMass soaks in the warm spring day atop his infamous roof on Main Street in Amherst. Conn enjoys many parties on his spacious roof situated above the "showroom" of Dorsey memorials, the tombstone store.

"The real religious ones don't seem to go much," he said as he contemplated for a moment, "People seem to go for the plainer ones."

Then Conn pointed to the mystery tombstone.

"I can't figure that one out," he said. "It's been facing backwards ever since I've lived here."

Conn with his quick smile and occasional interuptions to run in the house to flip the record talked about the irony of living next to a tombstone store.

"Sometimes it's hard to sit here and not laugh. It seems kind of nutty. I think I am the opposite of death sitting up here with music and sun just enjoying life," he said.

"One time a couple started sniffing and stuff, and arguing about what type of tombstone the deceased would like. Sometimes it's hard figuring people out," he said.

Back in his chair again Conn becomes philosophical.

"I guess there are two businesses which will always do well," he said. "Liquor and things related to death."

COMMENCEMENT 1981
10:00 am, Saturday, May 30
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

INSTRUCTIONS FOR PARTICIPANTS

All Candidates
There will be no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Alumni Stadium no later than 9 am graduation morning, May 30, 1981. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to be assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each undergraduate/graduate student will receive a packet of five formal invitations.

Faculty and Parents
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTHWEST end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities/Information Center and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school or college.

Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends may wish to arrive early to ensure good seating. Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways.

Caps and Gowns
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be distributed from the Textbook Annex in the Physical Plant Building beginning April 27. There is no charge to degree candidates (Associate's, Bachelor's, Master's, Doctoral) for the cap, gown, tassel, and invitations. Please bring your ID. You must know what degree you are receiving and from which department.

Distribution Hours — April 27 - May 29, 10 am-4 pm, regular business days at the Textbook Annex. May 30 (Commencement Day), 8 am at the stadium (southwest corner).

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the Friday night before Commencement. A limited number of rooms in University housing will be available for relatives and other guests the night of May 29. Please contact the University Summer Conference Office, 918 Campus Center, 545-2591, by May 9, 1981.

Campus Center
Graduation Dinner. Top of the Campus Restaurant; reservations needed.
Graduation Brunch, Campus Center Room 1009; reservations suggested.
Coffee Shop, open 8 am - 4 pm.

Jennifer Segre, a senior hotel-restaurant major advises to set priorities when studying for final exams.

The final exam is coming...filled with hair pulling multiple choice questions, stomach turning essay questions, and nail biting equations. Is it a big attraction...you betcha, why just the mention of the exam has sent students scattering into libraries reaching for books like never before. Yesterday 2,800 students served time in Goodell and 3,500 more served time in the tower. No one was talking. The students are preparing for this event, arming themselves with notes, outside reading, research study, calculators, and No. 2 pencils. The final exam is of course a tradition at U'Mass. If held to their basic function as a tool most exams would be cumulative. The results, would tell the U'Mass faculty to what degree it was achieving the objectives that it expected for the kind of students that it has, the kind of programs that it plans for them and the procedures of instruction and guidance that it employed. Most important, the exam can help the individual student to a better realization of his or her educational meaning and values.

For most students, taking the final exam will be a chance to improve their current grades and increase their overall cumulative average, but for others its a do or die situation, pass the exam or...you know. The final exam brings a certain amount of anxiety to any student. The student goes on marathon studying sprees. You've heard the phase "I'm going to study all night if I have to," and the late night typist...3 a.m. in the morning (klick, klack, cling). Students are reading in one night books they bought 15 weeks ago. Cram, cram, cram, everyone is doing it. To avoid a lot of cramming you should schedule the activities you wish to accomplish. Don't wait for a suitable mood before studying. Collect all necessary material before beginning to study. Eliminate distractions. Eliminate from your vision any Natale Cole or Julius Erving posters and find a corner, face the wall, or arrange with your fellow students to set up a few dorm rules to maintain quiet during certain periods restricted for studying.

From Soweto to Atlanta

America is a funny place to live. Andrew Young became U.N. ambassador and we were all in awe. Must really be the land of equality. Andy went to Africa and people listened. America suddenly found itself more welcome all over the African continent. People forget so easily. People forget too easily.

Commentary.

Then Andy met with the PLO. It wasn't his first transgression, though. The official press had noticed every time Andy sneezed. Calls for his resignation had become a regular feature on the evening news. Reality crept back into African-American homes like a fox creeping into the hen house. When Andy met with the PLO all hell broke loose. Andy was called on the carpet. The moral moronity of Jesse Helms and Ronnie Reagan was humming. Andy resigned. Black leaders expressed disillusionment. It wasn't the first time.

Now the moral majority is mainstream. Reagan is still acting but now his stage is the White House. Fighting for freedom is communism and freedom fighters are terrorists. 1984 is less than three years away.

China invades Vietnam

(From Vietnam)—Vietnam has accused China of an unprovoked attack upon Vietnamese and Laotian villages. Vietnam has denounced China for aggression against its neighbors and a foreign policy based on the narrow interests of China rather than on the interests of world peace and cooperation that affects all peoles.

Guinea

(From Guinea)—Nigerian President Shegu Shagari began a four day visit to Conakry, the capital of Guinea, this weekend for top level discussions with Guinea's president, Sekou Toure. The two leaders issued a joint declaration denouncing racism and the western nations's continued support for the racialist and terrorist policies of South Africa. In denouncing the western veto of sanctions against South Africa for its illegal occupation of Namibia the two leaders called for the U.N. general assembly to take immediate measures to free the people of Namibia.

South Africa

(From South Africa)—An official of the South African government described the front-line states as hypocritical because while they have called for sanctions against South Africa they have been increasing trade with it. "These nations are dependent upon South Africa," the official said.

Zimbabwe

(From Zimbabwe)—Prime Minister Robert Gabriel Mugabe of Zimbabwe is in China this week for talks with the top leadership of that nation. Zimbabwe and China have reasserted their friendship in a joint message. China was the main nation supporting the guerilla forces under Mugabe's command prior to the negotiated peace in Zimbabwe.

Ethiopia

Anorexia nervosa more prevalent than realized

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts instructor who has extensively researched anorexia nervosa, a psychological disease mostly affecting women, says ten percent of her students suffer from the disorder, which consists of the self-deprivation of food intake.

Ellen LaFleche, who teaches a course called Starving and Stuffing: the Politics of Women and Food, said while no formal studies have been made, the disease is more prevalent at UMass than most people realize.

In independent studies done by her students, 90 percent of 100 women surveyed were found to be on diets. In one study of 50 women surveyed, none were satisfied with their present appearance. And in another, where women were asked if they prefer a 4.0 cum or their ideal weight, about half of the women chose their ideal weight. LaFleche said, among women there is "a tremendous amount of concern and energy spent consumed with dieting."

It is estimated that one in every 200 women suffer from a form of anorexia nervosa, said graduate student Allison Gartner, whose Master's thesis concerns anorexia. Gartner said the rate may be a lot higher because more women have severe eating disorders, but exist in a borderline state never identifying themselves as anorexic. The disease has a fatality rate of about seven to 15 percent, LaFleche said.

According to LaFleche, who has been involved in teaching women's health at UMass residential colleges for the past four and a half years, anorexia mainly affects middle and upper class women of junior high school age and again in their first year of college. "It seems to happen at transition periods," LaFleche said.

Symptons of anorexia include lack of menstrual period, sudden weight loss, strange eating habits (eating only one food or counting out food eaten), social withdrawal and depression. LaFleche said anorexics have a "desire to burn off calories, many also suffer from hyperactivity and sleep only a few hours a night."

"Women see anorexia nervosa as an appropriate way to rebel," LaFleche said. "Females with anorexia haven't learned to be assertive, it's the only way they how to articulate."

Yesterday, Gregg Mekal, a sophomore from John Adams, attacked a piece of chicken at the D.C. Bar-B-Q in the Southwest soccer field.

LaFleche said feminism has helped anorexics, many of whom are "attracted by the idea of being assertive women," by providing feminist analysts, counseling and support groups. She said the individual must find the treatment which is right for her, and that treatment should include pediatricians, psychologists, nurses, nutritionists and sociologists.

Unlike other psychological afflictions, anorexics can't afford to go through long period of unproductive therapy, LaFleche said. Though many die from basic starvation, those who go through periods of starving and gorging die as a result of fluid imbalance.

LaFleche said there are other disorders relative to anorexia, which cut accross all class lines, such as bulimarexia which involves periods of gorging and binging, followed by periods of starving, induced vomiting and laxative abuse.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Approach to foreign policy

Understanding foreign policy is not a difficult thing—its purpose is merely to secure our national interests. Of course, defining our national interests is not an easy task. For now, suffice it to say that our two basic national interests are to secure our country from foreign invasion and to ensure our economic well-being.

The only thing that remains to be done, then, in order to carry out an appropriate foreign policy is to determine how to best go about securing our national interests. This, however, is the most difficult task of all, and it is this problem which is the source of most of the hot debates in foreign policy circles. How one answers this problem depends upon what one perceives to be the chief threat to our interests and how one believes that threat can best be attacked.

President Reagan seems to believe that the biggest threat America faces is communism. His fear of communism is deep, and sometimes seems to border on paranoia. In fact, it's probably not an exaggeration to say that he almost believes the only national security problems the U.S. faces comes from communism. He perceives the world to be divided into communist and non-communist parts; a "we-and-they" mentality that leaves no middle ground, and which says that the only thing "we" have to worry about is the "they" who want to conquer the world.

The real problem with Reagan's perceptions is that he extends them to the problems of the developing countries where they have no basis in reality. Most developing countries have governments which are relatively unstable because the countries are just that—developing. Like our own country in its early years, these countries need time to get their economic and political legs planted firmly beneath them. The turmoil they suffer is not the result of some suppressive communist force exerting its muscle, but is the result of a people struggling to determine what they want in a world that believes such things should already have been decided.

Reagan, however, does not seem to understand this. He seems to have forgotten that our own country was founded by revolutionaries who believed that the existing government was oppressive and fought to overthrow it. He seems to have forgotten that it was not on the hearts of Stalin and Lenin, but on the hearts of our forefathers and on the pages of our Declaration of Independence that these words were written:

"That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new Government, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness."

What Reagan does believe that if the existence of a government friendly to the U.S. is threatened, then the threat must come from communism and must, therefore, be squashed. He believes this because of the bi-polar way he views the world. The net result of this is that any group which seeks to change a government in a country friendly to the U.S. is militarily suppressed with our help regardless of the righteousness of the proposed changes. To change a non-communist government, in Reagan's eyes, is to be communist.

The tragedy of Reagan's approach is two-fold. First, it ignores the time-honored American belief in allowing a people to choose and change its government. Second, it does not best ensure our long term national interests.

History has shown that, in time, the people of a country are always successful in throwing off the chains of suppression that seek to bind them. And when the people under the foreign governments we support cast aside their oppressive yokes, we shall not gain allies admiring us as defenders of freedom, but we shall inherit enemies recognizing us as guardians of injustice.

Confronting the issues

I was glad to see that the article about the weekend gang rape received front page coverage in Monday's Collegian.

It's important that all members of the UMass community be aware of the incidences of rape on this campus and that both men and women begin to work on confronting issues of sexual assault and violence against women.

In living here for five years, I've seen the incidences of rape continue to rise despite the educational efforts of the Everywomen's Center and various centers on campus.

I would like to to encourage people to educate themselves about this issue and contact the Everywomen's Center for more information.

Finally, I applaud the Collegian for participating in ongoing efforts to educate this community.

Women's lacrosse

Having recently finished our women's lacrosse season with a ranking of 6th in the nation, I am prompted to write to the Collegian. Since there was evidently no initiative on your staff's part to bring this news to the UMass community, I have decided to take it upon myself.

In my opinion and that of all female athletes at UMass, the coverage of women's sports in the Collegian is deplorable, to say the least. I find it incredible that you manage to have pre-game stories, post-game coverage and articles for the men, while the women's teams, if they're lucky, will sometimes only see a paragraph.

For the past three years, the women's lacrosse team has finished nationally 2nd, 4th, and 6th respectively. Granted the men are having a great season in lacrosse, but should this take away from the women's coverage?

Many people have boasted about the supportive fans at UMass this past spring. If I were a male athlete I'm sure I would too, but I've never been able to relate to this. I find it sadly amusing that I can go from our game at NOPE where there were probably 30 fans (on a good day), to Boyden to se 5,000 spectators at a men's lacrosse game.

I hope you'll take this letter to heart, because although it's too late this year, you can do nothing but improve the situation in years to come.

Making Rudy proud

Yesterday's sensationalistic front page story in the Collegian concerning CARP follows in the sacred traditions of yellow journalism that would make even Rupert Murdock proud.

CARP was suspended for one week (which was sensationalisticly expressed as "until the end of the year" since there is only one week left in the school year), for the heinous crime of asking for one 50 donation for a 16 page booklet. This was the first and only time it happened this year. The activity was immediately and politely stopped upon request.

It is interesting that while the Board of Governors is so enthusiastic to overreact at even the smallest infraction by a member of CARP, it has demonstrated little interest in investigating physcial attacks against members of CARP by individuals who have ripped up our literature, stolen our stacks of newspapers and posted anonymous anti-CARP literature in the Campus Center.

Two weeks ago the Collegian saw fit to stick a story about the gang rape of a UMass student on page five, whereas stories about anti-CARP activities on campus continually rate page one. The Collegian has an unusual sense of priorities. With pressure and expressions of outrage from women students on campus the Collegian's rape stories are also now on page one, but insensitivity and prejudice nevertheless remain on its pages.

I quote from the April 29, 1980 issue of the Yale Magazine's feature story about CARP's activities at Yale: "(CARP)...is not by any means flawless, but it deserves investigation. It is too hypocritically suspected, too hastily dismissed and too ignorantly condemned."

It's easy to jump on bandwagons, but the real journalist tries to do more. Are there any journalists on the Collegian?

Tenure delayed

Graduate art history students are deeply concerned about the Provost's delayed delivery of the tenure decision for Professor Anne Mochon. Professor Mochon has the support of the department faculty and students. She is an excellent scholar and teacher and offers courses which other faculty members are not prepared to teach.

We have recently lost an invaluable women faculty member and the department cannot afford to lose another. Graduate students have been attracted to the program because of the current faculty, their scholarly reputations and the diversity of course selections. It is discouraging to graduate students that tenure decisions are not based on the qualified judgement of other faculty members within the department, but finally rest with the decision of one individual—the Provost.

The Provost has taken an unusually long time to announce his decision to the department and we suspect that he is stalling until the many students who support her have left UMass for the summer.

Male discrimination

We feel it is our duty as concerned male students to express our deep concern over remarks made by Bonnie Raitt on Community Day.

Raitt made frequent references to men as "pretty boys." She then proceeded to point and choose from her "harem" as if men were meat to be thrown upon her sexual hibachi. One of her more offensive displays was made when she beckoned the audience to "stick around," promising to expose herself for the second encore. Her warped sexual ideals were revealed when she insistantly referred to men as "playthings," as disposable gigolos to satisfy her sexual needs.

To top it all off, not only were five-college students exposed to her brash and sexist innuendos, but the audience also included young, impressionable children who were vulnerable to Raitt's deviant, feminist ideology.

We are deeply disturbed by Raitt's behavior, as it was not in keeping with the mood and spirit of this event. On behalf of the student population, we must demand an end to this type of harassment, and uphold the standards of Community Day.

Everywoman's Center to expand library

The Everywoman's Center, located in Wilder Hall at the University of Massachusetts, is seeking to expand its library which includes works of fiction, nonfiction and poetry. All materials, including resource files, magazines and recent periodicals, are available for loan to the public.

Those who are interested in donating materials to the library should contact the center at 545-0883 between 9 a.m. and 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday and between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Fridays.

Associate Dean to leave UM for U of N

Associate Dean of Students Dr. O.C. Bobby Daniels will be leaving the University of Massachusetts this fall to take on the position of dean of student services at the University of Nevada at Las Vegas.

According to a report by the Associated Press, Daniels, who will receive a $41,500 annual salary, was chosen by a 12-member search committee from a field of 200 applicants.

Daniels has been at UMass since 1972, when he was the director of the Office of Community Development and Human Relations. He became associate dean of students in 1974 and served as acting director of student activities from 1979 to 1980.

Daniels said he was not sure exactly when he would leave UMass, but it would be prior to September 1, when he is scheduled to begin his new job.

Graduates urged to wear green ribbons

The Anti-Racism Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) yesterday encouraged members of the graduating class of 1981 to wear green ribbons during commencement, to remember the slain black children of Atlanta, and to protest racism in this country.

The green ribbons, SCERA said, will be available on the Campus Center concourse all this week and at the SCERA office in room 422 of the Student Union building.

UMass police report stolen bicycles

A bicycle valued at $500 was reported stolen from in front of the Student Union Building at 9:53 p.m. Monday, University of Massachusetts police reported yesterday.

In another incident, a pocketbook and its contents valued at $181 was reported stolen from an unlocked room in Van Meter residence hall in the Central Residential Area. The incident was reported at 7:25 p.m. Monday, police said.

Police also said a bicycle valued at $90 was reported stolen from Pierpont residence hall in the Southwest Residential Area at 12:51 p.m. yesterday, police said.

Amherst police report assault and battery

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Staff

A resident of Southwood Apartments in Amherst was arrested there Monday on a warrant issued by the Hampshire District Court charging him with assault and battery, police said. Tom Phan, 26, was accused by his wife of assault and battery and will be arraigned this morning at Hampshire District Court, police said.

An attempted armed robbery was reported late last night by a 38 year-old Amherst resident who was threatened while loading groceries into her car in front of Price Chopper supermarket on University Drive in Amherst. Police said she reported that she was approached by a white male in his late twenties, who pointed a handgun at ther and demanded her handbag. Police said he reportedly ran in the direction of University Drive when she fled into Price Chopper. Police said there was at least one witness of the incident.

Property valued at $550 was taken in a break-in at Presidential Apartments on May 15 and was found yesterday covered by a sheet on the west side of the building, police said. Among the items recovered were a turntable, receiver, two speakers, and two bottles of wine, police said.

A vehicle was reported vandalized in sorority and fraternity park Monday afternoon, police said. A 1975 AMC received damages including a smashed windshield, right passenger window, and rear view mirror, a tire deflated, wipers bent, and license plate missing, police said.

A theft of a Smith Corona typewriter valued at $300, and a Sony radio valued at $25 was reported stolen yesterday from a North Pleasant Street apartment. Police said the theft occurred on Saturday, and there were no signs of forced entry.

Photography competition winners named

The winners of the second annual Student Competition for Photographic Art, conducted by the Student Union Gallery, were announced yesterday.

The first prize winner, for a photo entitled "Blue Window," was Michael Seppala. Susan Wong, with "White Chapel," and Bradley Marks, who submitted a picture entitled "Woman Walking," tied for second. Stephen Count finished third with his photograph entitled "Spinning Wheel."

Honorable mention awards were given to Michael Seppalla, for two additional photos, and Allison Marks and Diane Pleines.

The winning photographs will be on display through the fall semester in the music library and reading room located on the Campus Center concourse.

Community Day assessed

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts "Community Day" has been over for three days now, but UMass students are still debating over the relative success or failure of "The Spring Concert." Some administrators and students are wondering why, out of a possible attendance of over 25,000, only 6,500 showed up.

According to David Sibel, disc jockey at radio station "WZZZ" in Southwest, "I didn't go because I wasn't too impressed with the musicians: Bonnie Raitt was here last year, and NRBQ plays here all the time. I also didn't feel like going down there and having my fun restricted by people who try to force their opinions of what a rock concert should be like upon others. "Laid back" and "mellow" is what they wanted, and "laid back" and "mellow" is what they got. This is not what a rock and roll concert should be like. Another student, chemistry major, David "the Cube" Dolny said, "I thought that it was a nicely run event but frankly the music sucked."

True, not all UMass students complained about or avoided the concert for although many expressed irritation over the tight security measures, many did take the opportunity to bask in the fine sunshine and listen to the music. It was obvious to anyone in attendance that the audience was really getting into the show once John Hall and Bonnie Raitt started into their heavier numbers and the crowd pushed its way up to the front for a better view.

Nevertheless when The Alumni Stadium is only operating at one quarter of its capacity then something must definately be wrong. Whether the security limitations on the types of people and things that were allowed at the concert proved too discouraging for the body of the UMass population, or else relatively high price ($11) for relatively low priced ($45,000) talent dissuaded too many outsiders from showing up cannot be determined that easily. But something must surely be wrong when attendance is so low for such a beautiful day. UMass "Community Day" should be exactly that; something for the whole UMass community to enjoy, not a function for a select minority. Hopefully next year's concert will be designed for more than 25 percent of the student population.

UMass dancers present final show of season

By LISA A. LANGONE
Collegian Staff

The final dance concert of the semester with the University Danceers and dance majors was an exhibit of choreographic inventions that revealed a great deal of originality and talent.

The first composition, "Dance to Dance," was choreographed by Marilyn V. Patton and done to a fine choice of music by J.S. Bach. This opening piece introduced a spring-like appeal and vibrancy that flavored the majority of the concert. It was a rushing dance sequence with smiling dancers passing happily by one another in long strided leaps.

The second piece, "Eternal Fate," choreographed by Andrew Markham, a graduating University Dancer, had an eerie quality about it. It began with three women laying down with their backs on the floor. Suddenly in consecutive movement, they slowly raised their torsos to the ceiling. It was as haunting as watching someone rise to life from the dead. Contractions were consistently incorporated into the piece to create a distinct tension in the flow of energy. It was an exceptionally interesting and enjoyable composition because of its mystical richness.

Another piece choreographed by a graduating University Dancer, Karen Scanlon, was "Beyond the Night." The idea of imposing two separate realities onto dance steps resulting in a highly entertaining dance; the romantic love, entrapped by the corruption of depthless love that exists "beyond the night." The piece was dramatically effective and well performed.

A dazzling, lively piece set to jazzy-bluesy music by Morton Gould was "Soir Bleu," choreographed by Susan Carlin. The dancers swirled and spun with brightness and gaiety in soft pastel colored leotards, with touches of gossamer chiffon.

Following a brief intermission, "Patterns" was presented; a strangely abstract piece choreographed by Gary Schaaf. The piece was a bit unsettling because it lacked the continuity and smoothness that the other pieces had. As the dance became more animated, the complexity of it decreased. The movements developed an unstructured rigidness, the tension gradually became static as the piece unravelled.

Proceeding "Patterns" was "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor," the well-known large composition choreographed by the late Doris Humphrey in 1938. It was reconstructed from the Labanotated score, (a method of producing a script that records the movements and dynamics of a piece, used primarily to preserve the works of masters in dance). With the dramatic power of Bach's music and Humphrey's exquisit choreography, the piece was

HILLS NO HOSTAGES

Best of luck to all the Urban Parkers and the Gang of Nine who did once or will continue to dabble in ignominious obscurity in a studio of florescent joy. - E.R.S.

IT IS TO LAUGH

If I've learned anything in the last five years, the most basic and lasting lesson has been how to laugh. From the meer ribtickler to the most boisterous belly-buster, the levels of hysterics have been many, the occasions even more so. What I will bring away with me are the people. The substance of memories would be meaningless to me if not for the people - friends and non-friends alike - that were involved in however nebulous a way. At the risk of sounding too sentimental, I will leave this "place" feeling both sorrow and joy. When the pangs of loss have subsided, I will stretch out the memories and enjoy them once again. And yes, I will laugh! - E.R. Sasahara magnificent. It is possessed by a religiousness and spirituality, and it carried the impact for a dynamic finale. It could have been even more effective as the closing piece.

★ Dancers

"Odd Permutation," choreographed by the talented Donna Castleberry, also a graduating University Dancer, was just as extraordinary as when I saw it performed earlier in the semester.

The only solo piece of the evening was "Summertime," choreographed and danced by Susan Carlin. It was done to an interesting version of the Gershwin tune "Summertime" sung by Janis Joplin. The piece seemed to be a series of emotional outbursts done with movement. Many of the movements consisted of sharp and powerful thrusts of the body. When the dancer kneeled with her head down and her hands clapsed together, she seemed to be pleading for something. A movement would be sustained so dynamically and with so much feeling, that I could imagine the sound of someone crying out.

The finale, "Visions," choreographed by Richard Jones, revealed the grandeur of rhythm. The dancers wore smoky pastel colored costumes, which enhanced the light, fresh tone of the piece. Each individual movement responded spontaneiously to the one before it. Whether the movements were performed on the ground, in the air, or simply standing in place, the motion was constant and flowing. William Soleau, a guest performer and former University Dancer, contributed strongly to the high-spiritedness of the piece. Karen Scanlon and Donna Castleberry should also be commended for their brilliant performances. The piece was precisely what it claimed to be; vision after vision after vision.

WILL YOU LOOK AT THAT SUNRISE! WHAT A DAY FOR BIRDING! I'M SO GLAD YOU CAME SWEETIE!
WELL, NOW THAT I'M UP I MUST SAY, I'M LOOKING FORWARD TO OUR LITTLE EXCURSION.
WELL I DON'T THINK YOU'LL REGRET IT. LOVED ONE THE REWARDS OF BIRDING ARE CONSIDERABLE INDEED!
WITH A LITTLE PATIENCE AND A GOOD PAIR OF EYES, ANYBODY CAN FIND DELIGHTS IN THE NATURAL WORLD WHICH BOTH THRILL AND ASTOUND
OF COURSE, PART OF IT'S KNOWING WHERE TO SET UP.

SO, DID YOU ENJOY THAT FASCINATING SPEECH BY THE PRESIDENT OF CHICOPEE COMMUNITY COLLEGE?
YES! ESPECIALLY THE PART WHEN HE SAID "AS YOU, THE LEADERS OF TOMORROW SET A COURSE FOR THE FUTURE..."
I HAVEN'T HEARD ANYTHING THAT HOKEY SINCE "HIGH FLIGHT!"
WELL, HERE WE GO! NEW ROADS! NEW BEGINNINGS! TURN LEFT FOR THE FUTURE

Gorillas at Virginia

Blue Wall to get results

The bus rolled out of the Boyden parking lot at about 6:30 a.m. yesterday morning. As it was turning onto Interstate-91, two men stood with signs that read "We'll see ya in Princeton," "Do it up!" and "Garber's Gorillas — all the way — #1." Someone was up to see them off.

No one should have been up to see them off.

No one (Gorillas included) should have been up.

The blame could lie in a number of places but the fact remains that today, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team plays at the University of Virginia, a game that should have been played in front of the New England fans who have been saluted by the Gorillas after more than one game.

Fourth-seeded Mass takes on UVA (seeded fifth) on Virginia's home astroturf, today at 3:30. If they win, they take on the winner of the Johns Hopkins (first seed) — Maryland (eighth seed) game. If Maryland wins, they will travel up to Springfield College to battle the Gorillas. The second round is scheduled for Saturday, with the finals scheduled for the following Saturday at Princeton College.

Immediately following the game, the Blue Wall will be notified as to the outcome.

The Gorillas arrive back at UMass tonight between 12:30 and 1 a.m.

After arriving in Charlottesville yesterday, the Gorillas had their first practice on astroturf.

All American midfielder Peter Schmitz, who played against Dartmouth for the first time since mid-season, is expected to start today against Virginia.

Fear and golfing at UMass

You cannot go on a good golfing trip in Amherst without the proper preparation.

First you need the appropriate attire, such as a decent B.A. lid, dirty dungarees and a B.A. jacket of any type, dungaree jacket, barracuda or hooded sweatshirt would do. Workboots or high canvas or leather Cons are required also.

The next step is determining who will accompany you on your excursion. The best group to golf with is a foursome, provided everyone has about 20 bucks on them. The minimum group should contain at least three players.

The final step before setting out on the trip is to set the number of holes for the course and the par at each hole.

Goggles Pizano

Here is the story of a recent golfing trip taken by myself, my attorney, who doubles as a 150 pound, underfed Irish kid and of course, Rick Dancin. The easiest way to relate the tale is on a hole by hole basis, with a critique of each hole.

HOLE ONE, SPASTICALLY SAM'S, PAR 3— Typical townie bar complete with regulars (never more than four at a time), shitty pool table and limited booze rack...played pool anyway with the warped pool sticks...Celtics were on the tube, but the golfers were more interested in tipping a few...SCORE -4 (Bogey is due to the fact that 12-ounce Budweisers only cost 70 cents because of the absurdly-timed happy hour.)

HOLE TWO, MARLEY'S, PAR 2- Not a bad hole...redeeming factor is that Old Swill was on tap for $2.50 a pitcher...Goggles and attorney stay at the bar watching the Celtics kill Houston while Rick plays Defenders...Julius Erving is on "Rebound" and they mention that he was from UMass...place is hopping for a Saturday afternoon...SCORE- 3

HOLE THREE, THE PUBE, PAR 2- (Prior to entrance, the attorney chased Dusty for about ten minutes and felt like blowing lunch afterward)...the place retains its frat-ernal atmosphere even when the place is empty and not Greeked out...it also smells like the Boyden locker room for some odd reason...No tip for the bartender, this place is bush...SCORE- 2

HOLE FOUR, BARSALOONEY'S, PAR 3- Back to the Old Swill drafts as Rick and Goggles are starting to run low on green (at a half a buck a pop, you can't go wrong)...pool table is wicked small but it's OK to play on...it was kind of tough making it here because the sun was blinding outside, nice day to be indoors drinking...SCORE- 3

HOLE FIVE, TIME OFF, PAR 3- Another empty bar (but what can you expect on a Saturday afternoon...free popcorn tastes like ten pounds of salt were dropped on it...starting to get a bit out of hand as Rick and Goggles take turns biting chunks out of the wooden popcorn bowl...SCORE- 2 (Birdie due to warm Bud bottles, it's tough to drink warm beers after you've had a few.)

HOLE SIX, CHUMLEY'S, PAR 2- It's around 6:30 p.m. (the trip started at 3 p.m.) and this place is far from empty...exaj on the difference between the three golfers and the customers here. The diners are dressed up and probably have quite a few bucks in their pockets while the golfers are wearing their scummy golfing attire and are almost broke...highlight is Rick Dancin playing his rendition of "Stifflahs in Paradise" on the piano in the bar...the patrons hardly even notice...SCORE- 2 (and real expensive, 95 cents for a ten-ounce glass)

(Between holes, Goggles starts to snap. Chases a man to his car, jumps up on the car and growls at him. Man is scared and asks Goggles to get off the car, Goggles laughs, jumps down and walks away.

The three golfers cut across the Amherst Common on their way to the eighth hole, the Last Jerk. On their way, they encounter a couple who are both apparently having a good time. Rick Dancin questions them as to what drugs they've taken and they give him a detailed description of what they took to get so blown away.)

HOLE EIGHT, LAST JERK, PAR 1- (Before entrance, all golfers ingested amphetamines to prolong the game.) Easy to be intimidated in here, but of course, golfers are not...the attorney orders Harp lagers, but the golfers agree that these would probably be too expensive, especially in here where money is of no consequence to the patrons. Miller Lites will do fine...Rick Dancin gets out of hand, bangs table and glass falls to the floor and breaks..."You are in a gentleman's public bar and if you do not want to act like gentlemen, you can leave."...The golfers don't want to act like gentlemen, so they leave, without paying of course...SCORE- 1

HOLE NINE, THE DRUNK, PAR (Infinite, since this is the last hole)— A dive with class...numerous different types of beers and two pool tables, both shitty of course...the attorney decides to wager some money on a pool game and zip-perheadedly loses a fin to a poolshark (get it?)...the winner and his two companions have a joint and are passing it around, but don't offer any to the golfers who don't care anyway since they're already stiff...SCORE- (Can't really remember, but at least five since no one had enough money to buy more than that by now anyway).

FINAL SCORE- 20-24 PAR FOR COURSE- 20-24

A fond farewell

This one's for the seniors, the men and women who, along with me, will be stretching, yawning and feeling a little nervous at graduation ceremonies a week from Saturday.

For this is a goodbye column, the sportswriter's chance to note some of the memories of the last four years. These memories may mean little or nothing to underclassmen, but these memories are part of what has made me a UMass Minuteman fan for life.

To start off, the University of Massachusetts is a step away from being a recognized, national athletic powerhouse. More teams were represented in national tournaments in the last four years than any other four-year period in the school's history.

Mike Estrada

We have consistent, national contenders in team sports such as field hockey, football, women's soccer, men's and women's lacrosse, and softball. Not to mention individual athletic merits in track, wrestling, tennis, bowling, and gymnastics.

If you are any kind of a sports fan, you're at the right school baby.

But the agonizing thing is, not every team gets the recognition or fan support it deserves. The field hockey team comes to mind. For two straight years, Pam Hixon's stickers finished fourth nationally, and the best crowd I ever saw at NOPE was about 100 people, most relatives and friends of the players.

And don't forget the baseball team, because most people have. Dick Bergquist, one of New England's premier teachers of the game, has to be a frustrated man when the location of Earl Lorden Field comes to mind. It is situated on the other side of the cowbarns near the entrance to the Physical Plant.

This year he tried something new to attract fans to the field the day of the game. Day-glow signs reading "baseball today" were placed at major intersections around campus. There was even a prize give away at Saturday doubleheaders. But for the most part UMass baseball, this year like other years I have been here, has had to take a back seat to the popularity of Garber's Gorillas. The best crowd at Lorden Field this season was about 100 to see a team that won 22 games.

It's probably best to end this column with a string of memories, a collection of some of the best of sport I have encountered at UMass;

There was nothing more exciting than seeing the Minutemen football team trounce Nevada-Reno on television in the NCAA division I-AA playoffs two seasons ago...and nothing as frustrating as watching the Boston Red Sox lose the 1978 playoff game against the Yankees...no noise as deafening as when the basketball team dumped Pittsburgh at the Cage in 1979...no hush as evident as when Holy Cross scored a touchdown with four seconds left on the clock to beat UMass in Alumni Stadium in 1980...I was there when Judy Strong, the UMass and Olympic team member field hockey star, scored her first collegiate goal...I was there when Eldridge and Derek Claiborne scored their 1000th points respectively, signaling the end of the last UMass basketball dynasty. I say last because it could happen again.

I'll never forget...place kicker Sandro Vitiello hitting field goals with each foot in a single game in 1980...Mark Haymore being ejected from the game after his third technical for hanging on the rim after his patented dunks...the tension of the flick-off at Princeton, N.J. when UMass lost to Penn State in the field hockey nationals in 1979...the lacrosse team beating Cornell for the first time in history last month...the disappointment of UMass football losing the national title game against Florida A&M...and beyond that, I'll never forget that there is something wrong if UMass doesn't win the Pioneer Bowl in 1981.

And it just wouldn't be right if a tribute wasn't paid to the best athelete I ever saw play at UMass, a woman named Sue Peters, who was in a league by herself on the basketball court and on the softball field. She never received the popular recognition she deserved.

Thank you Greg, Rick, John, Bill, Kevin, Bob, Ross, Dave and of course "Stormin" Norman for all the intramural memories and good times. You guys made it all worthwhile.

Take it light, UMass.

Gazelles finish season sixth

By RANDI J. MARCUS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team finished sixth in the nation at the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women National Lacrosse tournament at Pennsylvania State University last weekend.

The Gazelles placed exactly where they were seeded in both the regionals where they were seeded third and the Nationals as they were seeded sixth of eight participating teams.

UMass' first game of the Nationals was against third seeded Temple University. The Gazelles were behind 5-1 at the half, but came to life in the second half and tied the score.

At the end of regulation time the score was 6-6. The game went into a six-minute overtime, not sudden death, and Temple pulled ahead for an 8-6 win.

UMass was placed into the consolation bracket where they played the University of Rhode Island and beat them 8-7, the same score of their regular season meeting.

The scoring in the URI game was a team effort as six players contributed including three goals by Margie Anderson, two from Whitney Thayer, and one goal each by Sue Caples, Lynn Herbert, Laurie Vincello, and an assist by Tish Stevens.

In the consolation finals UMass faced first seeded Penn. State, who was upset in the first round by the University of Maryland who went on to win the finals. UMass lost 14-8.

"Considering we have lots of inexperienced and young kids, I feel we did a good job," coach Pam Hixon said. "In an eight team tournament the strength is really in the top few teams and I'm glad we finished in our seeding."

Senior Judy Strong, who plays defense for the Gazelles, was chosen for the All-Star 1981 team. "This is a real credit to Judy," Hixon said, "because unlike most of the other all-stars chosen, Judy didn't play lacrosse before entering college."

ARCHITECTURE

Tradition and Innovation in the Pioneer Valley

The oldest building in Amherst, Stockbridge House (right), was built in 1728. Now housing the University of Massachusetts Faculty Club, it is a fine example of a New England center chimney "saltbox" (so-called because of its similarity in shape to a colonial salt box.)

This solar-heated home in Sunderland (left) is one of the newest buildings in the valley. Nonetheless, the traditional saltbox shape is well suited to its passive solar design, as the long sloping roof is made of glass, and faces south.

As the author of seven authoritative pattern books, including The Country Builder's Assistant — the first builder's guide published in the United States — Asher Benjamin (right) greatly influenced both the Federal and Greek Revival periods in American architecture. His legacy in the Pioneer Valley includes the Greenfield Public Library (above) which he designed as a private residence in the late 18th century.

These before and after photos of two gambrel-roofed Georgian Colonial homes maintained by Historic Deerfield, Inc. say more for the importance of preservation than any volume of words could.

Once a splendid merchant's home in Springfield, the Dwight-Barnard House (above) had become a tenement by 1950. Although it was the oldest building in the city, the two-century old structure was slated for demolition. Mr. and Mrs. Henry N. Flynt had the vision to carefully dismantle the building and move it to Deerfield, where it has been exuberantly restored, and is now one of the most popular house-museums in the town. Note in both photos the decorative brickwork of the chimney, and the intriguing pediments over the first floor windows and dormers.

The home of Jonathan Ashley, who as preacher was the most important man in Deerfield, this c.1730 house (above) was moved from its foundation, and used for 75 years as a tobacco barn (the top photo was taken around 1910). Returned to its imposing original site on Deerfield's main street, and its fine paneled interiors restored and furnished with antiques, this grand home, saved from decay, is now open to the public.

Deerfield remembers history

By SUSAN RING

Escape from aluminum siding, from the cardboard walls of Amherst apartments and the cinderblock of Southwest. Historic Deerfield offers a haven for the aesthetically and historically inclined.

The Colonial and 19th century architectural styles of the entire Connecticut Valley are captured on this mile long street, located a mere 15 minutes from Amherst. Here lies a town that withstood two Indian massacres in its frontier years (1675 and 1704) and retains an unmatched dedication to remembering history.

Renowned architect Asher Benjamin's work is represented by the original Deerfield Academy, now the Memorial Hall Museum, which he designed and built in 1798. Several of the dozen house museums maintained by Historic Deerfield, a tax-exempt, non profit educational organization, reflect a strong Benjamin influence. A recently acquired portrait of the architect, thought to be painted by 19th century Deerfield native Chester Harding, now hangs across from a Benjaminesque spiral staircase in the Asa Stebbins House (1799/1810).

Built by the wealthiest landowner in Franklin County, the Stebbins House was the first constructed of brick in Deerfield. Unlike the UMass library, the house was made to last. The bricks of the front of the house were laid in the Flemish Bond style, those of the back in American Bond. Nearly 200 years later, the bricks remain steadfast and stylish, posing no threat to those who pass by.

Another long standing home, not open to the public but still visible from the road, is the Williams House. Built in 1750, the house displays a doorway with a broken scroll pediment, trademark of craftsmen in the Valley during the Colonial period. It also stands as a reminder of the dramatic role played by the Williams family in the history of Deerfield.

Reverend John Williams, Deerfield's first minister, was captured by Pocumtuck Indians on February 29, 1704. He watched two of his children die by the tomahawk that night and lost his wife soon after. Held captive near Montreal for two years, Williams arrived in Boston on November 21, 1706. Less than two weeks later the faithful called him back to Deerfield. A heart rending account of Williams' traumatic experiences exists in his book, The Redeemed Captive, Returning to Zion.

The character of these Yankee settlers reflected a strong sense of community and a faith in their God that caused them to rebuild twice. The town eventually achieved agricultural prosperity, and Williams' descendants stayed on to continue the preservation of history that he began with a personal library of 190 volumes including The Redeemed Captive and four printed sermons.

Historic Deerfield remains dedicated to the promotion of the understanding and appreciation of the area's historical and cultural past. The Pocumtuck Valley Memorial Association and Henry N. Flynt libraries are housed in the same building on Memorial Street in Old Deerfield and are open to all qualified researchers, including undergraduates and amateurs. Educational programs are set up to meet the individual needs of the many student groups that take advantage of Old Deerfield's unique historical, architectual and cultural treasures.

Among the records held in the Deerfield libraries are many gifts of information from the Williams family. A W.P.A. transcript of the diary of John's son Reverend Stephen Williams of Longmeadow (1715-1782) leaves us with a graphic description of life at that time.

Medical instruments belonging to a physician in the Williams family, including leech containers and other devices used for "bleeding" patients, are displayed in the Dwight-Barnard House (c1725). Much of the Boston and Connecticut Valley furniture in the house also comes from the Williams family. Originally the home of a Springfield merchant, the house had become a tenement by 1950 when it was dismantled and moved to Deerfield.

The Colonial and 19th century styles of the entire Connecticut Valley are represented on this one mile long street.

Historic Deerfield has escaped the commercialization that other historic sites have fallen prey to. It remains a mile-long stretch of homes. It's a community—kids riding bikes up and down the street, a lively soccer game in the works in a field across from the Academy and people grooming their lawns. If it is unspoken there is nonetheless a respect for the past in this town.

Calm prevails. The music coming from the dorm across from the graveyard where Mr. and Mrs. John Williams are buried is soft. The Brooks Brothers-clad students speak in hushed tones as they walk to class. Visit for a day, or check in to the cozy confines of the Deerfield Inn and stay the week, but do visit.

Deerfield's Doorways

The warmth and security that make a house a home are implicit in an inviting doorway. Often the only decorative external element of Colonial houses, doorways were the focus of builders' creative energies. The doorways of the Connecticut River Valley (which is the Pioneer Valley in Massachusetts) and especially those of Deerfield (including the many enticing homes that are not maintained by Historic Deerfield, Inc.) have long been recognized as some of the finest.

The old Indian Door (far left) is kept in the Memorial Hall Museum, and is the only extant 17th century door at Deerfield. The diagonal patterns created with hand-wrought nails are the only embellishment. Though the door was saved for historical reasons (the hole was gouged by Indians during the violent Deerfield massacre of 1704), it reminds us of the almost medieval qualities of America's first architecture.

The magnificent doorway to Rev. John Williams' homestead (left) dates from the early 18th century, and has a choice original broken-scroll pediment. Considered the classic Connecticut Valley style, modern interpretations of the broken-scroll Pediment can be seen on the Jones Library in Amherst, and Skinner Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

The tastefully restrained paneling, semi-circular light, and Gibbsian rustication to the surrounding brickwork of this door (right) from the Asa Stebbins house (1810) show the influence of Asher Benjamin.

This doorway (far right) to a private residence in Deerfield has the delicacy characteristic of the Federal style. The side lights, and half-elliptical transom light attest to the increased availability of glass in the 19th century.

A Valley Scrapbook

A landmark in North Amherst for a century and a half, this wonderful brick home was built by Joseph Cowles, a prosperous farmer, in 1821. The vernacular, "incorrect" elements of Cowles' house give it its considerable charm. It turns the corner in such a way that from the front the house has a gable at one end and a hipped roof at the other. At some point, the red bricks were painted yellow, and as the elements have worn away this color, the house has developed a unique, rich hue.

The barn was built around 1875, and as the photo of the cupola shows, display remarkable workmanship.

Louise Anderson, who lives in the Cowles house today, has lived there all her life.

I See Orange

In the late 1950's work was being completed on Chapin Hall, the last of many Neo-Classical buildings designed for Amherst College by the venerable architectural firm of McKim, Mead, and White. The site and design of the building were not entirely popular, however, and it was the opinion of some that Chapin Hall was going to look more like a Howard Johnson restaurant than the Jeffersonian temple of learning it had been conceived as. To emphasize their belief that this building might be more suited to the distribution of ice cream and fried fish, a gang of aesthetic vigilantes made nightly raids to the unfinished building with orange paint, which they liberally applied to it cupola and roof.

Though the student perpetrators of this action were undoubtedly perceived as vandals, they were nonetheless trying to make a statement. All vandals are arguably making statements, but these pranksters (at least one of whom was a well-known architect) had a genuine concern for quality in their environment and an understanding of the importance of beauty in our man-made surroundings.

In a place as naturally beautiful as the Pioneer Valley, it is ludicrous for man to aspire to outdo the dramatic silhouette of Mount Norwottuck or the lush foliage fertilized by the Connecticut River.

It is important, however, that our buildings be more than merely functional. Architecture is the art which attempts to merge necessity with creativity. The best buildings, through the wise use of building materials, adherence to, or abhorrence of the styles of the day, and consciousness of function, natural setting, and neighboring buildings, are more than just "pretty to look at".

Fine architecture enhances life. As John Ruskin wrote, successful architecture contributes to one's "mental health, power and pleasure." Ruskin wrote mostly about celebrated cathedrals and palaces, but certainly the simplest cottage, where attention has been shown to proportion and detail, can be inspiring.

There are, of course, numerous styles in an area as eclectic as the Pioneer Valley, and for some it can be rewarding to learn the names, history, and philosophy of these styles. Many excellent books and courses exist which will teach one these things.

But architecture isn't in a textbook or a museum, it is the buildings one experiences everyday. Obviously there are unappealing buildings, poorly built or designed, which may well deserve to be painted orange. Our corner of the world, though, offers enough satisfying architecture, from modest to magnificent, for a lifetime of enjoyment. Look, experience, and enjoy.

—RH

Each of the five major colleges in the Pioneer Valley has architecture that is subtly characteristic of its personality. The buildings of the University of Massachusetts are almost as diverse as the people in its 30,000 person community. The buildings of Amherst and Smith colleges are inevitably proper, but not always interesting. Hampshire College has free-form, somewhat experimental architecture, and many of the buildings at Mount Holyoke College (below) have a somber, gothic protective feeling to them.

The reliance on concrete as a building material at the University of Massachusetts is certainly disturbing. It can, however, be used to advantage. The playful monumentality of the Fine Arts Center by Kevin Roche and John Dinkeloo is evidence of this, as is Marcel Breuer's bold Campus Center (right). Breuer first came to international prominence in the 1920's with his highly original tubular steel furniture, such as the Wassily Chair (left).

The Italianate style proved rather popular for 19th century valley builders. It is noticeable in this cupola (top), which was added onto Emily Dickinson's house in 1855, and in "The Evergreens" (middle) next door. Legend has it that Emily's brother Austin was planning to move his law practice to Chicago until the elder Mr. Dickinson built him this irresistable Italianate Villa as a wedding gift in 1856.

In the shadow of Mount Sugarloaf on Sunderland's maple-lined Main Street, this home (bottom), built by Albert Hobart in 1850, shows that, even at its simplest, the Italianate style can be quite pleasing indeed. Note the flat roof with broadly overhanging eaves, supported by brackets, and the well-proportioned porch.

Solar Architecture

Shedding Some Light

Author and builder employs the sun

By LYNN. M. RZESZUT

Brick House Publishing Co. has just published Solar Retrofit—Adding Solar to your Home, by Amherst resident Dan Reif. The book presents his designs for four solar retrofit systems (designed to augment existing houses), all clearly diagramed and explained in a readable step-by-step fashion.

Possessing a degree in architecture and a Master's degree in Urban Studies, Reif has had practical experiences in the area of design, in particular, school designs for the city of New York, a playground, or "play-sculpture" for a private school in that same city, and teaching experience with Queens College and the Manhattan Vocational Technical High School in Spanish Harlem. It was while Reif was working as a consultant for design at the Belchertown State School that he first became interested in solar design.

This interest led to his participation in Project SUEDE, (Solar Utilization Economic Development and Employment), and within eight months, Reif and a crew of CETA workers had retrofitted thirty houses with solar systems. Reif is currently self-employed, 'like a lot of people in solar energy.'

When I asked him about the feasibility of solar energy as an alternative means of meeting this country's energy needs, he replied that, "active solar energy is not particularly promising. People hear that solar energy is a roof collector, and they've heard that roof collectors aren't that good, so they say solar energy isn't that good. The reason why passive solar energy is not mass produced is because passive solar is not a project; it's a methodology. It's like trying to get a patent on New England Architecture. If you could patent a south-facing window, then it would be functional and have a fabulous return, and solar power would be on every house, like Coca-Cola is in every refrigerator. But as long as you can't put a financial wedge in the market of south-facing windows, passive solar won't be promoted and will be limited to those people who are mavericks: used to learning and doing on their own."

Reif continued by saying that, "retrofitting is not for everyone. Houses can run from ideal to houses in a pine forest. Even then, if you wanted solar energy you could cut down the pine trees. Some houses are very adaptable from the view of orientation and shading and some would involve cutting one or two trees. Some would involve knocking down the building next door, which is obviously more extreme. You just have to draw the line on economics."

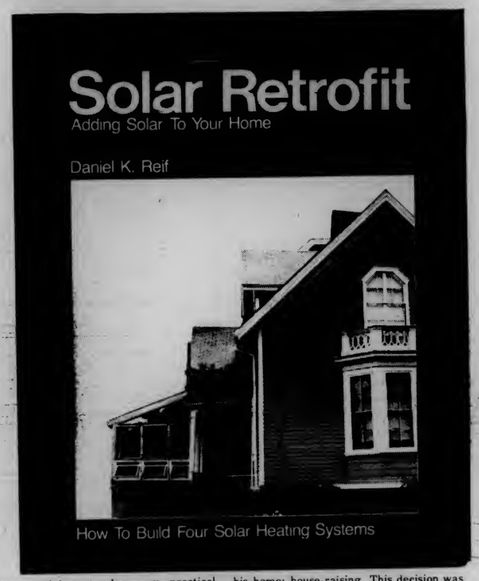
Payback is indeed the question. For many houses, due to large trees or mountains, or that extreme building, the vital south face may have partial shading. Understandably this leads to the problem of predicting performance. When you pay the same amount for a solar retrofit of your home as the guy down the street, but your system is 20 percent less efficient, is the payback sufficient to justify the expense of the retrofit?

Reif's reply was, "What's the payback of a new car? To me it's obvious that any building, whether it's an addition, a new room, a renovation or a new house should incorporate passive solar system (s). If it doesn't, it's outdated before anyone even moves in. Any structure you build is destined to last quite a number of years; houses in New England have been around 100 years. You build a house to last a long time, and what's the fuel situation going to be like in five years? Or twenty years?"

As we sat basking in the warmth of the sun pouring through the living room windows in the house that Dan built, I asked Dan what he felt about the current zoning laws, and whether he felt that these laws reflected a trend toward solar energy. Reif agreed that the laws were changing to some extent, but went on to display an amount of distrust in the nature of lawmaking. "Anytime you incorporate politics, you incorporate bureaucracy, and invariably this biases designs in certain ways. It immediately stifles innovations, creativity; the government says that you can get a 40 percent payback on an active solar hot water heater, but you can't get any tax credit on a south-facing window, which has, in most cases, a better payback. This is because of political reasons and a lack of knowledge. When I designed my own house, I knew I wanted a solar house, but the more active solar I incorporated, which is more expensive, the more rebate I would get from the federal government, which makes it cheaper, so it's not only like fighting to save energy, but finding sneaky ways to incorporate fans and active solar into my house so that more and more of my system would qualify for government tax credits. That's one of the big problems with any kind of codes. There are benefits that can be derived, but they (the codes), have to be very well written and incorporate a degree of flexibility.

What Reif's argument seemed to boil down to was striking in its very Yankee undertones: practicality.

"Bankers, real estate agents, the whole industry claims to be very practical, functional; that very conservative outlook. They claim to be the realists, but how can they be realists if they continue to build east or north or west, using minimal insulation and closing up the walls so that it takes a major renovation to insulate the walls, where for the same amount of money you could build a house that uses the sun for heat and has half the cooling."



"As much as passive solar has been delayed for a variety of reasons, pressure is building up. Energy is the most inflationary part of the (financial) cycle. When the price of food goes up 50 percent, this is a reflection of the cost of energy which went into the food; the fertilizers, the transportation, the refrigeration."

Reif pointed out, however, that this kind of inflationary spiral can eventually lead to the possibility of New England competition against California farmers. By utilizing a solar greenhouse (Reif has a beautiful example incorporated into the basement of his home), the average New Englander will probably be able to beat California prices. Reif added, with a grin, "And that's starting to happen."

I asked Reif about his book Solar Retrofit—Adding Solar to your Home, an easily read book that offers a how-to approach for four different passive solar systems. Reif replied that he saw his role as both an educator and an advocate for others in the business. He feels that passive solar is not a neutral issue. Most people that have these systems are very, very happy with them. "Perhaps it is the type of people who've installed them so far. Passive solar energy does work, it's extremely cost effective, generally delightful whether it's direct gain or whether it's a big collector, and it gives you a mental energy independence."

One of the really interesting aspects of the book is that it is written for the laymen. Techniques are explained in understandable terms and technical jargon is at a minimum. Reif feels that this is necessary to demonstrate to people that they, too, can do it themselves. Lifestyles must become more self-sufficient, Reif feels, because there is no other choice.

In the spirit of self-sufficiency, Reif resurrected an old custom in the building of his home: house-raising. This decision was not an easy one. "Although I'm involved in building I'm not a full-time carpenter. I'd never done a raising before. I'd researched the subject a little, what little material there is. I designed the plans, sanded down the beams and hired a friend of mine to help me a couple days before the people came for the raising to sand and notch the beams. My good fortune is that a lot of my friends are building contractors and most of them came, so we had about twenty people there working on the house that day, and half of them came with pickup trucks filled with tools. It just went through the morning and a little bit of the afternoon and half-hour for lunch. Almost like clockwork at the end of the half-hour we were humming again, beams flying, and then we were supposed to have a party, but it had been threatening to rain all day, and as we put the last piece into place it started to come down. Everybody scattered, people running for cars and yelling goodbye and rain pounding and that was it. I looked at my house and there it was, all nice and set up."

Reif claims to have gained the courage to go through with the project after having heard of a similar raising done by a friend in Vermont.

Reif emphasized the accessibility of passive solar for everyone. "Solar energy is not technical, at least, not passive solar. Solar energy is something everyone should know about. It's unfortunate that universities don't incorporate solar power into the general education, like in a liberal arts degree. With one course you can understand the basics of solar energy. That's important, because from now on it's going to play an increasingly large part in our lives."

Dan Reif is currently engaged in independent solar retrofitting and solar workshops. He is also busy planning a new book which will explain a new design he has conceived, which he affectionately terms his 'Triple Threat'. This design will be a retrofit incorporating a small solar growing area, a space heat collector, and a water heater.

On The Future

Amherst has active and passive designs

By RON MILLER

With the ever increasing cost of energy, more efficient ways of heating and cooling our homes are being sought. In New England, where 80 percent of the region's energy supply is imported from outside the area, the solar style is emerging with increasing frequency.

"This area is very aware of energy resources," says Barry Moir of the Five College Solar Energy Collective, "how much they pay and where the money goes. All the money is leaving the state, and you don't have to major in economics to know that's bad for the economy."

Moir says the houses of the future will have to be designed with a tight construction built to capture and use natural forces. This means sheltering the home from northerly winds and capturing the sun. This will be done by building homes with more windows on the south side of the house, which gets most of the day's sun, and less glass on the north side, which is the direction winter wind comes from.

The windows, Moir says, should be layered. "The more layers of glass the better because this puts spaces of air in between, which increases insulation by sandwiching air in. Heat always travels in relation to temperature difference of two areas. If there is a large temperature difference a large amount of heat will flow from the hot area to the cold area." The layered glass will keep heat collected during the day from escaping when the sun goes down.

Moir says you don't have to worry about overheating in the summer because of all the windows. The sun comes from a steeper angle in summer (see diagram 1), and "you can shade the windows with a small overhang, which wouldn't affect it (heating) in winter because the sun is coming from a lower angle," Moir says.

There are two kinds of solar systems, passive and active. According to The Whole Earth Catalog "passive operates on energy available in the immediate environment. Energy flows in the system through natural means. The active system imports energy such as electricity to power the fans and pumps which make the system work." In other words, active systems use external mechanical power to move the collective heat.

The Pioneer Valley is a leader in solar construction. According to a recent article in the Valley Advocate (March 18, 1981) in Franklin County there are already 50 passive solar homes, 50 solar greenhouses (which serve to heat adjoining rooms), and over 100 solar hot-water systems. There are, however, two textbook examples of passive and active systems within a five minute walk from the campus of the University of Massachusetts.

The Solar Habitat on Orchard Hill is a research project in alternative energy sources being conducted by the Mechanical Engineering Department at UMass. It is an active system using both wind power and solar collectors to heat the house and supply hot water. The windmill is a major part of the system, supplying 2/3 of the energy, while the solar collectors are responsible for the other 1/3.

The house is very energy efficient, says Professor Duane E. Cromack of the Mechanical Engineering Department. It's well insulated, and the windows are designed to avoid a large heat loss. The system works with the windmill and solar collectors used to heat hot water in a large tank. The water then heats the house through baseboard convectors, Cromack says. Convection is simply the transfer of heat energy from one location to another by the motion of water (or air) which is heated.

Amherst's Solar Woodbox stylishly incorporates passive solar design

The system supplies 70 percent of the heat and hot water with solar and wind power, and it can go for four days without sun or wind. The Solar Habitat has not required any outside funding for the last year and a half, Cromack says. A student lives there free of charge in exchange for maintaining the mechanical equipment. Any additional costs have been taken care of with department funds, Cromack says.

The project has been a success. It was originally designed to prove you can heat with solar and wind combined, and it has done that. Professor Cromack adds that, "there is no question houses have to be designed in the future with solar energy in mind."

Less than five minutes from Butterfield Dormitory in Central is a classic example of passive solar, called The Solar Wood Box. It is located on One Wildwood Lane and owned by Shirley and Hugh Kirley, who designed it themselves. The house basically heats itself (see diagram 2), and took first place in the 1980 National Passive Solar Conference Competition, for its successful combination of technology with architecture.

The house faces south with a wall of windows, but in addition it contains light colored gravel on the ground in front of the windows to reflect still more sunlight. The north side of the house is protected from cold winter winds by a bank of evergreens, which direct the wind over the house. The Kirleys have an electrical back-up system, which they didn't use the entire winter.

"We tried it for a half hour one morning to see if it (electrical back-up system) worked," says Shirley Kirley. Other than that the Kirleys spent $50 for a cord of wood, and kept a temperature of 65 to 70 degrees Fahrenheit all winter. "We put on a short fire when it got really cold," but better than 70 percent of the heating was done by passive solar.

The Kirleys spent around $7500 for solar input, but they will get back about $5000 in tax credits. It will "pay back" (pay for itself) in two-and-a-half years, Kirley says. "The system performed so well, people don't believe us." The Kirleys, however, can not get grant money for solar research, so they can't purchase the necessary monitoring equipment.

Kirley says the house is so well insulated it takes a long time to heat up in the summer. They open the windows, and there is an attic ventilating fan, which draws cool night air over water tubes, cooling the entire house. "It's a pleasant living style," Kirley says.

Kirley feels people are going to have to build with solar simply for economic reasons, and her house with its vertical pine siding and traditional shapes, shows it can be an attractive building style. In the future, as oil gets more and more scarce, solar homes will no longer be a novelty. With all the uncertainty of nuclear power it only makes sense to look into the clean and inexpensive alternative, solar energy.

The summer sun is higher in the sky and shines mostly on the roof, east, and west sides of the house. The addition of a small overhang will shade the windows and keep the house from overheating in the summer. In the winter, with the sun at a lower angle, the majority of the day's rays hit the windows on the south side of the house.

The Solar Woodbox is designed with the majority of its windows faoing south. Light colored gravel in front of the house reflects additional sunlight that would have been lost in the ground. There is a small overhang to shade the windows in the summer, and a bank of pine trees on the north side to direct cold winter winds over the house.

The Classics are back (again)

By SUSAN BARON

In the early part of the 19th century, Greek Revival architecture became extemely popular in America, and was used widely for domestic, civic, and religious buildings. In the early part of the 20th century American architecture experienced the Neo-Classical movement, which was similar, though grander in scale. In the past few years, American architecture has been experiencing a third revival of Classical styles, which some have dubbed the New Classicism.

In tribute, the Smith College Museum of Art is currently featuring "Speaking a New Classicism: American Architecture Now." As the title suggests, the exhibition depicts the rejuvenated use of classical vocabulary and motifs in the architectural design of the 20th century.

Columns, arched doorways, domes, pediments, ornaments, entablatures, cupolas--all are typical of New Classicism. You've probably learned some of these terms in an 8th grade art class, while studying the architecture of way-back-when. If not, you still can't overlook the antique characteristics of the recent designs in this exhibit.

The exhibit includes models, drawings, plans, elevations, photographs, and some full-size artifacts. A few of the designs have been executed, most haven't. Twenty-four famous architects are included.

At first glance, one would think the drawings in the exhibit were 17th and 18th century plans. Greek and Roman monuments are referred to. Georgian, Greek Doric, Classical Renaissance and Baroque styles are represented. Throughout the exhibit, Palladian influence prevails. Yet when one looks closely, modernist elements play a part in all of the designs. This is the fundamental aspect of New Classicism--a modern reinterpretation of the Classical style in architecture.

One of the first drawings seen when entering the exhibit summarizes the significance of and reaction to this recent allusion to ornamentalism and the orders.

Rodolfo Machado and Jorge Silvette would have redesigned the Rhode Island School of Design to resemble the Baroque stairs and plazas of Italy. The plans of the 1979 project hang on the wall at the exhibit, and that's as far as they'll get. Accused of being unbuildable and decorative, the Steps of Providence will never exist. Needless to say, the designers insist that they would have been buildable.

Many architects, like Machado and Silvette, resent the modern, anti-historical, anti-ornamental style of architecture. New Classicism is the result, but it's still a controversial movement. Much of its lavish and decorative ornament isn't readily accepted in our practical and industrialized society.

The New Classicism on display at Smith College is characteristic of a merging, or interaction between modern and classical elements. Each of the 24 featured architects have been influenced by modernist theory. They have managed to preserve the Classical tradition while using abstraction and inversion as tactics to incorporate hints of modern architecture. The architects adapted their own preference to present conditions. There is no authoritative style of New Classicism.

The extent to which modern elements are favored varies. Drawings of Edward Levin's Solar Greek-Revival house are a perfect example of the enmeshment of contemporary and traditional assumptions. Almost ironically, this 1980 design includes columns filled with water as part of the solar energy equipment.

Allan Greenberg's plan for a Connecticut Farm House and Robert Venturi's plan for a Country House are both based on Mount Vernon. Peterson and Littenberg offer a remodelling of Les Halles Quarta (1979). All three designs are at the exhibit in huge prints of about 30x50 inches in size.

Michael Graves has managed to design comtemporary looking homes that include, strangely enough, columns and domed ceilings. In a cubist fashion, he somehow created classical overtones. Sketches of his House in Aspen illustrate this duality.

On the other hand, Philip Johnson's New Playhouse Theatre (1980) is hardly influenced by modern elements. The Smith College Museum of Art portrays architecture as a beautiful art. The designs are impressive even to the untrained eye. The subject of the exhibit is also apparent--the transition from Modernist exclusivism to Classical accent, and sometimes overt imitation.

New Classicism includes the respect for context, nature and symmetry that are in accordance with Classical architecture. Yet at the same time, the complexity and ambiguity of New Classicism conform to modernist theory.

Smith College presents an excellent description of New Classicism by means of well-chosen architects' design. The exhibit will remain at Smith College until July 12. Made possible by a generous grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, "Speaking a New Classicism: American Architecture Now" provides a valuable and enjoyable learning experience.

As Henry Hope Reed, a distinguised critic of architecture, said, "Classicism is not copying the past but adapting its beauty to your present needs."

In 1836, Professor Edward Hitchcock, who was later to become President of Amherst College, erected a small octagonal building to the south of his Greek Revival home on South Pleasant Street in Amherst (above). The octagon's original function was housing Hitchcock's substantial geological collection.

After becoming the college's president, Hitchcock was instrumental in the construction of Amherst College's picturesque Octagon Building (left), which is perched on a knoll overlooking the town, college, and countryside.

University of Massachusetts Professor Paul F. Norton, in his invaluable Amherst: A Guide to its Architecture, states, "The idea of building an octagon undoubtedly came from Hitchcock's knowledge of Greek architecture as found in such volumes as Stuart and Revett's Antiquities of Athens."
